Was the music theme overplayed? Let us look at the record. The entire income to all composers and publishers from all commercial users of musical performing rights in the United States, while important to those concerned, approximates four million dollars. Roughly, this is about the cost of production and exploitation of two copyrighted motion pictures such as "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Midsummer Night's Dream." Leaving aside the newspaper, periodical, book and music publication industries, as well as legitimate stage play production, and the manufacture and distribution of performing recordations, the annual gross income from all musical performing rights is probably slightly in excess of one per cent of that from the marketing, under copyright license, of performing rights of motion pictures.

Yet musical performing rights used 63 per cent of the Patent Committee's total time devoted to public hearings while motion picture performing rights, almost one hundred times the size, and affected by the same amendments, required less than one per cent of the committee's time. Based upon its relative economic significance, the musical theme should have been played diminuendo in a very minor key. Instead, it dominated the entire legislative symphony.

The Motion Picture Stake

Lock, stock and barrel, the motion picture industry is enmeshed in copyright. It runs the gamut of every copyright problem, including those of use as well as ownership. A single copyright, individually or in company with others, in the course of its film career, will be

ALLIED STATES SETS OUT TO CREATE 'NINTH MAJOR'

Immediate Market of 3,500 to 4,000 Independent Theatres Guaranteed Enterprise to Rise from Ch't'f'd-Inv'c'le Interests

Eighteen Features Decided On for New Season; 52 Eventually To Be Produced Annually; Financing Declared Assured

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors took sudden and formal steps on Wednesday aimed at creating a new producing and distributing company, specially addressed at service of the independent theatres.

Culminating six months of secret study with the leaders of its affiliated groups in the field, Allied's national managers undertook an arrangement to build the new enterprise from the structure of the present Chesterfield-Invincible interests, guaranteeing an immediate market of between 3,500 and 4,000 independent theatres, for 18 feature productions decided on for the new season, and 52 features that eventually will be produced annually.

Ample financing, of a private nature, is at hand for production of nine features each by George Batcheller, president of Chesterfield, and by Maury Cohen, president of the related Invincible company. Edward A. Golden, general sales manager for the combination, will set out from New York this weekend to create an entirely new distribution structure in the field, apart from any franchise arrangements under which the companies have operated heretofore. The sponsors emphasize the fact that the new enterprise has no states right ties to begin with. Nor will the Allied sponsors on the one hand and the Batcheller-Cohen interests on the other be hampered by any long-term contractual stringencies, for the arrangement starts off on a single year's contract—"It's an engagement, not a marriage," they point out.

Permits Class A Policy

The substantial guarantee of from 3,500 to 4,000 readymade customers will enable the producers to abandon their existing policy of producing Class B pictures, at comparatively inexpensive negative cost, and adopt a Class A policy on a considerably higher budget. This treatment is a definite provision in the producers' guarantee to Allied.

The enterprise, therefore, presents competitive potentialities to the major companies, which heretofore have not considered Chesterfield-Invincible as competitors in the class in which they have operated.

"Reiterating their oft-repeated warning that the solution of the monopoly they allege exists in the motion picture business, can only be relieved by more product," the leaders of Allied announce that they "felt the most direct relief for the independent exhibitors is the introduction into the field of a ninth major company."

SALIENT FACTORS IN ALLIED'S PLAN

Allied States Association guarantees market of 3,500 to 4,000 independent theatres to new producer - distributor.

Private financing declared assured for production of nine features from Chesterfield and nine from Invincible.

Fifty-two features eventually to be produced each year.

Producers to adopt policy of Class A product at considerably increased budget.

Allied to have voice in policies of new enterprise.

"The decision to put independent effort behind Chesterfield-Invincible," they said, "was made only after months of study and negotiations, and when they showed us they were able to finance the necessary production, we saw no reason why such an effort would not be successful if given independent support.

"While Allied States is a national organization, and has never made the birth of a new production company an official organization activity, the enthusiasm of the individual units made the whole idea most desirable—and it is not prompted by any desire to make money out of production. Rather it is the desire to give to the exhibitor more product of a quality that he can with pride present to his public."

Allied's four principals who negotiated the contract on Wednesday declared that "the organization will not make a dime" on the deal until such time in the future that it is sufficiently successful. They feel that that have an "in," a lien on a possibility that may grow into what they described as "a second Columbia." At this moment no specific monetary return has been determined. Reports of Chesterfield-Invincible making a $50,000 payment are unfounded.

Allied Voice in Policies

Allied at all times will have a voice in the policies of the new enterprise. Its leaders will meet frequently with the producers to discuss and report on reactions at the box office, and on tastes and trends, and for this reason the production procedure will be flexible.

"Utmost secrecy has featured the negotiations," explained Allied, adding: "For some months Allied has been concerned with reports of mergers and consolidations and with the curtailment of product that has been taking place. During the hearings on the Pettengill anti-block booking bill at Washington, in March, much was made of the fact that while at one time, in silent days, some 850 features were distributed and made in the United States, that number has decreased to less than 500, with only 360 made by the majors."

The enterprise first took tangible form at a special Allied meeting two weeks ago in Cleveland. Present and approving the idea, pending the final negotiations of this week, were Allied's leaders Martin G. Smith, P. J. Wood, George Erdman, M. B. Horwitz, Henry Greenberger, John Kalafat and several others from Ohio; and, A. C. Gutenberg, Milwaukee; H. M. Richey, Detroit; E. A. Peaslee, Minneapolis; Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass; Roy Bair, Indiana; Sidney E. Samuelson, New Jersey; William Davis and Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh; Aaron Saperstein, Chicago, and Frank Hornig, Maryland.

18 Features Selected

A committee consisting of Messrs. Saperstein, Yamins, Samuelson and Richey, was selected by those at the Cleveland gathering to bring the negotiations to a conclusion and draft the contract. That job was finally completed on Wednesday.

The discussions at the time the contract was actually negotiated had progressed to the point where the first 18 features were selected, as follows:

Ellis Island
Missing Girls
Dancing in the Dark
Fugitive From Justice
The Narrow Road
House of Secrets
The Adorable Cheat
Betrayed
Alone
Mysteries of Paris
The Great Ballyhoo
Red Lights Ahead
Born Lucky
The Shadow Speaks
The Only Way
Professional Model
Beauty Racket
Return of Raffles

"While Chesterfield-Invincible have harnessed the independent support toward the furnishing of a background, no attempt will be made to brand the idea as exclusively Allied-independent, but to offer, in the parlance of merchandising, 'another wholesaler,'" declared the sponsors Wednesday.

The nature of the identity of the new enterprise is yet to be determined. Its existence will be formally made known to the Allied membership at the annual convention in Cleveland on June 3rd.

PARAMOUNT OFFERS SALE OR RENTAL AS ALTERNATIVE ON ACCESSORIES

New Plan Operative June 1; Move Opposed by National Poster Association; Major Film Companies Interested

Taking the initiative in a long contemplated movement on the part of large film companies to oppose and if possible put an end to the operations of accessories renting houses, Paramount last week announced inauguration June 1st of an accessories leasing policy under which the company will retain ownership of posters and other advertising material furnished exhibitors and make credit allowances for return of the same within five days after use.

Promptly convened to study the development, the executive committee of the National Poster Service Association, Inc., met on Saturday with Simon Libros, president, declaring the Paramount plan was intended to "freeze out the poster renters" and announcing that the association would contact every independent exhibitors organization to counsel action against the distributor's policy. Al Blofson, Oscar Libros, Louis Weinzimmer, Harry Schlit and Harry Egert were others attending the meeting.

Equally prompt was a Paramount spokesman's confirmation, "They have no business being in the business. The material is ours and they have no right to rent it out. If exhibitors begin complaining about our service, what would they do if we decided not to make posters and stills?"

As outlined, the Paramount policy will be operative pertaining to all company accessories as of the date specified, although exhibitors who prefer to do so may continue to buy their material outright. Credit allowances awarded for return of materials will be of two classes, the first or largest allowance being made for material returned in condition permitting its use subsequently and the second for that which has been damaged beyond further usefulness. All accessories except those imprinted with the name of the theatre, dates or other data disqualifying it for subsequent employment will be covered by the leasing arrangement.

"Piracy" Charged

Dissatisfaction with prevailing custom in the handling of accessories has ranged from general condemnation to forthright charges of piracy as the years have passed since the dim dawn of the industry when stock one-sheets bought in job lots from paper houses were patiently sorted out by exhibitors and overlined with the titles of pictures discovered to be included in the programs shipped to them.

With the increasing use of exploitation and the spreading of advertising coverage in pace with box office radius came the custom of selling used accessories to individuals, later to companies, who offered them in turn to subsequent exhibitors of the pictures at a price below that for which they could obtain new ones from the distributors.

Cite Operating Losses

Distributors, maintaining that this practice resulted in dissipation of the yield from accessories sales contemplated in fixing budgets for their manufacture, often netting substantial operating losses in a department professedly self-liquidating, have studied various means of preventing the re-selling of used material by exhibitors.

Copyrighting of accessories was resorted to and found unavailing. Exhibitors continued to sell or otherwise dispose of them and they continued to be used by subsequent exhibitors.

The line, "this is not sold but leased," was printed on all accessories but failed to stem the practice.

Recently the major companies discussed a proposal to pool their accessories departments and serve exhibitors from a single, commonly operated depot. This plan was discarded as impractical.

The Paramount policy just announced seeks to remedy the situation by assuring exhibitors a yield from direct return of the accessories to the company commensurate with that obtainable from other sources. Although not so specified in utterances of the distributor, the plan is regarded as tantamount to meeting the renting house in competitive bidding for the materials used by exhibitors in advertising the company's pictures.

What the Others Say

Al Seligman, ad sales head of Columbia, has expressed himself as personally impressed with the prospects of the Paramount plan but has not indicated whether his company will take similar steps.

Harry D. Buckley of United Artists is studying the plan without predisposition for or against adoption of the same or a related policy for his company.

A. W. Schwalberg of Warner Brothers made it plain that his company will not rent its accessories at this time but added that he will watch the Paramount development closely.

Lee Balsly of Twentieth Century-Fox represented his company as definitely against renting its own posters and photographs and a home office executive of MGM declared that company will not adopt the policy.

Paramount will not reduce its production of accessories, according to a company statement, but a new price scale will be announced shortly. It is probable that bookkeeping requirements coincidental to inauguration of the policy will result in employment of additional clerical help. The statement expresses confidence that the policy "will mean a saving of many thousands of dollars to exhibitors throughout the country."

A second meeting of the committee of the National Poster Service Association was held on Monday of this week and George P. Aarons, acting for the association, was reported to have telegraphed non-members of the organization urging that they join in order to fight the movement.

New York Circuits Draw Battle Lines

With the formation of the new Cocalis-Stein partnership for the purpose of acquiring and building a number of new theatres, a battle looms on the horizon of New York independent theatre men, it was indicated this week.

Turning down offers to join two major circuits to continue independently, Sam D. Cocalis has lined up with Dr. Emil Stein and his son, Monroe, a lawyer, in organizing the Cocalis-Stein circuit. The aim of the new combination is to build or acquire theatres of the de luxe type, Mr. Cocalis said. The first move will be the construction of a theatre in the Bronx and two others will be built before January 1, he continued. One of them, it is understood, will be erected in Greenwich Village. It is expected that the first theatre will be ready for opening about the middle of October.

One of the two offers Mr. Cocalis is said to have rejected was to turn over three of his Bronx houses to Loew's for operation. In addition, the independent was to join the circuit as supervisor of 11 "C" theatres. The deal, it is understood, did not involve Mr. Cocalis's 18 other theatres in New Jersey and Manhattan.

Spyros Skouras is reported to have made the second offer. This arrangement did not carry with it a change in management of Mr. Cocalis' theatres as Mr. Skouras merely wanted him to assist in film buying.

Several months ago Harry Brandt, Jack W. Springer and Consolidated issued a joint statement warning Mr. Cocalis not to invade their territories. The new Cocalis-Stein project is said to be in violation of an agreement with Consolidated. At this circuit's headquarters it was stated there will be no watching from the sidelines as Mr. Cocalis continues his theatre campaign.

Germany Bans "Garcia"

Because the paid agent of the Spanish forces in "A Message to Garcia" is represented as a German in the Twentieth Century-Fox production, exhibition of the picture in Germany has been banned by the Reich Ministry of Press and Propaganda, according to a Havas News Agency dispatch.

Warner Board Meets

A meeting of the Warner board of directors on Tuesday was described as devoted to routine matters. Morris Wolff of Philadelphia attended.

Glickman and Weber Resign

Harry Glickman and John N. Weber, president and treasurer, respectively, of Producers Laboratories, Inc., resigned this week, their resignations to take effect immediately.

BRINGING together for the second successive year the exploitations of the exhibitors of America and their colleagues in the foreign field, the annual "Show of Showmanship" sponsored by Motion Picture Herald and executed by the Round Table, was on display at the home office of the Quigley Publications for the four-day period of May 19 to 22nd.

Showmen in all branches of industry activity, distribution and advertising, executives and advertising heads of affiliated companies and other industries were on hand to observe the campaigns submitted to the Round Table, the exhibits created by the producing companies and theatre circuits on coming product. Arrangements were in the hands of a committee of film and theatre executives working with A-Mike Vogel, Round Table chairman.

Prominent among the displays were the entries voted the 1935-1936 Quigley Award plaques, photos of the presentation of these Awards by governors of the states represented and the ceremonies of the 1935 Quigley Grand Awards presentation in Hollywood. Also exhibited were theatre campaigns from showmen in every part of the United States and represented were exploitations from among members of the Round Table in 25 foreign countries.

The opening day of the "Show of Showmanship" also marked the first group presentation of Honorable Mention sheepskin certificates voted in the Quigley Competitions, the April winners in the metropolitan area being so honored by Martin Quigley.

Recipients of these Honorables were Paul Binstock, of the Randforce-Republic, in Brooklyn, for his campaign on "Follow the Fleet"; Louis Fishkin, of the Randforce-Commodore, in Brooklyn, for his campaign on "Modern Times"; Al Weiss, manager, and Carl Fishman, publicist, of Loew's Oriental, also of Brooklyn, for their exploitation on "Robin Hood of Eldorado."

Among the early visitors to the "Show" were theatremen representing various of the metropolitan circuits, with the Randforce circuit sending over a delegation of 200 managers, headed by their division supervisors. Also on hand were groups from Loew's, Warner Bros. and RKO as well as managers of independent houses from as far as Trenton, N. J., Newburgh and Albany, New York.

Plans are being made to exhibit the "Show" in other key spots.

COMPANIES AGREE 'IN PRINCIPLE' ON MOST POINTS BUT SCORE CHARGE

Exhibitor Committee Indicates Distributors Feel Local Conciliation Boards Can Solve Most Causes of Friction

Though rejecting elimination of the score charge, major distributors otherwise are willing, largely through self-regulatory machinery, to accede to most of the 10-point program proposed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, on behalf of all exhibitors, in an endeavor to bring about more orderly practice in the industry.

That, in substance, was given as the general sentiment of the large distributing companies interviewed by Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and his executive committee, which by this weekend expected to wind up its preliminary conferences with the nine participating distributors.

An unrestricted 10 per cent cancellation privilege and establishment of conciliation boards in the field, cardinal planks in the MPTOA "platform," are virtually assured. The discussions have developed nothing concrete on which predictions as to the other points could be based, but they have disclosed a feeling that the proposed conciliation procedure could be depended upon to provide a solution to a majority of the causes of exhibitor-distributor friction. The Kuykendall committee is hopeful that ultimately the large distributors will grant all that it asks.

Ranking sales executives sitting across a table from the committee in the last two weeks were represented as agreeing "in principle" to the proposed reforms, with the single exception of the score charge, which practically all companies plan to retain.

Call Outlook "Encouraging"

While it was not the intention of the exhibitor committee to pin the executives down to specific commitments on all points during the initial discussions, the Kuykendall group is reported to have made sufficient headway as to be able to describe the outlook as "very encouraging."

The task of drafting and obtaining concrete agreement to specific provisions will be undertaken this coming week, again by the individual conference method.

As the committee members anticipated, the job can not be completed "over night," as while the sales executives may agree to the program in a general way, when it comes to cases, the heads of the companies must be consulted.

The sole holdout is Warner Brothers, which from the start of the discussions a month ago has chosen to pursue a policy of non-participation, without explaining its position officially. Whether Warner will join the conferences remains uncertain, though later developments may alter its attitude.

Disposing of talks with Paramount, Universal and RKO by last Friday, the committee conferred with Columbia on Tuesday, with W. Ray Johnston, president, and J. Millstein, sales manager of Republic, on Wednesday, also with Al Lichtman, W. F. Rodgers, Tom Connors and E. M. Saunders of MGM. It also has a meeting scheduled with John D. Clark, sales manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, contingent on his return from Hollywood. A conference with United Artists awaited the return of George J. Schaefer, vice-president, from the coast. There is also to be a meeting with GB Pictures.

INDEPENDENTS ASK FEDERAL INQUIRY

Irked by rejection by the MPTOA of their plea to participate in the current trade practice conferences, the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City on Wednesday named Harry Brandt, president, Jack Hattem, John Benas and Maurice Fleischman as a committee to confer with Homer S. Cummings, attorney general, in Washington, to present the grievances of local independent exhibitors and request a Department of Justice investigation of allegedly unfair trade practices.

Specifically the committee was instructed to ask for relief in the product situation. It was charged that some exhibitors cannot obtain product.

The Kuykendall committee announced that Mr. Millstein "was in complete accord with the 10-point program" and "indicated a willingness to adopt a 20 per cent cancellation and to eliminate the score charge." The committee said the MGM group had "agreed to removal of certain restrictions on cancellations" and that it was "hopeful of progress on score charges."

Following the session with Abe Montague, Columbia sales manager, and Joseph McConville and Rube Jackter, his assistants, the MPTOA commitee, consisting of O. C. Lam of the Georgia theatre owners' unit. L. C. Griffith of Oklahoma, Charles Williams of Nebraska, Lewen Pizor of Philadelphia and Mr. Kuykendall, issued this statement:

"The complete 10-point program as proposed by the MPTOA pertaining to fair trade practices was gone over thoroughly. Mr. Montague was very considerate of our problems and has a complete understanding of exhibitor problems generally. He assured us of cooperation on the part of Columbia Pictures and promised to work with us on our 10-point program. We reached no definite decisions as to the extent of the cancellations.

"We found that Columbia Pictures was working on what Mr. Montague termed 'decentralization of policies,' and the branch managers and division managers generally were being given more latitude in order that they might treat with individual cases in different localities."

Drafting of Specific Agreements Starts This Week; Two Companies Said to Favor 20 to 25 Percent Cancellation

From another source it was learned that Mr. Montague favored an unrestricted cancellation of "at least" 10 per cent. Two companies were authoritatively reported considering an outright elimination privilege up to 20 or 25 per cent in the belief that the quality of their product is so high that the exhibitor would not abuse the privilege.

Distribution executives were found by the committee to harbor a common fear that exhibitors would use an unconditional cancellation clause to reject higher rentals, despite the fact that price usually is considered to be commensurate with quality.

To prove to the distributors that their theory is incorrect, the MPTOA committee is reported prepared to defer its request for unrestricted 20 per cent cancellation and accept the present 10 per cent, but without any contractual hedging or the conditions which, exhibitors charge, have made eliminations, on moral or other grounds, practically impossible heretofore.

If the exhibitors can show that they are sincere, and if the arrangement works out, the committee believes that when the 1937-38 selling season gets underway, in about nine months, it will be easier to persuade the distributors into a 20 per cent cancellation, "without strings."

Fear Effect on Grosses

The companies are opposed to the elimination of the score charge because of its effect on grosses. This is no problem with Universal accounts, since they pay no score charge, and Columbia informed the committee that it seldom bills exhibitors for this item. Typical of some of the companies' attitude, Columbia considers the fee a matter of individual bargaining with the exhibitor.

A majority of the distributors favor local conciliation boards for adjusting trade disputes.

Predicated on impartiality and neutrality, the boards, it is planned, would be effective in coping with disputes coming under four planks of the exhibitor program, namely, fair clearance and zoning, elimination of unfair overbuying, abolition of cutrate competition and control of nontheatrical exhibition. Clearance and zoning and overbuying cases would be decided strictly on their merits. The distributors will not, however, accede to the committee's request for uniform clearance and zoning, because, they are said to have explained, the attitude of the courts and the Government prevents concerted action, as recent litigation has shown.

The boards also would be relied upon to determine whether an exhibitor is entitled to relief from designated playdates, specifically for weekend showings, and if so, would use persuasion with the exchanges.

With respect to forcing of shorts with features, which the MPTOA wants eliminated, some companies reported that relief would be granted by requiring the exhibitor to purchase only a sufficient number of shorts to round out his program, on a ratio such as two shorts to each feature picture.

The remaining request, a standard form of exhibition contract, will be granted to the extent that the companies individually are willing to write uniform contracts for their accounts, but adoption of a standard contract by all companies is not contemplated, it was reported.

Quick reference information on product started and completed and a panorama of the news of the week

11 Features Start

The start of convention season, with its accompanying ballyhoo of optimism, high hopes and promises, undoubtedly was a factor in stimulating Hollywood to quite an extensive new picture production program in the week. As 11 features started, at least three of them appear to be in the surefire hit attraction bracket. Of the six completed, a couple look like good news for patrons and showmen.

Four pictures went into work at Twentieth Century-Fox. Heading the list is Shirley Temple's "Dimples," in which Frank Morgan, Helen Westley, Stepin Fetchit, Robert Kent, Delmar Byron, Astrid Allwyn, Berton Churchill, Joseph Cawthorne, Julius Tannen, Francis McDonald and the Hall Johnson Choir compose the featured supporting cast. William A. Seiter is directing. Vying with this picture as a potential big attraction is "Ramona," being made in Technicolor. The cast lists Loretta Young, Don Ameche, Kent Taylor, Pauline Frederick, Katherine DeMille, Jane Darwell, Pedro de Cordoba, John Carradine, Paul Stanton and J. Carroll Naish. Henry King is directing. The third picture, "Sing, Baby, Sing," being directed by Sidney Lanfield, will present Adolphe Menjou, the Ritz Brothers, Tyron Power, Jr., Alice Faye, Gregory Ratoff, Patsy Kelly and Ted Healy. Also in work is "Border Patrolman," a Sol Lesser production for this company's release. George O'Brien is teamed with Polly Ann Young in the leads supported by Roy Mason, Mary Doran, William P. Carleton, Smiley Burnette, Al Hill and Tom London. David Howard is directing.

Warner Brothers started two pictures. "Way for a Pirate" teams Guy Kibbee with Sybil Jason and lists Jane Bryan and Fred Lawrence in support. Nick Grinde is directing. Though the cast is not complete, Dick Foran, Ann Nagel and Eddie Acuff are featured in "Lone Star Ranger." Direction is by Noel Smith.

At Republic "Beneath the Seas" started. Players listed are Russell Hardie, Ann Rutherford, Fritz Lieber, Ben Lyon, Irving Pichel, Vince Barnett, Nigel de Brulier, Karl Hackett and Maurice Murphy. Lewis D. Collins is directing.

Paramount put "The Count of Arizona" before the cameras. Featured personalities being directed by Harold Young include Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern, Fred Stone, Billy Burke and Ernest Cossart.

Columbia's contribution to the new work is "Night Wire." Lew Ayers and Joan Perry are starred, supported by Thurston Hall, Henry Mollison, John Gallaudet, George McKay, Victor Kilian, Gene Morgan and Wryley Birch. David Selman is directing.

At MGM "Women Are Trouble" got under way. The cast includes Stuart Irwin, Paul Kelly, Margaret Hamilton and Frank Lackteen. Earl Taggart is directing.

Last of the currently started pictures is Radio's "Never Gonna Dance." Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers again are teamed, with Victor Moore, Helen Broderick, Allen Curtis and Edward Price listed in support. George Stevens is the director.

Six studios accounted for the half dozen finished pictures. For MGM release, Hal Roach completed "Our Relations." Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy are featured, supported by Alan Hale, Sidney Toler, Daphne Pollard, Betty Healy, Lona Andre, Iris Adrian, James Finlayson, Arthur Houseman, Wade Boteler, Noel Madison and Ralf Harolde. Harry Lachman directed.

SOLE PATRON FIVE YEARS; NOW HE HAS VACATION

For five years A. E. Wetherbee was the only patron of the Carthay Circle theatre. No shows were being presented. As far as the general public was concerned the house was closed and dark. Nevertheless, every day Mr. Wetherbee opened the box office, walked outside, bought a ticket, dropped it in the chopper, went inside, started a recording, sat down and listened to it, turned it off, closed the theatre and went home.

He wasn't doing this for the fun of it. He had to. Under the terms of the lease which he holds on the theatre, his equity continued as long as he made the theatre a going concern. The purchase of a single ticket, duly recorded on proper form and reported to the owners along with the cash remittance, fulfilled all conditions to the letter.

Now Mr. Wetherbee doesn't have to go there. Only intervals between long run features will necessitate his showing up to buy a ticket from himself. "Ziegfeld" is playing in the house.

Paramount completed "Arizona Raiders." Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt and Johnny Downs are the leads in a cast including Raymond Hatton, Jane Rhodes, Grant Withers, Arthur Aylesworth and James Burtis. James Hogan directed.

"Guns and Guitars" was finished at Republic. The cast is Gene Autry, Dorothy Dix, Smiley Burnette, Tom London, Charles King. Joseph Kane directed.

At Twentieth Century-Fox "White Fang" was transferred to the cutting room. Directed by David Butler it features Michael Whelan, Jean Muir, Slim Summerville, Charles Winninger, Thomas Beck, Jane Darwell, John Carradine, Billy Gilbert and Tyler Brooke, Jr.

Universal finished "Crash Donovan." The cast is Jack Holt, Nan Grey, John King, Eddie Acuff, Douglas Fowley, James Donlin, Henry Kleinback and Paul Porcasi. Direction was shared by William Nigh and Jean Negulesco.

Drop "B" Label

The present Paramount system of placing pictures in "A" and "B" classifications before and during their periods of production will be dropped immediately, William LeBaron, managing director in charge of production, said this week. Henceforth the money allocated to cover the cost of producing each picture will be determined by the merits of the story, director and cast as they develop in the shaping up of product.

Behind this change lies the need for a more elastic policy to avoid the difficulties in removing the "B" label on pictures which prove to be superior to that designation, as well as to change the attitude of the producing personnel on pictures of lesser importance. It is felt that by pre-ordaining a picture as a "B," all those concerned in its making sense a let-down in their status and that consequently throughout the studio there is an inclination to slight such a production to its severe detriment.

Studio officials are of the opinion that while the distribution department may classify pictures for its own purposes, the practice of carrying classification all the way back to the inception of a production is unnecessarily harmful. In the future, so far as the studio is concerned, each production will find its own level by its final box-office attributes and not by any preconceived limitations.

"This does not mean," the statement concluded, "that the cost or the importance of a production will not be determined in advance. But it does mean that the efforts of all concerned in the making of the least important picture will be as intensive as those on the most important."

Chinese Cycle

With "The Lost Horizon," "Chinese Gold" and "The Good Earth" in production a cycle of Chinese pictures is in the offing. The trend gave Douglas MacLean an idea. Two or three months ago while in China he saw the first presentation of "Tien Luan" or "Song of China." He was so impressed by the scope and novelty of the production that he arranged to take over world distribution, and now is preparing it for presentation in Hollywood.

Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus left for New York to attend the Technicolor board of directors' meeting and arrange for an appropriation of an additional $1,500,000 for local plant expansion. . . . John D. Clark, Joseph Moskowitz and William Goetz are on the Coast for Twentieth Century-Fox sales convention talks. . . . United Artists will hold its annual sales convention in Hollywood in June. . . . Following successful and smooth installation of the IATSE closed shop in the studios, William Bioff, personal representative for George Browne, president, and Harland Holmden, union vice-president, left for New York. . . . Leo Spitz and Ned Depinet are at the RKO studios from the East. . . . Also going to New York were Charles P. Skouras, Mike Rosenberg and George Topper of Fox West Coast.

WPA Theatres Gross $75,000

A total of approximately $75,000 was reported this week to have been grossed by the federal theatre projects in New York City since they began operating several months ago. This would be a small amount in the strictly commercial theatre for the same length of time, but WPA officials consider it substantial in view of the admissions, which are scaled from 15 cents to 55 cents top, and since persons on relief are admitted free.

It is one of the objectives of the project to stimulate interest in the legitimate theatre by a price range which will permit the greatest number of persons to attend, project officials pointed out. The appeal largely is to persons unable to afford the legitimate theatre prices and whose entertainment has been motion pictures.

"Our potential audience is an audience that has not been going to the theatre, at least for the last few years," said Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director of the federal theatre. "There are in the United States 3,500,000 workers on WPA jobs. They, with their families and friends, are a potential audience which we want. In the CCC camps are 300,000 youths between 16 and 25, most of whom have never seen a play. This is an audience we want. In every city there are thousands of boys and girls in grade and high schools who have been brought up exclusively on movies. This is an audience we want. In every city there are thousands of men and women who haven't been able to go to the theatre because of the expense. Ours is a new theater audience."

Mrs. Flanagan said that there are 12,500 persons on the federal theatre payroll, playing in 31 states to audiences totalling 500,000 weekly.

Eighteen plays by new playwrights have been produced during the five months the project has been in operation. One of these, "Censored," produced at the Hollywood Playhouse, has been acquired by A. H. Woods for commercial Broadway production next fall.

The Adelphi theatre, off Broadway, became a federal playhouse Tuesday night with the opening of "The Dance of Death." The Majestic in Brooklyn also has been leased by the Government. "The Ballad of Davey Crockett" was scheduled for opening there Thursday night.

Young Reviewers At Boys' Exposition

A motion picture demonstration and exhibit will be presented in connection with the Boys' Exposition, to be held at the Hotel Commodore, New York, June 1 to 3, inclusive. Monday evening, June 1, will be devoted to a special demonstration session of the Young Reviewers of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

International Opens Headquarters

International Seat company has established New England headquarters at Comi's Theatre Service and Supply company in Boston with James O'Brien as sales manager.

Goebbels Forbids German Press To Print Critiques Next Morning

Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels in Berlin has issued an order forbidding the German press to print criticism of a new play on the morning after the opening night, says a wireless to the New York Times. The same prohibition applies to musical criticism. The earliest that such criticism may be printed is noon the following day.

Minister Goebbels' statement, in part, follows: "It is obvious that such criticism [printed immediately after performances] had to be written without a proper estimate of the performance and without an opportunity for the critic to collect and digest his impressions. Such criticism must be considered, therefore, highly frivolous. It lacks all reverence for artistic achievement, no matter how big or small that may be."

The announcement ends with a reference to statements in speeches by Dr. Goebbels that artistic criticism does not exist for its own sake and that a well-meant or perhaps even considerable artistic achievement must not be deprecated for the sake of witticism.

The order permits the Propaganda Ministry to exercise more rigid control over all criticism by enabling it to scan more thoroughly printers' proofs submitted to it.

G-B Convention Opens on Friday

Early this week George W. Weeks, general sales manager of Gaumont-British, began welcoming delegates to the company's convention opening May 22nd and continuing through May 24th at the Warwick Hotel in New York. Following the general session, Mr. Weeks is to hold individual conferences with district and branch managers.

Executives attending include Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager of distribution for GB in England; Arthur A. Lee, vice-president; Mr. Weeks; C. M. White, assistant sales manager; James Campbell, head of music for GB; and A. P. Waxman, advertising counsel. Also representing the home office were Claude MacGowan, comptroller; Charles Leach, secretary; S. Schwengeler, Al Selig, Charles Garrett, William Berry, R. McGrath, J. O'Connor, H. William Fitelson, B. Mayers, J. London and Peter Rosoff. Oscar Hanson, head of Empire Films, Ltd., was to bring the delegation from Canada.

Paramount Pictures' sales convention will be held June 5-6 at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, it has been announced by Neil W. Agnew, vice-president in charge of sales. The meeting will be attended by district sales managers and the following members of the New York office sales force: Mr. Agnew, J. J. Unger, C. M. Reagan, R. M. Rillham, Don Velde, G. B. J. Frawley, Fred LeRoy, Jack Roper, Arthur Dunne and Herman Lorber.

John L. Day, Jr., Paramount general manager in South America, and J. L. Thornley, general manager of the company's Capitol theatre in Melbourne, arrived in New York this week for home office conferences.

"Ecstasy" Fight In Second Round

The battle over the moral aspects of "Ecstasy" continued in the Baltimore city court this week when Eureka Productions, Inc., the American distributor for the Czechoslovakian picture, sought to have Judge Joseph N. Ulman overrule the Maryland censor board for a second time.

Following Judge Ulman's recent ruling that the censors make necessary eliminations instead of banning the picture, the board ordered 18 cuts affecting all but one reel of the film.

Eureka refused to accept the deletions, contending they would render the picture impossible of exhibition, and took another appeal to the court on the ground that the board did not intend to carry out honestly and fairly the judge's ruling.

The case came up again this week before Judge Ulman, who ruled that the 18 cuts must be made before the picture can be shown in Maryland. However Eureka announced on Wednesday that, with only a minimum of deletions, "Ecstasy" would open at the Palace in Baltimore on Friday, with Hermon G. Weinberg as Baltimore representative.

Meanwhile the film has been given a "C" (condemned) classification by the National Legion of Decency. The Legion commented that "'Bestiality' would be a far more descriptive title than 'Ecstasy.'"

"U" Sales Convention Set For New York June 15th

James R. Grainger has announced that the Universal sales convention will be held at the Hotel Astor in New York for three days commencing June 15th. All Universal exchange managers and salesmen from domestic offices of the company and many from abroad will attend.

Littlefield Is Honored

Walter B. Littlefield, who sails this week from New York for several months in Europe, was guest of honor at a farewell dinner last week in Boston at the Fox and Hounds Club. He was presented a motion picture camera. Nathan Yamins was toastmaster and Arthur K. Howard was in charge.

M'Liss

(RKO Radio)

Dramatic Romance

"M'Liss" is an adaptation of a short story of the same title by Bret Harte. One of America's most famous authors, his works are vivid word pictures of California in the early gold mining days. The story has been published many times, produced as a play on five or six occasions and previously adapted to the silent screen with Mary Pickford as the star.

Timed in 1885, localed in Smith's Pocket, a typical mining town in the Sonora country, "M'Liss" is a human story, filled with the comedy, romance, drama and tragedy peculiar to the country of the time of its heterogeneous collection of pioneer settlers, miners, gamblers, fops and dandies, good women and bad, and all the other colorful characters that Harte so interestingly has portrayed in his many works. Its central character is a primitive mountain girl. It chronicles events which cause her to experience within a few weeks more romance, tragedy, excitement and spiritual exaltation than most folk know in a lifetime. Foremost among the film's themes is the romance between the girl and a young school teacher, a love affair made thrilling by the circumstances that made any wild attractive girl the target for the impetuous desires of baser men who justified their actions by the law of the gun.

As production effects and backgrounds recreate the atmosphere of California in the eighties, Ann Shirley, previously seen in "Chasing Yesterday," "Steamboat Round the Bend" and "Chatterbox," is M'Liss. John Beal, featured in "The Little Minister," is the school teacher. A long list of popular players will be seen in supporting roles, including Guy Kibbee, Moroni Olsen, Douglas Dumbrille, Frank M. Thomas, Ray Mayer, Arthur Hoyt, Barbara Pepper, Margaret Armstrong, William Benedict, James Bush, Fern Emmett and Esther Howard.

The director, George Nicholls, Jr., has made all the Radio pictures in which Miss Shirley appeared, also "Return of Peter Grim."

Winds of the Wasteland

(Republic)

Action Drama

Thrill action is the principal fundamental of this story. Timed to the period when the pony express was passing out of existence and the first telegraph wires were being strung across mountains and prairie, it majors in thrilling situations, uniquely occurring, which are being counted upon to provide adventure entertainment that will be appealing to that segment of theatre patrons who like their screen fare served to them in lusty, vigorous style.

The plot centers around a victimized pony express rider and an unscrupulous operator of big stage coach lines. With a girl and a fat government mail-carrying contract as a prize, the big production feature is a stage coach race between the rivals, one bent on revenge, the other determined that he alone shall be the winner.

Based on an original screen play by Joseph Poland, with John Wayne starred, the production is being directed by Mack Wright, who has handled many of the recent Republic action features. As the entire action takes place in the open, the picture is being shot in California's Sierra Mountain and Sacramento Valley country. Scenic effects, that have become such an important adjunct to the entertainment of outdoor pictures, promise to provide many beautiful backgrounds.

As drama is the essence of the story, the romantic contrast nevertheless is of importance, and in that phase Phyllis Fraser, the only woman in the cast, is of considerable help in causing Wayne to outwit his rival, Douglas Cosgrove. The remainder of the cast is composed of players typical to western pictures, such as Yakima Canutt, Lane Chandler, Sam Flint, Lew Kelly, Robert Kortman, Ed Cassady, Joe Yrigoyen and Jack Ingraham.

Trapped by Television

(Columbia)

Melodramatic Romance

As the title tone indicates, this promises to be fantastic drama. Contrasted by comedy and pungent romantic love interest, it is the story of a young inventor who perfected a television method, what happens to him when he tries to market it, also what happens and how to the crook who tries to steal the invention.

Blending dramatic, romantic and comedy elements, against a background of knavery and crookedness, production effects accentuating the scientific sense of the title, the story is composed of elements that are popularly appealing in character. Based on a story by Sherman Loew and Al Martin, with screen play by Lee Loeb and Harold Buchman, the yarn is a combination of scientific imagination and practical drama. Surmounting many difficulties in financing his television apparatus, the inventor first sees his machine tampered with at a time when he hopes to give a demonstration that will result in its sale. Aided by a strongarm collector and a girl who can tell the difference between right and wrong, the machine is repaired by the hero and a second demonstration scheduled. This time the villain who seeks to steal it for himself is hoist by his own petard as the melee he precipitates is witnessed via television by officials of the company interested in buying it.

The small cast narrating the story is made up of a group of wellknown players. Leads are Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot as the inventor and Nat Pendleton. Support includes Joyce Compton, Thurston Hall, Henry Mollison, Wryley Birck and Robert Strange.

The Bengal Killer

(Warner)

Drama

Despite the apparent significance of the title, this is not an Indian jungle story. Instead, it is a circus story. The setting in which most of the story takes place is a real circus, inside and outside the big top, the special trains on which it travels, the winter quarters, sideshows and dressing tents. Much of the drama centers upon the cages in which the wild animals are quartered, trained and exhibited. Real circus folk, animal trainers, acrobats, clowns, aerialists and riders appear throughout the story. It gives a panorama of the real existence of the colorful clan that entertains in the big tents.

With realistic drama and simple but unusual love interest, the story is being geared to be adventurous, exciting and thrilling, under direction of Louis King, maker of the recent "Road Gang." The yarn is an original screen play by Roy Chanslor and Earl Felton.

Against the colorful background, the story's drama and romance center upon three persons, an animal trainer, an acrobat, a girl, and an untamed tiger. The tiger escapes to terrorize the circus and the town in which it is playing. Recaptured by the trainer and his assistant, a battle ensues in which the trainer is maimed. Recovering, he falls in love with and marries the girl, thereby engendering romantic conflict with his acrobat pal. It builds to a tense situation that finds the trainer willing to sacrifice his own happiness for that of two younger folk.

The part of the trainer is played by Barton MacLane, currently in "Jail Break" and "Bullets or Ballots." The acrobat is Warren Hull, now in "Love Begins at 20," and the girl is June Travis, who made her debut in "Ceiling Zero" and soon will be seen in "Earthworm Tractor." Supporting players featured are Paul Graetz, Joseph King, Richard Purcell and Carlyle Moore, Jr.

Educating Father

(20th Century-Fox)

Domestic Comedy

This production is the second in the series of American family pictures which was successfully launched with the presentation of "Every Saturday Night." It is another chapter in the lives of the Jones family. It features several of the players who appeared in the initial film. Jed Prouty is again Mr. Jones, Spring Byington is Mrs. Jones and Florence Roberts again is Granny. The same quartet of juveniles who were so prominent in "Every Saturday Night"—Kenneth Howell, June Carlson, George Ernest and William Mahan—again will be seen as the children. James Tinling, who functioned similarly in the first picture, again directs and Max Golden is also the producer. The picture is based on a story by Katharine Kavanaugh, author of the first. She, Edward T. Lowe and John Patrick collaborated on the screen play. In addition to the group of players presented in the first picture, this adds Shirley Deane, Dixie Dunbar, Francis Ford, Charles Tannen, J. Anthony Hughes, David Newell, Charles H. Wilson, Jonathan Hale and Erville Alderson.

Typically homey Americana in character, the picture is being made for entertainment of the average American family audiences which wishes to see the everyday adventures, joys and sorrows of similar American families. The story concerns the experiences of a man who doesn't want his son to become an aviator. The boy has no desire to follow in his father's footsteps and become a pharmacist. On that basic plot is centered all the entertaining stuff typical of the average family, its romance, drama and comedy. Eventually the father is glad that his son knows how to fly, for even though he gives him the jitters in a breakneck flight, the boy is the hero who saves his business.

Lasky's Return to Executive Production Ranks Signalized at Testimonial Luncheon by AMPA

On either side of Jesse L. Lasky on the dais were: Pat Casey, Martin Quigley, Terry Ramsaye, J. J. Murdock, C. C. Pettijohn, Nathan Burkan, John C. Flinn, Arthur S. Friend, Herbert J. Yates, Morris Gest, Nellie Revell, Dennis F. O'Brien, Carl E. Milliken, Walt Disney, Rowland V. Lee, Louis Nizer, Ed Kuykendall, Sol A. Rosenblatt, Harry Buckley, Arthur W. Kelly, Harry Brandt, Gordon S. White and Jack Alicoate. Here are shown, left to right, Messrs. Gest, Murdock, Brandt, Quigley, Lasky, White and Casey.

Lasky Recalls Tony Pastor Days

"Regardless of whether you have a cent or not, if you can look friends in the face that you have known for 30 years, and still find love and affection and respect then you have achieved real success."

Jesse L. Lasky thus ended a resume—and a confession—of his career, checkered with triumphs and disappointments, which began with an ambition to become "the best cornetist in Sousa's band" and which led him through the vagaries of four colorful decades.

The occasion was a testimonial luncheon attended by 250, under the auspices of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, at New York's Hotel Astor last Thursday, signalizing Mr. Lasky's return to executive production ranks as a partner in Pickford-Lasky Corporation.

There were brief talks by "the old fellows" whose pioneering in the industry coincided with Mr. Lasky's, and "the younger fellows who are brushing them aside," as phrased by Pat Casey, producers' contact in labor matters and toastmaster at the luncheon.

"The only time Lasky lost was in making pictures that were elevating and very fine," Mr. Casey said. "I never though the great Belasco could make pictures as good as Lasky's," added C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. "On behalf of the younger generation, I pay tribute to Lasky and his matchless courage," said Sol A. Rosenblatt.

"Mr. Lasky is one of the finest creative intelligences in motion pictures," Martin Quigley said. "Through the years he has gone steadily on, building and enhancing that reputation, in a field and under circumstances that have made this most difficult. He inevitably will be linked with famous plays and famous players. Through his individual daring and initiative, his creative genius and resourcefulness, he has maintained his high standard."

real meaning of success," Mr. Lasky let Announcing that he would speak on "the memory drift back 44 years, through successive "achievements," to the time when he played in vaudeville with a sister at Tony Pastor's in New York, and that impresario told him he was so good he could play two-a-day. Then came a venture as a producer, at the Fulton theatre on Broadway, "where I had the elite of New York at my feet." It failed, and there was another failure and still another. But each time he ventured anew, at each new stage thinking the peak of success was his.

"When, years later, through his affiliation with Adolph Zukor, he became vice-president in charge of all production for Paramount, he considered himself truly a successful man. Then came the hurricane of 1929-30. He joined the Fox studio.

"In my new connection with Mary Pickford I am happy again," he went on. "A few days ago when we opened 'One Rainy Afternoon' in Hollywood it seemed to me a new success had come. But today, surrounded by my old friends and newcomers, I have a new feeling of achievement. Success, it seems to me now, lies in making and keeping friends."

Guaranteed Pictures Appealing

Guaranteed Pictures in New York announced Wednesday it would appeal to the Board of Education in Albany to have the ban lifted from its recently imported French picture, "Jean," starring Gaby Morley.

Exhibitors Form Two State Units

Formation of new independent exhibitor organizations in Ohio and Kentucky highlighted a week witnessing many similar bodies reporting business improvement at regular meetings held for election of officers and related activities.

Greater Cincinnati Independent Exhibitors is the corporate name of the new Ohio organization, of which Harold Bernstein is president, A. J. Holt vice-president, David Helwig secretary and Herman Bly treasurer. Maurice White, F. Wesley Huss, Jr., Charles Weigel, Elmer Shard, Charles Fine, H. O. Worsel and Andrew Neidenthal are directors. Twenty-five theatres were represented at the first meeting.

Incorporators of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kentucky are Lee Moffitt, Sam Switow and Charles Hunston. The organization will maintain headquarters in Frankfort.

Richmond has been designated as scene of the mid-year meeting of the MPTO Virginia which will open June 1 at the Cavalier Hotel with Ed Kuykendall, Walter Vincent, C. C. Pettijohn of the MPPDA and others as speakers.

In Canada the Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors Association elected an entirely new executive slate with Henry Morton president, Joseph Pearson vice-president, Frank Kershaw secretary, M. Triller treasurer and the following members of the board: Helmer Jernberg, Ray Tabman, S. Morros, Jack Miles and Frank L. Willis.

Meanwhile expected action bearing on the expected merger of the TOCC and ITOA of New York was deferred because of Charles L. O'Reilly's absence from the city.

Center Theatre Closing

The Center, smaller of the two Rockefeller Center Theatres, closes this week for the summer, reopening September 5 with the stage spectacle, "White Horse Inn."

PROTEST FIRING OF OPERATORS BY OWNERS OF THIS THEATRE

This is exhibit "A" in a suit filed by the Oceana theatre in the Brighton Beach section of Brooklyn, N. Y., against a phantom "Women's auxiliary" of the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union.

In retaliation for the dismissal of three Empire State operators at the Century circuit's Patio, Midway and Sheepshead Bay theatres, the wives, mothers, sisters, sweethearts and other relatives and friends of the men banded together as an "auxiliary" and picketed the Oceana, operated by Rugoff and Becker, in the same neighborhood. The ladies demanded that the Oceana operators use their influence with the Century circuit to rehire the men.

Finding the Oceana in no way involved in the dispute, the New York supreme court enjoined the auxiliary, its "confederates and all persons conspiring with them," from demonstrating at the Oceana.

Sidney A. Clarkson, attorney for the Oceana, had pictures taken of the demonstrators, including some reputed communists, for purposes of identification in the serving of summonses, as the ladies coyly refused to divulge their real names. The union insists it has no truck with the band.

The unshaven, bareheaded gentleman visible at the right is not a picket. He is Warner Baxter, in a lobby display.

INDICT FORMER UNION HEAD; MORE ARRESTS

Sherman Attributes Indictment on Larceny Charge as "Spite Work by Disgruntled Group"

Another chapter in the tumultuous history of Local 306, New York operators' union, was written Monday when Harry Sherman, its former president, was indicted by a grand jury in general sessions court on a charge of grand larceny in the first degree. He was accused of taking $190,961.75 of the union's funds.

Mr. Sherman is the second president of the local to become involved with the law, Sam Kaplan, his predecessor, having been found guilty with nine others in 1933 of coercion in connection with the local's affairs. Mr. Kaplan was sentenced to a six-months penitentiary term.

Mr. Sherman denied the charge and attributed his indictment to "spite work by a disgruntled, ousted group of the union, who will jump out of the window when my trial begins." He was released in $7,500 cash bail provided by David Berk, an assistant stage manager of the Paramount theatre in Brooklyn.

Kaplan supporters were behind the indictment, Mr. Sherman charged. Members of the union, which is affiiated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, said the indictment results from charges filed by Kaplan adherents accusing Mr. Sherman of being unable to give a satisfactory accounting of approximately $1,200,00, and is an outgrowth of a factional fight between Kaplan and Sherman adherents.

After Mr. Kaplan was ousted from the post by the IATSE, Mr. Sherman was elected in February, 1933, and served until July, 1934.

He is specifically charged with taking the union's funds on Dec. 18, 1933, when they allegedly were withdrawn on his instructions from several banks. Irving Mendelson, assistant district attorney, charged that several union members were fined when they asked Mr. Sherman the meaning on union books of "items charged to rehabilitation and reorganization." Mr. Mendelson alleged that a report by Mr. Sherman showed a charge of $400,000 for "rehabilitation," supposedly used to strengthen the local after it had gone into bankruptcy following the Kaplan regime.

Following Kaplan's conviction, the New York supreme court appointed receivers for the union, and later its affairs were supervised for about a year by the IATSE.

Basson Cites "Housecleaning"

Joseph D. Basson, who succeeded Mr. Sherman as president of Local 306, on Tuesday issued this statement: "Harry Sherman has not been an official of the local for more than two years. Since his forced resignation as president, the 1,800 members of the union with the help of the IATSE have cleaned house completely.

"An honest administration was elected which is still in power and which has run the affairs of the local in a democratic and honest fashion."

Mr. Basson disclaimed any connection with the Nassau County Local 640, IATSE, four members of which were arrested in connection with a mustard gas explosion in the Mineola theatre, Mineola, Long Island, Friday night. The men are Thomas Cubbard, president of the local; Michael De Angelo, business manager, John Baptiste and Thomas A. Watson.

About 1,000 patrons rushed from the theatre. Eleven suffered eye burns and required hospital treatment. The theatre had just reopened after repairs following a fire, and was being picketed by union operators who struck when the management refused to employ a union stagehand.

25 More Arrested

Meanwhile, the operators' "war" in New York City resulted in the arrest of 25 additional members of Local 306 over the weekend, charged with disorderly conduct while picketing the De Luxe and Tuxedo in the Bronx. Both houses are independently operated. The familiar cross-picketing by Local 306 and Allied Motion Picture Operators Union continues.

Though he recently withdrew as mediator between the unions and the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City when a settlement appeared impossible, Frank Tichenor, publisher, indicated this week that he was willing to assist the various factions to bring about peace.

Local 306 has elected 11 delegates to the IATSE biennial convention starting June 8 in Kansas City. They are Mr. Basson, Frank Ruddock, Charles Beckman, Herman Gelber, Bert Popkin, Jack Winnick, Alex Polin, Wallace Byrnes, Morris Kravitz, Jack Kiley and Dick Cancellaire.

Local 644, cameramen's union, is sending Charles Downs, William Miller and Edward Ruby as its delegates.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

FRIENDS OF Dr. D. M. Nigro on Kansas City's film row are observing the city's assistant health director with something bordering on suspicions of the mystic. Besides serving downtown movie houses as official house doctor, Mr. Nigro is now delivering to his friends eggs from hens containing personal messages within the shell.

There's nothing supernatural about this particular egg-laying business, although "Doc" Nigro's friends have their doubts.

The production of eggs with cheery greetings and personal messages sealed inside them came about in a strange manner. It seems that Dr. J. S. Hughes, one of the chemistry professors of Kansas State College, had delivered a lecture during which he said that scientists could induce a hen to lay almost any kind of egg. L. H. Smith, head of a Kansas City butter-and-egg concern, challenged this statement—and Robert E. Phillips, a Kansas State College graduate in poultry husbandry, who had been experimenting with hens and eggs in the laboratory, accepted the challenge.

Butter-and-Egg Man Smith sent Student Phillips a note in his own handwriting. A few days later, Mr. Phillips sent Mr. Smith a nice white egg which, when broken open, contained, in place of the usual yolk, a hollowed-out cork stopper inside of which was the sample of Mr. Smith's penmanship.

Dr. Nigro arranged for several of the trick eggs for his film friends, and others, and they were amazed when they saw their own writings.

As Mr. Phillips explains the seeming "miracle," the trick is very simple. He anaesthetizes the hen and makes an incision in its egg-making apparatus. A yolk on its way to form part of an egg is removed and in its place the cork with the message inside is inserted. The incision is sewed up. The cork moves down the egg-duct and a nice white shell is formed around it. Some 25 hours later the strange egg is laid.

The operations produce eggs with messages inside in 75 per cent of the cases—and when the shells do not form about the corks, then the cork stoppers come out, and the hens don't seem to mind it a bit.

Tom Waller, lanky, red-cheeked Paramount press agent on Broadway, submitted for publication in Motion Picture Herald a closeup photograph of Haile Selassie on which the Emperor had affixed an autograph and greeting for John Dored, Paramount news cameraman covering the Ethiopian situation. Mr. Dored had sent the picture on from Addis Ababa to A. J. Richard, his boss in New York, and Mr. Waller thought it might look well in the Herald's pictorial pages. He was unable, however, to enlighten the editors as to the meaning of the Emperor's inscription, written in the native Amharic. And efforts spent among the best linguistic sources were unavailing, despite the aid of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Paramount Newsreel, Paramount Pictures Corporation, the Metropolitan Museum of Art and others. Seems that no one among all of America's 125,000,000 could be found to decipher Selassie's Amharic writing. So Waller, insistent press agent that he is, radioed all the way from Broadway to Ethiopia for the lowdown. They wired back that the Emperor had scribbled nothing more than, "Haile Selassie I—1929." (Note: 1929 is the present year on the Ethiopian calendar.)

Taking the sex out of films would ruin the films, observes Ted Cook, but it wouldn't have any effect on sex.

James Cagney, who starred in Warner's "G-Men," returned the other morning to Broadway from a visit to Washington where Top-Cop J. Edgar Hoover's G-Men conducted him through the Department of Justice Building. Most of all Jimmy liked their new gymnasium, just erected. "We had such a gym in the movie," Cagney informed them. The G-Men could have confided that their new gym was built and patterned after the gym in the picture!

Which leads to the story of the intense rivalry between the G-Men of Mr. Cagney's adopted California and those of the Ohio district, the competition most recently taking the form of an argument over the size of the mosquitoes in the respective district. "They grow so big out here," the Californians insisted, "that two of our men came across some mosquitoes who had just eaten a horse—and were tossing the horseshoes to decide which would get the harness."

The subject of Indians stands today the pet aversion of Producer Harry Goetz in Hollywood. Mr. Goetz had sent George Seitz, director, and a large company to the Red-Man belt in Oregon to film 275 Indians in a scene for his Reliance production, "Last of the Mohicans." He wanted real Indians, but the rushes showed them to be more pale-faced than Park Avenue "parlor cowboys." So Mr. Goetz had to rush four make-up men by airplane from his Culver City studio with bottles of a liquid preparation to make the sun-dodging Indians look like the real bronze.

Through the cooperation of the United States Indian Service, Director King Vidor, on location at Gallup, New Mexico, was able to secure 250 Zuni and Navajos Indians for "The Texas Rangers," which he is filming for Paramount. Mr. Vidor paid the redskins four dollars a day for each man and his horse. And they proved to be good actors, too, until the battle scenes started and numerous whites were "massacred" with Hollywood hatchets. Then the Indians became a little too realistic, proving there's still a little bit of tomahawk in every little Injun.

Gummo Marx, still a prankster, was in Sardi's restaurant off Times Square, sitting at a table across the wide room from Hal Horne, who had a visitor from Hollywood as his guest. Hal was observed by Leonard Lyons to wave to Gummo in greeting, shouting the full length of the restaurant: "You know my pal here, don't you?" To which Gummo shook his head negatively. Horne then shouted introductions. Marx nodded in acknowledgment, summoned a waiter, shook his hand, pointed to the stranger to whom he had just been introduced at long distance and directed, "Waiter, bring it over there."

Harry Hershfield was telling Arthur Murray about the food at a certain 52nd Street restaurant. "It's terrible," screamed Hershfield. "Every mouthful is positively poison. And what small portions they give you, the pikers."

MOVIE audiences are familiar with the scene in short comedies where the comedian takes a long drink from the "white mule" gin bottle and then spits out the liquor with a shocked expression only to see it explode into flame.

Jack Barnett, Fox Movietonews cameraman, went out to Dodge City, in western Kansas, the other day, from his station at Kansas City, to take some shots of the burning of 2,000 pints of liquor confiscated by the sheriff. Included in the pile were gins, wines, rums, whiskies, brandies and whatnot. The scene of the demonstration was the bank of the Arkansas River.

A match was applied, and the flames shot upward. But there were blue flames, almost invisible in the sunlight, and Barnett was stumped because they would not reproduce in his pictures. The fire burned out quickly and the cameraman was about to turn homeward, dejected, disappointed and a subject of the futility of his art. Then by some strange figment of imagination he effected an idea which gave him some swell shots by rounding up several gallons of gasoline and some empty liquor bottles, touching a match to them—and bingo! He nearly blew up the whole western half of Kansas.

"Dear Jimmy," writes Alexander (Columbia Pictures) Sherman. "I always figured that I was a rather naive person, the picture of good-nature and innocence, so you may imagine my amusement when, the other day, I was invited to attend a reception at the White House in Washington, only to learn that I am not quite as innocent in appearance as I imagined myself to be.

"It happened when I was taken by Marvin McIntyre, executive secretary, to meet President Roosevelt. Being a bit shy and somewhat nervous, I kept my hand in my pocket where I was nervously twitching my handkerchief. As I approached the President, still with my hand in my pocket, an eagle-eyed Secret Service sleuth dodged behind me and quickly pulled my hand out of my pocket, nearly breaking my arm. —And me a guy what won medals in Sunday school, too!"

Mr. Sherman's treatment at the hands of a Secret Service man is not unusual in view of the circumstances. What really surprises us is how the 'ell Al wiggled into an invitation to the White House.

Broadway Vocalist Mary Jane Walsh, so Ed Sullivan tells us, is the first to break into song on the air from a funeral parlor. Her first radio broadcast originated from Davenport, Iowa, a sleeply little town, where the sponsor of the program insisted on an organ accompaniment. The only organ in town, apart from those in the churches, was in a mortuary chapel, so Miss Walsh proceeded thereto, rendering, unconsciously or otherwise, from Runge's Funeral Chapel, the song: "Lover Come Back to Me."

William Nasses, manager of the Murphy theatre at Wilmington, Ohio, had 500 envelopes made up as an exploitation stunt for "A Message to Garcia." They were sealed and on the front was imprinted the message: "LOST. A Message to Garcia is one of the important screen events of the year. The finder of this lost letter should take it to the Murphy theatre promptly." The gag, of course was that persons returning the "lost" envelopes were to receive a pass to see "A Message to Garcia." It would have worked out nicely, but the film trucking company on the opening day lost the print of the picture.

Practical Theatre Operation Taught at Duke University

Management, Advertising, Program Arrangement & House Service Among Subjects Offered

When students of Duke University at Durham, N. C., begin to wonder, in common with radio orators and volunteer economists of the day, what they are going to with their education by way of making a living with it after they've got it, they are free to turn, if they will, to the course in theatre management made available to them. While no academic credit is given for the work, instruction is offered in both the theoretical and practical sides of theatre advertising, house service, selection of pictures, arrangement of programs, projection and technical stagecraft, with a model theatre in operation on the campus affording practical application of the principles taught.

Quadrangle Pictures, as the student enterprise is titled, is beginning its eighth year of operation. Regular screen programs are presented in one of the college auditoriums two days a week, matinee and evening. Stage performances are offered occasionally, local talent taking the spotlight most of the time. Professional entertainers are imported two or three times a year.

The Quadrangle has a staff of 30 workers, 27 of them students. The manager, who helped with the first show in 1928, is now a senior in the Duke Law School, and is beginning his fourth year as campus exhibitor. All other students employed are undergraduates. Two booth men and the office secretary are the only staff members not enrolled in one of the eight schools which constitute the university.

Practically all film shown is second or third-run in Durham. Occasionally first-run foreign films or educational subjects are used.

Up-to-date Equipment

Booth and stage equipment are up-to-date. Twin Super-Simplex projectors, with Western Electric Wide Range sound-heads, Super-Cinephor lenses, and Enarc lamp-houses; a Brenkert Master F-7 E-fect machine, and two combination spots comprise the projection apparatus. The booth also is equipped with a double sound turntable and is connected with the campus-wide amplifying system.

The stage is equipped with several complete sets of curtains, a permanent cyclorama, foot-, flood- and spot-lights and complete banks and cradles of overhead lights, a three-panel switchboard with 98 individual controls, and numerous scenic backs, drops and special curtains.

The auditorium is equipped with a private communications system (stage, pit, organ, foyer, booth, office) in addition to a three-way signal system. The organ, recently installed, is a 12-unit Wurlitzer.

Semi-weekly meetings are held, at which theatre operation and management are discussed, and at which the progress—or lack of it—of each staff member is noted. The regular reading and study of leading trade journals is considered as much a part of an usher's job as is the courteous accommodation of patrons on Wednesdays and Saturdays. There are also occasional written examinations.

W. M. Upchurch, Jr., upper right, is student manager of the Quadrangle, Duke University's campus theatre operated for class instruction in theatre operation. The ushers are students.

The idea behind this unusual course germinated last fall when a portion of the federal grant of National Youth Administration funds to Duke University was designated for enlarging and improving the campus entertainment facilities. While their jobs are primarily a source of necessary income, several of the boys have shown a lively interest in the course and are looking forward to motion picture and theatre work after graduation.

The Duke campus is located about three miles from the Durham business district, where the town's five theatres are located. "Quadrangle" does not advertise off the campus; thus, the patronage is almost 100 per cent from the university community, about 85 per cent students.

Attend at Least Once a Week

Audiences at the Quadrangle are composed almost entirely of "regulars" who attend at least one of the two shows given each week. Patrons are encouraged to help with the entertainment by joining in singing with screen characters or in vocalizing to the tunes of old-fashioned organlogues. While students are invited to hiss the villain—and they often do—there is no rowdyism, and the decorum of the house is always kept at a high level. The pleasant home-like atmosphere is enjoyed alike by staid professors and their families and by the college boys and co-eds.

Short program comedies and class films have the greatest appeal for the university audience. Musical extravaganzas do not gross so well here as in the ususal subsequent-run situations. Pre-release news is a regular and attractive feature.

High-ranking box-office stars during the Duke theatre's eight years have been: George Arliss, the late Marie Dressler, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Ann Harding, Leslie Howard, Katharine Hepburn, Charles Laughton, Edward G. Robinson, William Powell and Myrna Loy. Among the professionals who have appeared on the theatre's stage are: Buddy Doyle, Lew White, Arthur Boran, Edward Molitore, Camilla Tentera, and Tommy Dorsey and his orchestra.

The auditorium also is used for amateur dramatic productions, for musical concerts, and for lectures. The student staff has charge of the house on these occasions, working backstage as well as out front.

The Duke University theatre is sponsored by the student Young Men's Christian Association and contributes approximately one-third of that organization's yearly budget.

Supreme Court To Hear Appeal by William Fox

The United States supreme court in Washington this week consented to hear argument of William Fox on the jurisdiction of the second circuit court of appeals in refusing to consider his appeal from an order of the district court of New York imposing a penalty for contempt of $235,082 which represented the unpaid balance of a judgment against him of $297,412 in favor of the Capital Company, and ordering him to pay $10,000 costs of Capital Company attorneys.

ALLIED NAMES "FILM BUYING" AS KEYNOTE OF NATIONAL CONVENTION

"High Government Man" Will Advise Exhibitors "How to Protect Themselves Against Producer Aggression," Says Richey

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, assembling in Cleveland at the Hollenden Hotel June 3rd to 5th, in annual convention, will concentrate on "film buying" as the keynote, sending "every exhibitor away from the convention armed with information to combat these (new product) exaggerations (of distributors) that he is subjected to each year."

Independent owners the country over are invited to attend, whether or not members either of Allied state affiliates or of the national organization.

"Right now, and right during the convention in Cleveland, the producers will be meeting to devise ways and means to justify their demands for the coming season," said a statement from H. M. Richey, general convention chairman. "Isn't it about time the independents hold a buying convention, make an analysis of what was promised them last year, what was delivered and what they failed to deliver in quantity and quality—take a peep at the future to see what the prospects are?"

Mr. Richey's statement added that "a high Government man will present exhibitors with information as to how to protect themselves against producer aggression."

The invitation to all independents to attend was issued by Nathan Yamins, of Massachusetts, president. It was followed by a statement from Allied's national headquarters at Washington, in which Abram F. Myers, chairman, said:

"Self-constituted leaders receiving special favors from distributors and speaking the lines written by employes of the Hays Ass'n. are opposing every constructive movement for the relief and benefit of independent exhibitors and are even presuming to represent and speak for the latter at Congressional hearings and industry conferences.

"The mere silence of exhibitors in some territories on such momentous issues as compulsory block booking increased film rentals, designation of playdates, and last (but not least) chain expansion and aggression, may be interpreted as acquiescence in the efforts of those who would gladly deliver the independent exhibitors into the hands of their oppressors in order to feather their own nests.

"This convention will afford you the opportunity to repudiate such false leadership and to proclaim openly where you stand on the many grave issues confronting exhibitors."

The complete program, arranged by Mr. Richey, follows:

Loew's London theatres have announced a dividend of 35 cents a share on the 7 per cent preferred stock, payable May 30th.

Distributor Fights New York City Tax On Gross Receipts

A fight against imposition of a gross receipts tax by the city of New York on distribution revenue originating from outside the city has been been launched by Jewel Productions, Inc., state rights distributor.

The company seeks a judicial test of the law providing for a levy of one-twentieth of one per cent on gross receipts exceeding $15,000 for 1933, and a tax of one-tenth of one per cent for 1934.

The tax is for the privilege of conducting a business or profession, and is imposed on all firms or individuals having their main office in New York City. The revenue goes for emergency relief.

Jewel paid part of the assessment but is protesting the balance, amounting to $76. It is spending considerably more in fighting the levy. A hearing on the company's appeal was scheduled at the Department of Finance on Thursday. Henry Pearlman, 99 Wall street, Jewel's attorney, expected the assessment to be upheld, and planned to appeal to the state supreme court on a writ of certiorari. He believed that other small distributors shipping directly from New York to points outside the city are paying the tax unfairly and are entitled to relief.

The city comptroller contends that services rendered or tangible merchandise sold anywhere in the country is subject to the levy. Mr. Pearlman rests his case on two main points: (1) that film shipments to an out of town distributor or exhibitor are in interstate commerce and hence not subject to a city tax; (2) that such transactions are not an outright sale but a lease of personal property.

The gross receipts tax was cited by the major distributors in the suit being pressed by United Artists against the city's two per cent sales tax on film rentals. In that action it was contended that the city was imposing double taxation, since the exhibitor already is subject to the gross receipts impost. This contention, however, has no relation to the issues raised by Jewel.

English Film Men Dead

Two prominent film men died in London last week, Sir Philip Nash, chairman of the C. M. Woolf company, General Film Distributors, and Harry Sanders, for many years editor of the Pathe Gazette, which he founded. Mr. Sanders resigned from Pathe in 1934 and recently supervised the official filming of the Football Cup final.

Philip Kay Dies

Philip Kay, manager of the Iowa, Moville, Iowa, died unexpectedly there last week of heart trouble. He was a nephew of the late Nathan Dax, manager of the Hipp at Sioux City.

Ernest Glendinning Dead

Ernest Glendinning, veteran of the New York legitimate theatre, died this week at South Coventry, Conn., following an illness of two months. He was 52 years old. He is survived by his widow, Marie Julie Glendinning, and a sister.

Ben Greet Passes; Shakespearean Actor

Sir Philip Ben Greet, noted Shakespearean actor, died in a London nursing home this week following a short illness. He was 78. His career in the theatre was stretched over 56 years and he was credited with having done more than any other actor to popularize the plays of Shakespeare.

Sir Philip first came to America in 1901 as Hamlet. From that year he was exclusively identified with the American stage until 1914, when he returned to London. He started producing there in 1924 following the production of many Shakespearean works during the war. During the last three years Sir Philip welcomed audiences at Sydney Carroll's open-air theatre in Regents Park, England, as master of the greensward.

Trans Lux Net Reaches $182,272

Trans Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation and subsidiaries had a net profit of $182,272.65, after all charges for the year ending Dec. 31, 1935, the stockholders were told at their annual meeting in New York late last week. The 1934 net was $180,637.

Net for the theatres was $30,879.35 after all charges. This compares with a loss of $51,159 for 1934. Cash dividends paid totaled $142,160.60, leaving a consolidated earned surplus at the end of the year of $426,064.01. Total assets of the company were listed as $1,167,984.61.

In his report, Percy N. Furber, president, said an improvement in business last year had been maintained during the first quarter of this year, and that the net for the first three months of 1936 was $72,386, as compared with $35,072 for the same period last year.

Trans Lux Movies Corporation, wholly-owned subsidiary, for this year showed a net of $14,697, as compared with a loss of $13,248 for the corresponding period of 1935.

Mr. Furber called attention to the purchase of a Washington theatre site and said the company hoped to open at least three new theatres this year. He predicted that in time the theatre division would show a larger profit than the company's ticker unit.

All officers were reelected, as follows: President, Mr. Furber; executive vice-president, Mr. Furber; vice-president and treasurer, Arthur C. Payne; vice-president, Robert L. Daine; secretary and assistant treasurer, Edward T. Holway; assistant secretary, A. T. Mulcahy; comptroller, A. D. Erickson; directors, Robert W. Atkins, Mr. Daine, George H. Eichelberger, Harold P. Farrington, Mr. Furber, Robert L. Gordon, Edwin G. Lauder, George H. Robinson, Walter Siemers and Leslie E. Thompson.

Philip Frease Is Dead

Philip Frease, widely known exhibitor, died Monday night in San Francisco following a heart attack. Mr. Frease formerly operated theatres in Redwood City, Albany and Vacaville, Cal.

Odds and Ends in State Legislatures Still Troublesome

Legislative activities revolved this week around a state lottery proposal for California; the closing of Pensacola, Fla., theatres in protest against a city tax; Kentucky's passage of a graduated admission levy; continued interest in Massachusetts over four motion picture bills pending; drafting of the new child admission law in New York and the killing of a liquor drinking proposal for theatres in the same state, and the anticipation of Washington exhibitors of a flood of adverse measures when the state legislature convenes in January.

The California action proposed by L. J. Kessell, secretary of the state social security union, seeks a constitutional amendment legalizing a lottery to provide unemployment compensation. Theatres and other institutions would be taxed to support it. It was in protest against a city amusement on admissions that Pensacola, Fla., exhibitors closed every theatre in that city last week. Meanwhile the Kentucky legislature passed a bill taxing theatres 1 cent on admissions from 11 to 19 cents, 2 cents from 20 to 29 cents and progressively at the same rate up to 10 cents on a dollar.

As the Massachusetts legislature approaches adjournment four measures affecting theatres await action. One of these proposes a $5 tax on each vending machine. Another prohibits endurance contests of the Marathon dance type. A third pertains to establishment of a building code and the fourth would alter existing censorship laws.

While the mayor's office and exhibitors cooperated in working out an ordinance for New York City complying with terms of the new state law legalizing admission of children to theatres unaccompanied by parent or guardian, the state legislature rejected a measure proposed by Assemblyman Herbert Brownell, Jr., to authorize installation of bars in stage theatres.

Twenty-three measures to be brought before the Washington state legislature next January were discussed by members of the MPTO at its regular monthly meeting. Most of these proposals would tax admissions to obtain funds for old age pensions, one of them by doubling the present levy.

Fred Althauser Buried

Funeral services were held in Cincinnati last weekend for Fred J. Althauser, 70, president of Local 5 of the Stage Employes' Union. Mr. Althauser, who had been a stagehand at the Shubert and Strand for 30 years, died of heart failure after an illness of two years.

Albert L. Duhaime Dead

Albert L. Duhaime, theatre manager in Mystic, Conn., for 25 years, died late last week in Providence, R. I.

Carl E. Edwards Dead

Carl E. Edwards, for 22 years a manager of several Detroit theatres, was found dead last weekend in a cottage near Milford, Mich. He was 59. Doctors said death was caused by a blood clot in the heart.

Two Against the World

(Warner)

Melodrama

One does not have to look long before seeing that this is a revamp of "Five Star Final." Thematically it's the same melodrama, the vivid and naturally novel difference being that a radio station replaces the yellow journal newspaper as a scandal broadcasting medium. It's the story of an unscrupulous man, one who worshipped only at his own altar of greed, avarice and inhumanness. It is the grim story of one who delves into the past for hidden skeletons, broadcasting scandal that wrecked innocent homes, purveying sensational thrills at the expense of unsuspecting victims. He leaves a trail of heartache, heartbreak and tragedy. Not a murder with a gun or knife in his hand, he is a killer that brings death to two whom he persecutes. Hated by those upon whom he wreaks his greed for power and wealth; detested by those who have to be associated with him to do his dirty work, he is the perpetrator of a crime that whirls a helpless girl into a turmoil of terror on the eve of her marriage and brings death to her father and mother. Without comedy relief, it also tells a story of tender romance in the shadow of disaster.

The picture is played with realism and conviction. In it Robert Middlemass, Humphrey Bogart, Beverly Roberts, Helen McKellar, Henry O'Neill and Linda Perry give striking performances. As the dialogue and action closely parallel that of the picture and story which undoubtedly suggested it, the showmanship treatment it makes possible can easily be recalled by those who played or saw "Five Star Final."

Previewed in Warner's Downtown Theatre. Though audience indicated a familiarity with the story, it also evidenced a tense interest in the dramatic manner in which it was narrated by a new group of players.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Screen play by Michel Jacoby. Directed by William McGann. Assistant director, Carrol Sax. Dialogue director, Irving Rapper. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Art director, Esdras Hartley. Unit manager, Frank Mattison. Supervised by Bryan Foy. Story idea by Lewis Weitzenkorn. P. C. A. Certificate No. 2071. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 65 minutes. General audience classification.

Anthony Adverse

(Warner)

Romantic Drama

In the recent several months many fine pictures have come from Hollywood. Obviously they are acknowledgments of demands emphatically expressed by exhibitors and public. "Anthony Adverse" is one of those pictures, one that offers regular theatregoers desirable entertainment, one that legitimately justifies issuance of invitations to irregulars to come and see an attraction worthy of their time and their attention.

In "Anthony Adverse," with producers, writers, director and players contributing equitably to its excellence, the romance and drama of life has been caught with vivid realism. The potential entertainment appeal of living romance and drama has been transferred to the screen with sincerity, dignity and faithfulness. Essentially it is intense emotional drama. It is laid down honestly and in such straightforward spirit that it is beyond argument that the picture will arouse the curiosity, hold the interest and satisfy all who see it.

It provides a title that is widely familiar, a good story, an exceptional cast and production in writing, directing and staging technique, mechanical and artistic effects that overlook no detail in bringing the story to the screen in the full scope of the original. It provides them in a manner that spells class and quality. Intelligently treated so that there is no possibility for censurable objection on ethical or moral grounds, it is solid substantial entertainment. Since the time of its publication in novel form the story of Anthony Adverse has been a subject of deep popular interest. As it comes up on the screen, benefited by that circumstance which automatically creates a vast potential readymade audience, it is a distinctive advance in the art of modern motion picture production and story telling.

"Anthony Adverse" probably was a daring and risky story to experiment with as a picture. Undoubtedly there are a great many awaiting the outcome of that experiment. As produced it retains the full dramatic essence of the original. Smartly, it eschews all that might tend to cheapen its impressive power. There might have been risk, a hazard overcome by the application of intelligence and discernment, in effecting its production. Its presentation should entail no risk at all from this standpoint or any other.

With no sacrifice of anything that means much, but with all that is consequential pungently embellished, the lengthy volume has been effectively reduced to five or six powerful chapters. The story of Anthony's birth, a child of love and passion beyond the pale, and his boyhood in convent school is told. Follows his apprenticeship to Bonnyfeather, a benefactor who for some unexplainable reason knows that he is the child's grandfather. The bond of affection and appreciation that united the two is detailed in faithful sincerity. It is shadowed by the melodrama engendered by Faith, who knows that in this child there is something menacing to her own greed and avarice. The chapter is made beautiful as it presents the love story of Anthony and Angela.

Concluding with their marriage, a short chapter takes Anthony to Cuba on a mission for Bonnyfeather, whose fortunes are being wrecked by the ravages of Napoleon's wars. Then it is Anthony in Africa, a disillusioned man who believes himself forgotten by all he loved. It's Anthony, succumbing to earthly temptations, a cruel, heartless slave trader, vicious in the pursuit of all that is the antithesis of his highminded youthful ideals. The death of his own friend, the spiritual Brother Francois, opens his eyes. He returns to the place of his nativity. Bonnyfeather is dead. Don Luis, his mother's husband, who caused him to be made an orphan foundling, and the menacing Faith are together. He finds that Angela is a great operatic star. The crushing blow to a man who would live honest in the sight of God and man again is when he learns that Angela is Napoleon's paramour. Only in his seven-year-old son does he see a vision of a new life, a life together with the boy in America.

Sufficiently worthy of their talents, the story is told with finish and conviction by Fredric March, Olivia De Havilland, Edmund Gwenn, Claude Rains, Anita Louise, Gale Sondergaars, Steffi Duna, Ralph Morgan, Henry O'Neill, Luis Alberni, Rollo Lloyd, Eily Madyon and Paul Sotoff in the principal parts and by almost a score more accomplished players in minor character and atmospheric roles. As expert as are their work and the directorial effort exerted by Mervyn LeRoy in bringing the story within the comprehension of any and all, the interpretative musical accompaniment arranged by Erich Wolfgang Korngold is an artistic and entertainment treat. One can close his eyes and, unmindful of other sound, hear a thrilling symphony.

A big picture, "Anthony Adverse" comes up to all expectations. Additionally to providing showmen with all the formula essentials, it gives them a story, new, different and powerful into which they may sink their teeth. Anyone seeking something different to sell will find plenty in the picture to engage his attention and abilities.

Comedy Melodrama

Comedy mystery melodrama is the tune this picture sings. In it the Erle Stanley Gardner-Perry Mason formula, as established in a succession of previous shows, is pretty much switched around. It's done in such a way that probably won't mean very much to anyone; nevertheless it succeeds in attaining the objective of providing about an hour's amusing entertainment. Though the basis for most of the show is dramatic mystery, a killing which has the usual quota of multiple suspects, the manner in which the comedy angle has been interpolated does give the attraction a bit of novelty that may serve as a medium upon which to peg some different exploitation leads.

The picture starts with Mason (Warren William) marrying his secretary, Della Street (Claire Dodd). Set for a honeymoon, Perry, who has promised Della that nothing shall interfere with their connubial bliss, is strongarmed into taking a case by Mrs. Belter. It develops that Mr. Belter, blackmail sheet publisher, is getting ready to give politically ambitious Mr. Milnor a going over that will be disastrous to his civic ambitions. The reason is that Belter knows that Milnor has been going out with his wife. Belter is murdered. Everyone thinks Mason did it and he, in turn, is suspicious of everybody. Between dodging police and phoning Della he'll be home any minute, Perry, with the aid of comedy stooge Spudsy, digs up a few clues. Disgusted, Della meantime goes back to the marrying judgess contemplating divorce, but in an odd manner Perry solves the case, to prove not only that he did not do it, nor did the one who thought she did, but someone who wanted Belter out of the way so he could inherit his money. Making peace with Della, the finale of the picture indicates that the honeymoon won't ever get under way.

The King Steps Out

(Columbia)

Musical Comedy

Grace Moore's singing is, naturally, the prime box office factor, and exploitation based upon it may be unrestrained because she sings six new songs and each is given exclusive screen prominence as it is sung. It is also advertisingly notable that the melodies were composed by Fritz Kreisler, a name that links effectively with that of the star. Franchot Tone and Walter Connolly are probably best of the supporting names for commercial purposes. Josef von Sternberg was the director.

The picture is swift as to action, save when pace is broken for the song numbers, and the period is colorful. The setting is Austria and Bavaria in the middle of the 19th century. Palace scenes are elaborate. A carnival in which the population celebrates the emperor's birthday provides a gay and picturesque sequence. Scenes in the inn where the star and her father are represented as quartered are humorous highlights.

Miss Moore portrays Cissy, one of seven daughters of King Max of Bavaria. Helena, her sister, who loves a lieutenant, has been betrothed to the young emperor. Cissy and her father go to the palace to seek to prevent the match. She meets the emperor and falls in love with him, while he falls in love with her without knowing her identity. After numerous complications she persuades him to refuse to marry Helena and, when he learns that Cissy, too, is of royal blood, he announces his engagement to her instead.

Bullets or Ballots

(First National)

Melodrama

Here's something vigorous and meaty that promises much worthy of audience and exhibitor attention. As the title readily denotes and identity of the principal cast names makes more evident, the picture is a melodrama. It paints a new kind of racketeer-versus-police warfare. Modern and topical, it is an exploitation feature that makes available plenty of commercial and civic contact leads, which, properly applied in relation to events and conditions that probably are transpiring in every community in which it will play, to provide excellent sources of business stimulation.

Narrated with a spirit of realism and conviction, the picture tells the story of one man's warfare against rackets and the crime and murder which they entail. One group of his enemies is in the open; the other is hidden and that is the political, financial and social power with the influence permitting the bare faced grafts and rackets to exist. Concentrating on the drama that such a situation would precipitate, the story carries only the barest suggestion of romantic love interest and but meager comedy contrast.

Mobs in control, rackets flourish under the supine administration that has demoted tough cop Blake to an outlying precinct. A crusading editor is murdered, civic fury flames and a new commissioner is installed through the power of the grand jury. Blake slugs Captain McLaren and ace racketeer Kruger thinks the cop has become a sworn enemy of law and order. Over triggerman Fenner's suspicions, Kruger takes Blake in as his right hand man. Immediately trouble starts for all the rackets, large and small, which eventually leads to Kruger's slaying by Fenner. Winning in a battle with Fenner for domination of the mobs, Blake learns the identity of the higher-ups. Going in for the numbers racket, which makes all other forms of unlawful tribute raising look like five and ten cent stuff, he is looked upon as a genius by bankers Thorndyke, Hollister and Caldwell, the hidden forces. With the breakup of his produce racket, Fenner vows vengeance on Blake. Getting information as to his whereabouts from Lee Morgan, the girl in the case who thinks Blake has doublecrossed her, the pair meet. In a roaring gun battle Fenner is killed and Blake wounded. As his strength ebbs fast, he leads McLaren's police to the unholy trio who are caught with the goods. The rackets are wiped out at the cost of Blake's life.

Sticking close to its motivating idea, the picture is played in an atmosphere of grim reality. In this manner, it permits convincing performances on the part of Edward G. Robinson, Barton MacLane, Humphrey Bogart and Joan Blondell. Publicized both as entertainment and as a vigorous educational feature, it can be anticipated that the picture will arouse considerable public attention. As a contact feature it affords seldom paralleled opportunities for cooperation from police departments, newspapers and civic bodies.

Previewed in Warner's Beverly Theatre. The audience watched the picture with undivided attention, creating the impression that they were familiar with all the topical material with which the picture deals and wondering what they were going to do about it.

Secret Agent

(G-B)

World War Melodrama

Espionage as practiced in the world war, specifically by British and German secret agents, is represented as a blundering, bloody and altogether reprehensible department of martial procedure in this W. Somerset Maugham story dated 1916 and possessing much in common, as to plot and incident, with the cycle of spy pictures produced and exhibited in America prior to this country's participation in the conflict. It has nothing in common with them as to treatment of theme. There is no glorification of patriotic duty and no waving of flags. Implication, if any, is to the effect that war is a deplorable institution, a circumstance suggesting a possibility of recruiting exploitation cooperation of organizations active in behalf of peace.

Although most of the action and dialogue is of stern import, a substantial portion of the early footage is devoted to light material, some of it smartly frivolous in the best Maugham manner and some of it frankly slapstick in the bawdy pattern of Harpo Marx, this last including a probably unprecedented use of bathroom appurtenances for screen purposes. A somewhat diffused love interest becomes clarified near the end and figures dramatically in the conclusion. Production technique is notably modern, particularly in the use of sound and montage.

Unless offered bluntly as a world war melodrama, with the cooperation of peace agencies arranged for as suggested by the nature of the treatment, probably the most dependable selling angles are present in the names of Robert Young and Peter Lorre among the players, W. Somerset Maugham as author and Alfred Hitchcock as director.

The story concerns British Secret Agent Ashenden, sent to Switzerland to find and kill German Secret Agent Marvin, whose name, appearance and present alias are not known. Ashenden is supplied with a feminine confederate, Elsa, represented as his wife, and with a male assistant employed to do the actual killing, a rapacious individual called The General. Prior to Ashenden's arrival Elsa has met and been courted by Marvin, posing as an American. Elsa, Ashenden and the General become acquainted in the bathroom sequence mentioned. Marvin believes Elsa and Ashenden husband and wife but continues his suit nevertheless.

The British agents trace the murder of a fourth confederate to Gaypor, a German tourist, and kill him, learning immediately that he was the wrong man. The General makes a licentious contact with a native girl, learns that her sweetheart is employed in a chocolate factory which transmits German secret service messages and bribes him to betray the identity of the man they seek.

Marvin has left Switzerland meanwhile, taking Elsa, who has determined to leave Ashemden and the British secret service. Ashenden and the General follow, capture Marvin on a troop train within the Turkish border and are about to kill him when the train is wrecked. Marvin is pinned under the wreckage and, dying, asks the General for a drink. The General gives him his flask, shoots him as he drinks, and regains and drains the bottle. A postwar flash indicates that Elsa and Ashenden have served throughout the period of the emergency and are prepared to live happily ever after.

Frankie and Johnnie

(Republic)

Melodrama

"Frankie and Johnnie were sweethearts," and eventually become man and wife only to have Johnnie succumb to the wiles of lissom Nellie Bly and the slug of Frankie's forty-four. That, just as in the old ballad, is the plot of this picture and what appears to be the chief exploitation angle. The action limps along until after the wedding of the two principals, which comes in one of the later reels, and through it are interspersed two songs by Helen Morgan, rendered in a none too creditable fashion.

Chester Morris is the fickle Johnnie and the late Lilyan Tashman was Nellie. Florence Reed, prominent on New York's legitimate stage, is Lou, operator of the Mansion House, in which all the drama is enacted, and Cora Witherspoon, Walter Kingsford, William Harrigan and John Larkin round out the cast.

Up the Mississippi on the S. S. Natchez comes Johnnie Drew, ostensibly "just a country boy" headed for St. Louis, but clever enough to relieve several professional river gamblers of all their money during the trip. At the Mansion House in St. Louis, music hall presided over by hard-boiled Lou, he meets Frankie, who is about to marry the long-faithful Curley.

Meeting Johnnie, however, changes Frankie's plans, and after much competition from Nellie she swears to be true to Johnnie—"as true as the stars up above"—and she marries him instead. The husband soon tires of the faithful wife, however, and spends all his nights gambling and meeting Nellie. In short, "he done poor Frankie wrong."

As Johnnie plans to travel down the river to New Orleans for a fresh start, Frankie seeks to go with him and borrows money from Lou for the trip. Johnnie, however, intends to take Nellie instead and as the horrible truth dawns on Frankie she takes up her gun and the final scenes deal with the unfaithful Johnnie's funeral as Curley reappears to comfort Frankie in her great sorrow.

Reviewed in a projection room with an audience composed of newspapermen and fluffy dowagers, all of whom remained silent throughout the entire film and continually fidgeted in their seats, perhaps from the heat.

Fatal Lady

(Paramount-Wanger)

Melodrama

It's novel, to say the least, this idea of mixing weird, baffling murder mystery and grand opera music in a picture. That's what "Fatal Lady" is—a melodramatic, suspense packed murder mystery embellished with grand opera. If that was all it afforded, it would, from a standpoint of difference, be a subject worthy of patron and exhibitor interest. But the unique amalgamation is only one of the many features incorporated in this picture. As a straight musical show featuring Mary Ellis' voice rendering arias from several operas as well as specialty numbers, it has much to interest class audiences, particularly those who have a real appreciation for good music. As a murder mystery, encompassing in a forceful way all the elements common to this type of picture, it is a thrill action show of the character and caliber in which the masses have demonstrated an interest.

Possessed of an attractive title which in itself and without the support of other commercial features can be made the basis of an intriguing interest creating campaign, the show at first sight offers several substantial but not any too strong cast names. It has a different idea. It is conceived, directed, played and written in a manner to give exhibitors and theatregoers something out of the beaten track. On close analysis, taking all it offers and particularly audience reaction to its preview into consideration, the resulting entertainment is of a grade for catching popular fancy probably more quickly than exhibitor attention.

With the fatal lady of the show, Mary Ellis, playing with assurance and conviction and singing in a manner that is an artistic treat, the picture is played in a realistic and believable atmosphere. As Maria Delesano, she is an exotic diva who brings the male world worshiping at her feet and leaves a trail of tragedy. Freed of complicity in a New York murder mystery, she goes to South America, pursued by Phillip Roberts, whose affectionate admiration is ardent. Star of a smalltime opera company, which permits the introduction of the continuous musical embellishment, she is befriended by Malla. Conflicting romance involving him, Phillip and Fontes builds tense drama. Malla is mysteriously slain. Maria is suspected, tried and acquitted. With maestro Glinka she goes to Europe, pursued by Phillip and his elder brother David, who is determined to save the boy from the sure tragedy of the fatal lady's fascination. As much attention is given to music, Phillip is killed and the circumstances this time are such that David knows that Maria cannot be guilty. Determined that he shall unravel the weird melodrama, David puts himself in the position of the other martyred lovers in relation to Maria.

In a finale that is vivid in its development of dramatic suspense and thrill action, the killer reveals himself and his motive for murder. Cleverly, so that there is little justification for advance solution theories, Glinka confesses his crimes, explaining that his motive was that Maria's love for music was so great that it never should be shared with love for man.

Keyed to an engrossing pitch, the picture is first of all a class attraction that under the guidance of the right kind of intelligent showmanship exploitation should be made attractive to general mass audiences. In Miss Ellis, who probably didn't have the right kind of vehicle in her previous pictures to bring her forcibly to audience attention, there is a personality with whom smart showmen can do much. Needing selling, the picture undoubtedly will repay those who exert their energies in doing so to a surprising degree. It can't be laid down simply as a novel musical melodrama with a good title, a star of rather unknown quantity and a supporting cast of standard worth.

Previewed in the Alexander Theatre, Glendale. Following "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," which is exceedingly different in character, the early part of the picture saw several walkouts. This is not unusual, no matter what the preview, and those remaining quickly came under the picture's spell and watched with careful attention the unfolding of its drama and applauded several times in appreciation of the music. The applause at the end indicated general satisfaction.

The Clutching Hand

(Stage and Screen)

15-Episode Serial

Arthur B. Reeve's fiction detective, Craig Kennedy, is played by Jack Mulhall in this serial characteristic of the author's works. The immediate occupation of the detective hero is to find out who abducted Inventor Girondo, together with his secret formula for making gold, and what was done with him and it.

A great deal of fast action had led to this state of affairs and little stress had been laid upon romantic or comedy factors. Aside from television and, of course, the premise that gold can be manufactured by formula, no resort to the miraculous or fabulous is made.

LEGISLATION PROBLEM OF SANCTIONS

amazingly transformed and its uses mechanically multiplied thousands of times, between its first acquisition or creation as a copyrighted literary, dramatic or musical source material for production purposes, and the last run exhibitions of the production in Thief River Falls, Wyoming, or Six Mile Run, Pa. Even then it isn't dead. There are still the future possibilities of adaptation for new motion pictures, television, wired or radio broadcasting, novelization and dramatization.

Over two hundred million dollars is invested annually in production merely of the motion picture negatives. Additional hundreds of millions are spent for distribution, exploitation and exhibition. Over fifteen million play dates are licensed under copyright in a competitive market each year. 30,000 miles of print circulate every twenty-four hours to handle 50,000 to 75,000 separate daily engagements.

The motion picture industry has no ax to grind. It is not only one of the greatest paying users of copyrighted source materials, but is the greatest creator and distributor of new forms of copyright properties, the motion pictures. Yet it seeks no advantages. Nor does it have any objection to reasonable amendments provided they will protect its vast and delicate mechanism.

More so than any other business, it gambles tremendous investments on future commitments which are not staples. It is unique in appealing to mass consumption of a single work rather than mass production. Its products are not sold, like Fords or washing machines, at a fixed price F. O. B. Hollywood, but at prices compatible with each customer's individual ability to pay. Above all, therefore, the producer desires certainty and clarity in the law. The producer does not want to buy a pig in a poke in the form of a dramatic, literary or musical source material of questionable copyright title, and spend a fortune adapting it into a motion picture production to be placed in the hands of thousands of secondary performing users, the theatre owners. Whether the copyright term be 28 years or 56 years, or the life of the author plus 50 years, is not as important to the producer as: what day a copyright begins; when does it end; what is the extent of its rights in the meantime; and who must be paid for such rights.

What does the newly created copyright, the motion picture production, require from the copyright law? Producer and distributor, as well as the licensing exhibitors, require adequate legal sanctions to protect the only market, licensed playing time, against unfair, unethical and illegal competitive exhibitions by non-licensing users.

Fundamentally speaking, the industry's attitude on copyright legislation is that it is on the anxious seat lest salve applied to cure a minor ailment create a major disease.

Legislation a Problem of Sanctions

What approach is necessary for an intelligent understanding of the copyright controversy? First and foremost, something rather neglected, namely, a little homely philosophizing on the fundamentals of private property, still the basis of our social and economic system. What is the function of the law of contracts, the law of torts, and the law of crimes in our American system? And how is this related to copyright?

Merely by membership in society and without regard to any assumed private contract, each of us owes a duty to the property owner to respect his property rights. If we trespass upon, negligently or wilfully injure, damage, or destroy, or appropriate or use another's property, without his consent, we violate this general social duty. The law says we commit a tort, as distinguished from breaching any personal obligation created only by a specific contract with the owner. Legal sanctions therefore arise whereby the injured property owner can recover the damages under either the statutory or common law of torts of the particular State. If our conduct is such as might possibly tend toward a breach of the peace, the people of the State may also claim that we have violated its criminal laws concerning the private property of other persons.

RESCIND INDORSEMENT OF U. S. CENSORSHIP

National Congress of Parents and Teachers voted at its annual convention in Milwaukee to rescind its 1935 indorsement of a federal motion picture censorship board and limit its legislative campaign against undesirable films to support of the Neely-Pettengill bill.

Many members argued that a federal censorship board might be too easily controlled by political interests and that local influence over exhibitors will accomplish the desired end satisfactorily.

Indorsement of a federal film censorship board was voted over protests of Mrs. Robbins Gilman, Minneapolis, former chairman of the organization's motion picture committee. More than 1,000 delegates representing 25,000 local associations over the United United States and Hawaii attended the gathering.

On the other hand, we may individually create specific obligations concerning a particular property, under the law of contracts. These obligations arise only by virtue of the private transactions between the individuals directly concerned. The extent of the obligations are measured solely by the terms of the specific agreement. These contracts, whether they be purchase and sale or involve future commitments, are the lifeblood of industry, commerce and our daily economic life. They are the normal civilized transactions.

Do you want to use or own the other fellow's property? Then ask him what he wants for it. Are his terms satisfactory? Then make a deal and use the property. Does his price fill to meet your economic requirements? Then forget it and obtain a competitive substitute at more suitable terms. In any event, you must negotiate. Your legal obligations for use of the property will be governed solely by your bargain.

But if you refuse to or cannot make a deal, and still take, use, damage or destroy the other's property on a non-contractual basis, then consider the two-headed ogre of sanctions, the local law of torts or crimes.

But these sanctions are not normal in our daily business life. Most business men conduct their entire business careers without ever a charge that they have tortuously or criminally appropriated the use of property of others. We are so conditioned to this elementary truth that we normally never think of the law. Sanctions become realistic only to the dead-beat caught taking a newspaper from a stand without leaving his three cents, putting a slug in a subway turnstile, walking out of a restaurant without paying his check, or into a theatre without buying a ticket.

How does this apply to the copyright? The copyright law provides the necessary tort and criminal sanctions for a particular species of private property, that in published intellectual and artistic creations. This is a form of property which is not recognized under State laws so as to secure the protection of local sanctions. Section 25 of the Copyright Law, containing the disputed $250.00 minimum damage provision, is the law of torts for copyrighted intellectual property. Section 28 is the law of crimes. That is all there is in the form of remedial sanctions. And they apply only to the non-contracting pirating user of the copyright property.

The average business man dealing in copyright properties is no different from the business man dealing in any other form of private property. This is particularly true of those engaged in the motion picture industry. From start to finish it is a competitive business in which the normal business man is willing to pay for what he uses, do without it, or seek a competitive substitute product on better terms. It is true that the thousands of individual film copyrights used daily in this business are each limited monopolies. But this does not mean that they do not compete with each other at every stage. Authors, dramatists, scenario writers, music composers, and the publishers of their works, compete to sell their literary, dramatic and musical materials to producers. Producers compete for the motion picture rights to these materials and are willing to pay and to pay well for these rights. Distributors compete to secure the greatest number of theatre owners as licensed performing users for each of their copyrighted films. Exhibitors compete among themselves not only for the better product of distributors, but for the preference of public patronage for their exhibitions.

The business man willing to respect the other fellow's property rights, be it copyright or anything else, and to deal with the owner on a contractual basis, need never be concerned about the law of torts and the law of crimes, under the federal Copyright Law for published intellectual property or under the common or statutory laws of the State for other forms of property. The property owner and the property user have no point of conflict as to whether such laws should be more or less rigorously applied. In fact, their interests are identical for preserving their system of business under contract. The honest wholesaler and his honest retailing customer need strengthening of such laws to prevent disruption of potential markets and unfair competition by competitive retail sales of stolen or tortously appropriated merchandise (copyright or otherwise).

Why a specified minimum sum of $250? The report of the Senate Patents Committee, as well as testimony by Senator Duffy, Dr. McClure of the State Department and other sponsors of the Duffy Bill, before the House Patents Committee, attacked specified minimum statutory damages for torts as peculiar only to copyright. Persistently, the old "Tin Lizzie" was driven out for inspection of the committee: if you negligently knock the fender off my Ford, should I have the right to sue for minimum damages of $250 for this tort to my property?

But is this a fair comparison? In the first place, copyright property is intangible, yet capable of thousandfold intangible misappropriations by users. Secondly, statutory minimum damages for civil torts to person or property are quite common in the American statute books.

Copyright Infringement Intangible

Unfortunately for the owner, a single copyright is peculiarly susceptible of being intangibly appropriated practically simultaneously, thousands of time, by as many different people, in as many different places. The private property in copyright, under the Constitution, is in the "form" of expression of the author's ideas as recorded by him in a tangible written medium. The property right itself, however, is intangible. It is not in the physical ink marks and paper, or in the celluloid and silver emulsion, on which the expression of ideas is recorded. The typewriting machine upon which a copyrighted play is written is as much the personal property of the author as the copyrighted play itself. The machine can only be in one place at one time, and will ordinarily sustain a single injury. The copyrighted play can conceivably, when published, be in the simultaneous possession of hundreds of thousands of people, each owning the physical material comprised in the book, but without any proprietary interest whatsoever in the intangible rights secured under the copyright for the play itself. For example, the book owner, although in a position to do so, has not the right to reprint it, to perform it publicly on the legitimate stage or in motion pictures, or by broadcasting or television, or to novelize it. A producer into whose hands the book may fall may find the play desirable for a motion picture. Shortly thereafter, tens of thousands of complete performances of the play, through motion pictures, may follow in practically every village and hamlet in the United States. Similarly, an infringing performance could be broadcast over a chain network of radio stations to millions of listeners, with subsidiary secondary performances by commercial users of radio receiving sets.

There would not be an iota of physical evidence to trace or identify these infringing performances. Yet they could destroy the economic value of the copyright. Isn't it obvious that the tortuous intangible damage to the intangible personal property rights under the copyright of the play differs vastly in extent from the tortuous damage to the author from physical injury to his machine on which he types his play or to his Ford which carries his play and typing machine.

One can estimate injury to a staple physical object. One cannot possibly compute, with any pretension of reality, the monetary injury from an isolated infringing use of an intangible property such as a copyright. Yet very real damages are sustained by the copyright owner. The expense of nation-wide vigilance to protect his property against non-contracting users is something of which he is actually out of pocket where he attempts to keep his property inviolate and to preserve his licensing method of doing business. Yet, under ordinary legal rules of evidence, it is impossible to allocate this actual general expense to any particular disclosed infringing use. Therefore, Congress must and has always taken legislative notice of this elementary fact, by providing compensatory, and not punitive, minimum damages to cover some part of the indirect damages for vigilance caused by the existence of pirating users. Although seemingly a penalty to the pirate caught and made to pay, because he could have licensed the use much more cheaply, the Supreme Court has time and again held that minimum statutory damages are a compensation and not a penalty.

THE STATUS OF THE COPYRIGHT CHANGES

Copyright legislation pending in Congress is in a state of "suspended motion," and some obstacles make it unlikely that it will be passed at this session, according to E. P. Kilroe, attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox, who is chairman of the major producers' copyright committee.

If the administration "must" bills are passed by the time Congress adjourns June 5th as planned, the copyright bills will go over to the next session. If, however, Congress does not dispose of all the major legislation, there may be a recess until after the national conventions, and copyrights may be considered at the resumption of the session later in the summer.

In any event, legislators and the state department are working toward adherence with the International Copyright Union in two years, provided our demands for reservations to the Berne conventions are met. The motion picture copyright committee is drafting amendments that will be sought for the industry's protection. Mr. Kilroe probably will be chosen to represent the industry at the international copyright convention which will convene in September at Brussels, Belgium.

Damages Not Merely Withheld Fees

A basic misconception of many people is that the damage sustained by the copyright owner is the withheld license fee. The fallacy of this assumption reveals itself when we consider that a commercial user of music, for example, performing hundreds of compositions per week, can secure a license for unlimited use of a catalogue of hundreds of thousands of compositions for an annual single fee of $50. What is the license value of the single infringing use involved in an infringement action made necessary to establish the composer's rights against the non-licensing user? How can you calculate the damage done by a wholesale beer distributor who prints pirated song sheets for free distribution to customers in taverns?

Of course, the copyright owners would be glad to take these small license fees, provided they are paid in the normal course of business, and without the necessity of detection of use and prosecution of rights in the courts. Realistically speaking, motion picture distributors would rather normally collect an average of $20 daily for each of 50,000 uses duly licensed, than depend upon catching one or two in order to collect $250 for an unlicensed use, at an expense possibly many times as great. The fact that the $250 provision is in the law means that the distributors do not have to collect it, because the 50,000 daily uses are properly licensed.

The essential damage from a small infringement was mostly aptly pointed out in one of the leading cases on the subject of copyright damages. Westermann v. Dispatch Printing Co., 233 Fed. 609, 613:

"Defendant made no profits so far as the proofs indicated; the plaintiff's damages rested in the injury to his Morehouse contract and in the discouragement of and in the tendency to destroy his system of business. To make any accurate proof of actual damages was obviously impossible. . . . Not only does the typical copyright infringement, if not every one, involve indirect damages almost sure to be considerable, but in few cases would one sum of $250 more than compensate plaintiff for his time, trouble and expense in detecting, following up and prosecuting an infringement."

Supporters of the Duffy Bill claim that the court in its discretion will award substantial minimum damages. They lose sight of the realities. Minimum statutory damages are the danger signals for users to illuminate the sign "no trespassing." They are the sanctions which keep millions of copyrighted uses out of the courts because they are normally licensed in the course of every day dealings in property.

A federal court is not called upon to assess copyright damages in one use out of millions, and in the rare and isolated case which comes before a judge, the sum of $250 is not at all excessive, if we look at the matter in its true perspective. Congress has already done this, by examining the whole copyright problem at extensive hearings and taking this burden from the judicial shoulders. By reason of minimum damages, many federal judges in the United States have never had to preside over a copyright case in the course of their judicial careers.

Sponsors of the Duffy Bill say that the damages are used as a coercive threat to strengthen the bargaining power of copyright owners. Forget music for the moment to which this argument was directed, because bargaining power in the marketing of musical rights may be due to the fact that you bargain for an entire catalogue of musical compositions which have been collectively pooled by composers who might otherwise be competing with each other. Take the motion picture situation. Can any one reasonably say that the $250 damage provision has any coercive relationship in determining the license fee paid by theatre owners who will pay as much as $25,000 to as little as $7.50 to perform the identical motion picture production? Every one knows that an enormous number of factors enter into the determination of the motion picture license fee. For example: the location of the town in relation to other towns; the location of the theatre within the town; the number of seats; the quality and prestige of the particular theatre; the size of the town; the size of the neighboring town; the number of theatres in the locality; the wealth and class of inhabitants; clearance and priority over other theatres; the admission scale; the age and appearance of the theatre; the exploitation capacity of the managership; the competition between distributors to secure the particular theatre as an outlet for their product; the competition between theatre owners to secure what they deem the better grade of product; the past experience of the exhibitor with a particular distributor's product. Furthermore, consider the very important fact of indeterminate fees based solely upon a percentage of the theatre's drawing power.

Copyright Bureau Educated Industry

The fact of the matter is that the distributors, through the educational and vigilant activities of their Copyright Protection Bureau, have so educated the industry to the existence of the $250 minimum damage provision and that the distributors will not tolerate piracies, that the matter of unauthorized exhibitions is becoming a negligible factor. This was not the case nine years ago when this activity was first established. Distributors were then losing millions through bicycling, switching, and holding over without license from the distributors. Today exhibitors are making bookings for all their available playing time. Of course, there are still some exhibitors who will chisel. Most of the complaints coming to the bureau today are from the licensed exhibitors who demand protection from the unfair competition of pirated exhibitions in their localities, whether such exhibitions be theatrical or non-theatrical.

Minimum Damages Quite Common in Statutes

Most of us are aware that the States have statutes in great variety providing for minimum fines, forfeitures, and penalties payable to the State or its political subdivisions. Very few are apparently aware that practically all States have some form of minimum statutory damages for torts to person or property recoverable in civil actions in the civil courts by the person aggrieved from the offender. There never was any particular occasion to compile such statutes until the assertion was made at the hearings in Washington that minimum damages for tort was a peculiarity only of the copyright law. The writer made a brief investigation of the statutory laws of a dozen or so states selected at random, and compiled a list which was inserted in the record of the hearings before the House Patents Committee. Mississippi laws came in for some considerable attention on this point. It was pointed out that a very substantial portion of the law of torts in Mississippi for property damage provides specified minimum sums. For example: $50 for each white oak tree cut down, girdled, carried away, or from which a main limb is removed (e. g., 10 trees, $500 minimum; 100 trees at least $5,000); $50 per tree also for fruit trees; $15 for other trees; $20 per bush, shrub or plant (e. g., 25 strawberry bushes, $500 minimum). Carelessly allowing a fire to run on to or to start on some one else's land, means payment of minimum damage of $150 to the landowner in Mississippi, regardless of the actual damage, plus in addition all actual damages sustained to grass, timber, fences, fruit, land and buildings. In Mississippi, a railroad tortuously converts a carload of freight when it fails to deliver the same to a connecting carrier with reasonable diligence, and is liable to the consignor in a civil action for the full value of the freight, plus a statutory additional amount of 10 per cent of 25 per cent of its value. Assume the freight was worth $10,000. The owner recovers $10,000 plus statutory additional damages of $1,000 to $2,500.

These laws were not unusual, but typical of many other States. In Georgia, the minimum damage in the connecting railroad situation is expressly specified at $1,000, regardless of the value of the cargo. Some statutes, instead of providing specified minimums, direct methods of calculating such minimums, such as doubling or trebling or adding a percentage of the damages actually proved. Others will specify particular sums per unit of property, such as $50 per tree, $5 per can of milk, or $15 per passenger illegally transported by a non-licensed ferry in competition with a licensed ferry, or $25 per day until the violation ceases. The anti-trust laws, as well as many public utility laws, provide for trebling the damage to the injured business, and this is similarly the method used in many states for damage to land, trees, timber, coal, oil or minerals.

"LADIES WILL PLEASE REMOVE THEIR HATS"

Mrs. David Ross, president of the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays, has written a letter to R. R. Bair, president of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, which reads:

"Despite the fact that women's hats are far from the Merry Widow types of the Gay Nineties, innumerable complaints have been made that the present headgear obstructs the view of the screen. We would suggest that your members request women to remove their hats in the theatre."

Substantial specified minimum damages are provided in many States for damage to property by railroads or carriers, such as arises from their failure to furnish icing for perishable shipments; give correct statements of carload weights; transport freight to or from a connecting carrier; build cattleguards; give equal facilities to the shipment of merchandise. The foregoing are all torts to property. Many statutes also provide substantial minimum specified damages for torts to the personal rights of individuals, such as: violation of their civil rights in respect of race, creed or color; serving liquor to drunkards or minors after notice to quit; for death caused by negligence (varying in amount in the case of common carriers, in employment, out of employment); for accidental death in employment; for failure of telegraph companies to transmit messages impartially; for failures of railroads or public utilities to adjust claims for overcharges within 60 days; or for refusing to redeem unused portions of transportation tickets.

All these statutes have this in common: a recognition by the State legislatures that these violations must be deterred by warning possible offenders of the damages they can contemplate paying to the injured party if they do not respect his personal and property rights under the statute, without any judicial discretion.

Distributors' and Exhibitors' Position Not Essentially Conflicting

Testifying before the House Committee in behalf of national distributors of motion pictures, whom he has specially represented in the matter of infringements arising from unauthorized exhibitions for the past nine years, Gabriel L. Hess, General Attorney of the MPPDA, Inc., unequivocally stated that the interests of producers, distributors and exhibitors are identical and not conflicting in respect of copyright legislation, saying:

"The concern of the distributors for themselves and for their honest customers, is based upon the following fundamental considerations:

"Pirated exhibitions of any pictures are an unfair competition to all legitimate distributors. To illustrate: A theatre which is actually open and operating seven days per week, but which pays for pictures for only five days, not only eliminates 28 per cent of its available playing time from the market of such theatre and for which distributors compete, but accomplishes its wrongful acts by using the prints furnished for licensed uses, the property of the distributors. Thus, this dishonest exhibitor becomes a co-competitor of distributors for the available playing time of his theatre which he wrongfully withholds from licensing.

"The second concern is, pirated exhibitions are unfair competition to honest competing exhibitors. To illustrate: The theatre which operates seven days per week, but licenses its pictures for only five days per week, reduces its costs by stretching such exhibitions into two additional days of pirated use, competes unfairly with the honest exhibitor which pays for seven days of use.

"Naturally, the theatre owner who cuts his cost by pirated uses can operate for less and outbid his honest competitor for the better pictures.

"Also, pirated exhibitions at semi-public places such as convention halls, summer hotels, boat clubs, summer camps, and other like places, are unfair competition to the local licensing theatre owners. If section 1-(d) of the Duffy bill is adopted, such pirated exhibitions will not be subject to any control by the copyright owner. Similarly so is the unfair competition from free public shows given for advertising purposes and exhibitions in places such as I have just mentioned, where admission fees are not charged under section 25 g-2 of the Duffy bill."

Property rights in "public" performances only, may be reasonable for legitimate stage plays where the infringer appropriates only the plot and dialogue, but has to put on his own production, at his own expense, with living actors for every performance. Such a limitation is unreasonable for photoplays. The photoplay pirating user only incidentally appropriates the plot and dialogue. Of greater importance, he takes the producer's best and only production and performances, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, and including the services of such stars, otherwise unavailable, as a Chaplin, Lloyd, Garbo, Muni, Astaire, Laughton, Temple, Mickey Mouse, and the Dionne Quintuplets themselves. The entire production can be carried in a can under his arm to be shown at any place, at any time, at a few pennies cost for electricity.

Curiously, no exhibitors appeared to voice opposition to these provisions of the Duffy bill, which would open the field to pirated non-theatrical exhibitions.

Two more problems affecting distributors and exhibitors under the Duffy bill were pointed out by Gabriel L. Hess:

"The third problem is that pirated exhibitions disturb license contract commitments with other exhibitors and the mechanism of distribution. Time in the industry is of the essence in the distribution of motion pictures to theatres. Each print has a definite turnover velocity. The amount of rental is determined by the right to have priority over another theatre. Not only do pirated exhibitions "bicycled" into towns violate some local exhibitor's right to priority, but the delayed return of a print may result in a "miss-out" or "dark house" at a theatre many miles away.

"Remedies for pirated exhibitions cannot be resorted to, if an exhibitor can produce an iota of evidence that any use was permitted by the distributor, or any authorized agent of the distributor.

"In all such cases, the matter is no longer one of copyright law, if he has any evidence at all of an authorization to use the picture.

"It becomes a matter of the law of contract or the law of sales, or the law of estoppel, or the law of waiver, because the use was licensed."

The fourth point stressed by the distributors was the dangerous elimination, under the Duffy and Sirovich Bills (the Daly Bill did not disturb the present law in this respect), of the Townsend Amendment to the statutory damage section, inserted in 1912 shortly after and as a result of the Supreme Court decision in the famous case of Kalem Co. v. Harper, 222 U. S. 55. Under the doctrine of this decision, every exhibitor innocently showing a motion picture where the producer failed to clear the title to some copyrighted dramatic, literary or musical material incorporated into the production, is a secondary performing infringer.

The Townsend Amendment attempted to limit liability for statutory damages solely to the manufacturer and his agencies for distribution, and to exempt the innocent exhibitor, in the absence of notice of the infringement. The proposed amendment will eliminate this safeguard of 24 years standing for the motion picture industry. Yet the Duffy Bill adopts its principle to protect broadcasts over chain networks against such multiple liability. In other words, if the play "Dishonored Lady" (recently held by the courts to have been infringed by the picture "Letty Lynton") were to be broadcast simultaneously over 50 stations, only one station could be held liable for statutory damages. Under the Duffy Bill, if adopted, 200 theatres simultaneously showing "Letty Lynton" on the same night (and ultimately 8,000 theatres) would each separately infringe "Dishonored Lady" and be separately liable for statutory damages.

This is the one instance where the infringing exhibitor may be considered innocent, e. g., where he honestly respects his bookings without knowing that the picture itself infringes upon another copyrighted work. Yet the Duffy Bill, supported by exhibitors, deliberately eliminated provisions in the present law intended to protect innocent exhibitors from such liability for statutory damages.

Where this honest exhibitor does require protection, namely, against pirated exhibitions in his locality by non-theatrical showings at semi-public places or where admission fees are not charged, or against unfair theatrical competition through bicycling, switching and holding over, the Duffy bill destroys the only sanctions by which the distributors can possibly give such exhibitor the protection he demands when he licenses their pictures.

OLD HOWARD, BOSTON LANDMARK, PASSES

The Howard Atheneum, more familiarly known as "The Old Howard," and one of the oldest theatres in the country, having been in operation for the past 85 years, is soon to be no more. Al Somerby is at present operating the house with films and stage shows but intends to close it about June 1.

Long one of the centers of amusement in the Hub, the theatre has been the scene of many a Harvard student escapade. Only recently the management was still pointing with pride to bullet holes in the theatre's ceiling reputedly made by a college student celebrating a football victory.

Perhaps the most cogent presentation of the exhibitor's problem concerning unauthorized exhibitions, is that drafted in 1933 by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and submitted to the N. R. A. as paragraph "37" of a proposed Code of Fair Practices for Motion Picture Exhibitions. It reads as follows:

"37. Unauthorized Exhibitions. The unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture and the doing by any exhibitor of acts which are illegal or in violation of the copyright law or exhibition license, gives such exhibitor an unfair competitive advantage over the exhibitor who is honest, obeys the law and lives up to his contractual obligations; misappropriates a portion of playing time market of the industry; disrupts other exhibitors' bookings and scheduled exhibitions and imposes a burden of expense and waste which must be borne by producers, distributors and exhibitors. Therefore no exhibitor shall engage in any of the following harmful and prohibited practices:" (Note: The unfair practices are then defined in detail under the headings (a) Midnight Shows; (b) Unauthorized Showings; (c) Switching; (d) Bicycling; (e) Duping, Sub-renting, Loaning for Illegal Purposes; (f) Abetting Unauthorized Exhibitions; (g) Late Return; (h) Holding Over.)

Duffy, Daly and Sirovich Bills Contrasted

The producers and distributors were not satisfied with any of the pending bills. The Sirovich and Daly Bills preserved the present $250 minimum damage provision, although the Sirovich Bill neglected to retain the important Townsend Amendment inserted in 1912 to cover a "Letty Lynton" situation. In the matter of necessary protection for producers, distributors, and exhibitors against unlicensed non-theatrical exhibitions, the Sirovich Bill was satisfactory, but the Daly Bill, perhaps inadvertently, followed the unsatisfactory lead of the Duffy Bill. The Daly Bill also introduced a new factor of giving independent copyright to performers in their renditions and performances as distinguished from the copyright now existing in the compositions performed or interpreted.

The Sirovich Bill attempted a partial recognition of this new right to the extent of protecting such performances as are permanently recorded. This new theory of copyright would, of course, introduce highly chaotic complications in the law and among those who deal in copyright. There may be some virtue in the idea provided very careful consideration is given to working out the details in the very limited fashion now possibly recognized under the common law. For example, a fixed recordation of a performance could be classified as a new version entitled to copyright, with the consent of the copyright owner of the composition performed (not necessary if in the public domain), provided that the sole property right granted to this new subject matter of copyright be the exclusive right of mechanically using the recordation for the purpose of communicating the particular performance recorded to the public for profit. This would be a natural extension to other fields of the form of copyright now secured for motion pictures which covers not only the plot and dialogue, but the performances of the actors fixed upon the film. So limited, the only possible liability for the industry would be for the mechanical use of the copyrighted recordation itself in making the picture, which rights can easily be cleared from the copyright owner. Advantages, on the other hand, may be securing copyright in performances embodied in the sound tracks, concerning which there is now some question as to whether they are included in the copyright, such as, for example, Charles Laughton's recitation of the "Lincoln Gettysburg Address," or Barrymore's recitation of "Hamlet."

International Copyright

The industry's position on this question, as expressed by Edwin P. Kilroe, copyright attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation appearing before the Patents Committee as chairman of the Committee of Counsel on Copyright of the MPPDA, Inc., was reviewed in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD for May 15, 1935. The industry is not opposed in principle to international copyright, or adherence under proper restrictions, but the trouble is, he stated, that you cannot obtain proper safeguards under the present convention as revised in Rome in 1928. The particular objections are oral copyright, the inalienable moral rights of authors, and the dangerous amendments proposed on the agenda of the revisions to be discussed in Brussels in September, 1936.

Substantially, American copyright owners generally took the position before the House Committee that they are not willing to jeopardize their present protection against infringement in the domestic market, under the Duffy Bill, for theoretical advantages of infringement protection in foreign markets. This is particularly so, since such foreign markets are steadily diminishing in significance, as a result of tariffs, contingents, restrictive exchange regulations, and political, racial and economic discrimination against Americans.

Paramount Elects Gibson

Harvey Dow Gibson, president of the Manufacturers' Trust Company in New York, was elected a member of the board of directors of Paramount Wednesday to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Percy H. Johnston. At the same time Stanton Griffith was elected a member of the executive committee in the place made vacant by the recent death of Gerald Brooks.

Will Rogers Campaign Opens

On Friday will begin the week-long drive of the industry for funds to carry on the work of the Will Rogers Memorial Fund, centering in the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, formerly the National Vaudeville Artists Sanitarium. Theatres throughout the country will participate in the drive, either through direct contributions to the memorial commission, or by soliciting contributions from patrons. More than 13,000 houses have already reported completion of plans to cooperate during the memorial drive, according to Major Leslie E. Thompson, chairman of the campaign committee. Over 2,200 houses are enrolled under the collection plan and about 10,800 under the membership plan.

Plans are underway for expansion of the hospital's facilities, which will administer to ill and needy members of the professions of the stage and screen.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., was one of the speakers on a Columbia Broadcasting System nationwide hookup Tuesday evening on behalf of the drive. Others who talked included Jesse H. Jones, head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and treasurer of the Memorial Fund Commission, and Major Thompson.

The hospital at Saranac will be dedicated during the week.

Following the precedent of governors of several other states, Governor Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, issued the following proclamation this week:

"Whereas, inasmuch as the Motion Picture Industry has set aside seven days, from May 22nd to May 28th, 1936, to pay tribute to the happy memory of that cheerful philosopher, Will Rogers, it becomes my pleasant duty to co-operate in this National gesture to perpetuate his usefulness; and

"Whereas, everywhere in the United States, the theatres will celebrate the dedication of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, N. Y., which was the gift of the motion picture interests and which will henceforth, administer to the ill and needy of Will Rogers' profession—the stage and screen;

"Now, therefore, I, Harry W. Nice, Governor of the State of Maryland, with great esteem and in affectionate memory of Will Rogers, do proclaim the period from May 22nd to 28th, 1936, as dedicated to the reflection of his distinguished career and his devotion to the welfare of his fellow beings.

"I urge all our citizens to join in this tribute to our beloved humorist and support the movement that will maintain and perpetuate this humane and worthy monument."

New Chicago Theatres Coming, Says Ellman

Plans are practically concluded for the construction of about 20 new theatres in and around Chicago, Henri Ellman, head of the Capitol exchange there, said in New York this week. Although he would not mention names of the builders, Mr. Ellman said in every instance independent exhibitors are behind the projects.

Mr. Ellman plans to return to Chicago this week. He has been in New York for 10 days on product deals.

FOX MIDWEST ANSWERS INDEPENDENTS' CHARGES

Circuit Denies Conspiracy at Kansas City; Intervention of Attorney McKittrick Doubted

Containing charges that independent exhibitors do not come into court with clean hands, the answer of Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., to conspiracy charges against it and major distributors by Emanuel Rolsky and other independents, was filed this week in Judge Merrill E. Otis's division of the federal district court at Kansas City by Sam Sawyer, attorney for the circuit.

Fox said that the plaintiffs are members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, Inc., "formed for the purpose of promoting the interests of and making agreements with respect to the methods of operation of socalled independent theatres."

Till seven or eight years ago, the answer continued, bidding for protection or clearance "was free and open, and protection or clearance over other theatres could be purchased by any theatre which was willing or able to pay the price therefor. The practice grew up of basing clearances (after first and first subsequent runs) upon admission price.

"In the spring, summer and fall of 1935, this defendant offered to and endeavored to make contracts with each of the defendant producers separately for the exhibition of pictures in the various theatres in Kansas City, Mo., on behalf of which it was undertaking to contract, by which specified clearances and availabilities might be agreed upon in such separate contracts."

Charge "Throttling Competition"

Fox alleged that the plaintiffs are endeavoring to restore the practice formerly customary, of basing clearances on admission price only, "and are endeavoring thereby to throttle competition as between the exhibitors in the contracting for films, and to force the distributors to give each of the plaintiffs the same and equal right of exhibition without any competition as between the plaintiffs for the right to a prior run (which this defendant is informed and believes is the thing which gives value to the film or print in the hands of the distributors) and thereby eliminate competition among the exhibitors for the acquisition of the right to exhibit such films."

Fox further asserted that the "plaintiffs have agreed among themselves to form a combination and conspiracy to force the distributors to deal with the plaintiffs in the manner described, and have agreed to concerted action to refuse, and have refused, to purchase films from the distributors (except where urgently in need of films) on any other than the basis of clearances based upon admission price only (sometimes called 'day and date' basis)."

Conspiracy Denied

The remainder of the answer followed in general the answer filed in April by distributors who are codefendants with the circuit. It denied all allegation of concerted action and conspiracy in restraint of trade through the zoning and protection plan plaintiffs allege was set up here last fall.

Fox denied it owns and operates the theatres mentioned in the complaint, but admits that it "owns the capital stock of certain corporations which in turn respectively own, lease or operate those theatres."

Admitting distributors ship copies of pictures in interstate commerce from California, New York or elsewhere to exchanges, Fox denied that such shipping accomplishes the distribution of such pictures, or that producing and exhibiting are essentially interstate in character except as to those parts of the business where interstate transportation is used. In effect the answer leaves it up to plaintiffs to prove that interstate commerce is involved.

Deny Clearance Restriction

Fox also denied (1) that the exchanges are maintained directly or indirectly by major producers, (2) that distribution and exhibition are all one business, and (3) that it (Fox) is wholly or substantially owned by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, or by a corporation subsidiary to it, or by a corporation by which it is owned.

The circuit specifically refuted the charge that it set up zoning or a schedule of availability, runs and clearances. Plaintiffs have not been restricted "by any schedule" in purchasing or exhibiting pictures, the answer contends. Any limitation of clearance, run, or availability are imposed by individual contracts and not by the terms of any schedule. The answer admits that in certain, but not in all, individual contracts affecting the Plaza, there is a limitation on the doubling of a picture singled at the Plaza.

The price schedule of plaintiff theatres was questioned, Fox asserting they do not always maintain the prices given in the bill of complaint.

Some doubt was expressed by attorneys that Judge Otis would be able to hear the case on its merits, the move next in order, before July, and possibly before fall.

Doubt McKittrick Intervention

Meanwhile, at Jefferson City, Mo., well informed legal and political circles were inclined to believe that Attorney General Roy McKittrick will not at this time inject himself into the Kansas City zoning fight between Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., and various independent motion picture theatre owners, now that he has seen fit to dismiss his anti-trust quo warranto ouster proceedings before the Missouri Supreme Court en banc against General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Company and R.K.O. Distributing Corporation.

While the second count of his petition filed with the high court on April 15th was devoted to the Kansas City situation only, the four corporations named were actually joined as respondents to the proceedings. The suit's primary purpose was to clear up the controversy in St. Louis between Fanchon & Marco on the one hand and Warner Bros., Paramount and R.K.O. on the other. The necessity for pressing the ouster suit to a final conclusion was removed when the now famous peace pact was filed with Federal Judge Knox in New York City.

In dropping his suit here and the injunction equity proceedings in the St. Louis Circuit Court against various of the Warner, Paramount and R.K.O. corporations, General McKittrick explained that "everything has been gained that might be gained by a successful prosecution of these cases." This has been interpreted as meaning that he is not vitally concerned about the Kansas City zoning troubles. However, the dismissals of May 12th were without prejudice as to any action on any past, present or future violations of the anti-trust laws of the State of Missouri.

INDUSTRY AT EASE ON TELEVISION COMPETITION

Academy Committee Says Hundreds of Millions Must Be Spent Before There's Any Nationwide Exploitation

Producers in Hollywood, the motion picture managements in New York and Wall Street, and theatre operators in the field who fear the effects of television on their business are needlessly troubled—for television presents no immediate prospects of upsetting the motion picture, competitively or otherwise, according to the industry's own evaluation of the medium.

Radio and television "experts" and others, interested scientifically or commercially in the new medium, have down through the months uttered various predictions as to what might be expected from television, and when. Now comes the word of some of the industry's best technicians and economists in Hollywood, who, after studying the subject for a year, have reached the following conclusions:

1. There is no danger that television will burst unexpectedly on an unprepared motion picture industry, either psychologically or technically.

2. Hundreds of millions of dollars must still be expended before there is any nationwide exploitation of television.

3. There is a possibility of a national television development starting in 1937, more probably in 1938.

4. There is as yet no promise of the enlargement of the television picture to theatre screen size.

5. Television service for rural districts is far from realization.

6. The motion picture will continue to watch the pioneering attempts to make television a commercial reality, and will receive reports as progress occurs.

These conclusions were drawn from a report issued this week in Hollywood by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, following several months of actual investigation and a year's study of the subject. Setting out to determine the present and future status of television from the standpoint of the motion picture, the subcommittee reported as follows:

"The present position of sound motion pictures, confronted by the developing art of television, differs fundamentally from the situation of silent pictures before the advent of sound. Viewed in the perspective of ten years, it is clear that before the premiere of 'Don Juan' and the accompanying sound picture program at the Warner theatre in New York City Aug. 6, 1926, all the elements favoring the transition from silent to sound pictures were present. Broadcasting had already attained a formidable place in the entertainment world, dem-

ACADEMY COUNCIL AND ITS FUNCTIONS

One year ago, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood instructed its Research Council, a sub-committee, to undertake a study of television in its future possible relationship with motion pictures, either as a competitor or as an adjunct. This committee, whose report appears herewith, is composed of the following:

Carl Dreher, Research Council Chairman, director of sound, RKO Radio Studios.

Gordon Chambers, motion picture department, Eastman Kodak, Hollywood.

L. E. Clark, sound engineer, Hollywood.

J. G. Frayne, consulting engineer, Electrical Research Products, Hollywood.

N. M. LaPorte, sound and equipment expert.

Wesley C. Miller, chief sound engineer, MGM Studios, Culver City.

Hollis Moyse, Hollywood representative, DuPont Film Manufacturing Corporation.

William Mueller, chief transmission engineer, Warners Studios, Burbank.

Gordon S. Miller, Research Council manager, and manager of Academy's Technical Bureau.

One of the important functions of the Academy Research Council is to watch developments in other fields which may affect the motion picture industry, to keep the industry informed of trends in other industries which may have a possible future influence upon motion pictures, and to bring to the attention of the producing companies those developments which may have useful application to the industry.

The work of the council is entirely cooperative, designed to decrease production costs, increase production efficiency, or improve the product reaching the screen.

In the council, the industry has set up for itself "a machinery for handling investigations which can be dealt with more efficiently and more economically through cooperative action by all of the producing companies than by any or all working separately."

Federal Communications Commission Sees Dearth of Program Material and Excessive Production Costs as Obstacles

A dearth of suitable program material and the excessive cost of producing feature programs is seen by the Federal Communications Commission at Washington as threatening television even before its commercial introduction, not only in the United States but throughout the world. This possibility, however, is not interfering, from outward appearances, with continued activity in that field pointing toward national commercialization, as witness the following new developments:

1. The Federal Communications Commission has virtually completed assembling data for hearings on June 15th to fix rules governing the conduct of television in its relation to radio, the press and motion pictures.

2. Warnings were sounded by the FCC to the public against unknown television stock promotions.

3. First 50 television sets have been completed by RCA, preparatory to the corporation's first field tests, on June 29th, climaxing $1,000,000 experiments.

4. England stands ready for the inauguration of daily television on July 1st.

5. Japan has appropriated $100,000 to scientists to speed up television.

6. Sinclair Lewis, and others, study competitive aspects of television, to books, radio, the press and motion pictures.

Long seen as one of the most difficult problems to be dealt with and, in fact, a reason why television development has not been pushed with more speed, the program and excessive cost situation apparently is no nearer solution today than it was five years ago, when television was advertised as "just around the corner."

The "corner" cannot be turned until an adequate reservoir of material can be found at a price which the radio-television industry and advertisers can pay.

Call Films "Out of Reach"

Motion pictures, at one time considered as one of the chief possible foundations for television programs, are practically out of reach, according to leaders in the radio-television industry and officials of the Federal Communications Commission who, on June 15, will begin a series of hearings at Washington at which all phases of the television situation will be discussed preliminary to consideration of the assignment of permanent facilities in the way of radio frequencies for the new service.

While sponsors of radio programs have been known willingly to spend tens of thousands of dollars on a single program, it is doubtful if they would care to consider a cost of $250,000 for a single motion picture program televised—yet that is what accountants of the Federal Communications Commission now figure the expense might run into if the broadcasters were to produce their own pictures.

Sees Plan as Too Expensive

On the other hand, it is pointed out, no advertiser would care to spend a lesser sum, but still one running into the tens of thousands, for a motion picture program consisting of films which already have been shown to theatre audiences.

And surely, the FCC's statisticians feel, no motion picture producer would sell the "air" rights to a picture for a few thousands when that same film might gross $1,000,000 or more at the theatre box offices.

From the broadcasters and advertising sponsors' viewpoint, therefore, the FCC feels pictures are either too expensive or unattainable. From the producers' standpoint—which gives consideration to public sentiment—persons who see a picture by television will not pay money at the theatre box office to see it again, nor will they bother much with television sets at all if all they are to get is pictures which they have already seen in a theatre.

Officials of the Federal Communications Commission already are in possession of a great deal of data dealing with program costs, it is understood. On the basis of the information so far acquired, it is calculated that if the broadcasters go into picture production for the purpose of getting air programs they will have an average cost of around $200,000 a picture.

On top of this, the presentation of a television program nationally might involve a cost of as much as $100,000 for time, wire leases and other expenses, it is said at the FCC. National coverage will not come overnight, any more than it did with radio broadcasting, but it will come and the commissioner's hearings on June 15 are designed to develop a long-range policy, in which national coverage must be considered.

In advance of television network service, it is expected there will be a number of television stations throughout the country presenting individual programs. For them, the picture situation would be even more difficult than for the networks since the limited coverage they could offer would not entitle them to advertising rates sufficient for the leasing of new films.

The suggestion has been entertained that television might build up a new technique in the production of "quickies" at a cost of a few thousand dollars apiece.

But the motion picture audience has been educated to a point where it will accept only first-class productions with known players, and the radio audience is even more critical. Leaders in the radio industry do not believe television stations could survive on a diet of "quickies."

Producers who have toyed with the idea that they might build up a circuit of television stations as they have of theatres are said to be about ready to abandon that idea with the realization that the number of television transmitters will not run into the thousands, nor even, probably, into hundreds.

The high cost of equipping a television station will keep out the "little fellows" in radio who have been able to put up 100-watt broadcastings stations, and will also, for a considerable time at least, make impracticable the erection of stations in sparsely settled areas.

For the present, therefore, motion pictures appear to be beyond consideration as program material for the coming television industry, but television is apparently no better off as regards staged shows.

Television experimenters visualized stations with their own stock companies, but consideration of the cold facts indicates that this will be difficult of achievement. While it is true that sound broadcasters are able to produce plays, and the same group of actors can present three or four different plays a week, it is pointed out that in the broadcasting studios no costumes or scenery are needed and players read their parts from scripts.

Same Factors in Presentation

In the presentation of a play by television the same factors apply as to a stage show in a theatre—actors must know their lines and must be costumed, and scenery must be provided. When consideration is given the length of time required to work out a fairly perfect production, it becomes apparent that a stock company is probably impracticable.

One of the greatest difficulties of the television situation seen by the FCC is that shows or pictures can be presented but once or twice, at best. True, the radio audience is driven frantic with the constant repetition of the latest song, but that song is merely an incidental part of a program. Few would care to see the same play more than two or three times, at most.

There remain, then, according to Washington observers of television, the fields of sports and current events. But, here, it is said, the question arises whether people will spend considerable sums of money for television sets for that use only. The Washington observers point out that for every person who likes baseball, there is another who doesn't care for it; the same is true of football, hockey, fighting and every other sport. And news events really worth picturizing have a habit of either breaking several at a time or as sparsely as oases in a desert.

The ideal program, it is said, would be a combination of picture, play, sports and news events. A television station, to be profitable, will have to operate 12 to 16 hours a day. Add the factors up, multiply by the cost—and what the answer will be is what the Commission will seek to determine next month.

Television has been proceeding, principally in the laboratory, unhampered by the stringencies of the Federal Communications Commission, such as those that governed the conduct and advancement of radio and communications. This situation the Commission proposes to change after June 15th, when, after the public hearings, television will be bridled with definite rules and regulations controlling its technical and public entertainment advancement, its commercial possibilities and its relation, as a competitor, to radio, the press and motion pictures.

The FCC still is studying the report of T. A. M. Craven, its chief engineer, as filed early in April. Out of Mr. Craven's recommendations will come the determination of FCC policy on television, in June, when a definite long-term radio and television attitude will be adopted. All radio and television interests will be heard at the June 15th meeting, also newspaper and motion picture representatives.

Mr. Craven is urging the Commission to keep television on an experimental basis until complete commercialization of the medium is effected by television's sponsors.

From Philadelphia comes word, by Associated Press, that Anning S. Prall, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, warned against investment in unknown companies which claim to have basic patents in television.

"They cannot conscientiously or honestly promise returns on investments in visual radio," he told a radio audience, "because they do not know when or how it will arrive. Nor do we."

RCA's $1,000,000 experiments with television will be tried for tangible results on June 29th when the Radio Corporation of America will conduct the first field tests from the Empire State Building. Experimental receivers for the demonstrations are to be placed at various points in New York.

Preliminary to the $1,000,000 field tests, RCA early this month gave an advance demonstration to newspaper editors at its manufacturing plant at Camden, N. J., where television outdoors was broadcast a mile, with the local fire department staging a "fire" as the actors.

The pictures were five by seven inches, of greenish hue. Some blurred, but they were shown "out of the laboratory at last."

50 Test Sets Completed

The first 50 television sets, for test purposes only, have since been completed at the factory of RCA at Camden, N. J., reports Printers' Ink.

These sets, not unlike the modern radio set in appearance, will be distributed within a 20-mile area of New York. At the present time they will show a picture five by seven inches "with the clarity of that normally obtained by amateur motion picture projection in the home." It has 11 controls and 30 tubes, including the large experimental one.

It is the opinion of the scientists, according to Printers' Ink, that television will not be ready for consumer use much earlier than 18 months from now.

In the meantime several of the advertising agencies have delegated at least one member of the staff to follow the tests as they are being conducted. Television will call for an advertising technique entirely different from that advertisers have had occasion to use.

British Service July 1st

July 1st has now been definitely set as the opening date for the British Broadcasting Corporation's regular daily television service, embracing a three-hour daily broadcast of "newsreel" items, vaudeville acts and short motion pictures, covering a 25-mile radius. Dramatic feature films will be tried later.

England already has television receiving equipment scheduled for ten regular motion picture theatres.

Theatre owners in Great Britain have been studying for months the possible effect of television on their box office and, mechanically, on their screens, especially since Jeffrey Bernerd, distribution director of Gaumont-British, was quoted in the New York Times as follows: "Before long our newsreels (GB's) will be broadcast from a central point (in London) and thrown upon every screen in the United Kingdom. The saving in the cost of release prints and the elimination of distribution expenses will more than justify broadcast charges."

England's government - controlled British Broadcasting Company, in anticipation of the daily television service on July 1st, has made the following appointments: Stephen K. Thomas, once stage director to Sir Nigel Playfair; Dallas Bower, who has worked in British studios; Harry Pringle, revue producer: Peter Bax, stage designer recently associated with C. B. Cochran, and G. More O'Ferrall, an assistant film producer. They are selections from 500 applications for posts on the television production staff.

machinery for the new daily service. "Of interest to millions of Britons, particularly those resident in the metropolitan area," he writes, "is a giant tower now taking shape on the London skyline—the lattice-steel aerial mast to be used in the BBC television service. This new landmark, apart from what it may portend in the realm of television, will be one of the loftiest things in the greater city, as it will rise 200 feet higher than the cross on the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral, which is 365 feet from the pavement below."

"At the present time it proclaims," he continues, "even in its uncompleted state, the approaching inauguration of the long-promised experimental service under the ægis of the BBC and in which the transmitters of Baird Television Limited and Electrical and Musical Industries Limited will be used."

Range of 25 Miles

Mr. Grigg intimates that news might at first have to be covered by commercial newsreels and magazine films, and items will have to be short, to prevent fatigue and eyestrain.

The service will be at the outset transmitted for an area comprising London and its suburbs, or will have a range of 25 miles. Alexandra Palace, the site of the station, is located on Muswell Hill, one of the capital's highest hills. This structure, covering more than seven acres and surrounded by many more acres of park land, was acquired for public use in 1900 and is controlled by a board of trustees representing various local authorities. The wing to be used by the BBC is leased from the trustees. Huge sums were expended in converting it into the world's biggest television station.

Japanese Working on Apparatus

Reports from Washington indicate that the Japanese, not to be outdone by their occidental brethren, are spending long hours in laboratories working on television apparatus. Their work has been speeded up by a government appropriation of 300,000 yen (almost $100,000) which will be used to erect a television transmitting station, according to reports received in official sources at Washington.

For more than ten years Nippon laboratory workers have been experimenting with visual broadcasting. Opinion varies as to the time it will reach the practical stage, but Dr. K. Takayanagi, one of the leading experimenters, believes it will be technically feasible to start broadcasts by the end of 1936. The main problem, he believes, is to get set makers interested in producing equipment that the public can afford to buy.

His optimism is not shared by officials of the official Japanese Broadcasting Corporation, who are concerned about practical phases of the problem. Dr. Takayanagi experimented for some time with a television process that required use of motion picture film, with a lag of several minutes between the time the pictures are taken and the time they are placed on view. Recently he has taken more interest in the electrical scanning systems, which are used by many leading American experimenters.

At Waseda University, in Japan, efforts are being made to produce natural color television and a new type of mirrorwheel is being used by the experimenters, according to the Washington reports.

Japanese scientists have acquired equipment from other countries and have had some success in duplicating some of the delicate apparatus. According to word received at Washington from the United States Trade Commissioner at Tokio, Carl H. Boehringer, some 27 patents have been granted for Japanese television developments.

Sinclair Lewis Skeptical

Sinclair Lewis, the novelist, told members of the American Booksellers' Association the other evening that they might be permanently doomed to smaller profits, but that the book was here to stay despite its mechanical competitors. He spoke at the association's thirty-sixth annual banquet in the Hotel Pennsylvania.

"I do not believe that any nimble television apparatus, any series of phonograph records, any ingenious microscopic gadget whereby you can carry the entire works of Balzac in your cigarette case, will take the place of books, just as we know them," he said.

onstrating that reproduced sound was acceptable to the public. The electric phonograph had reached a high degree of development. Public address systems had been used in the last Liberty Loan drive during the war, at President Harding's inauguration in 1921, and subsequently in national political campaigns and other events calling for the distribution of sound to large audiences. Electrical interlocks had been applied in industry, and were available for the synchronization of scene and sound. The technological obstacles had been overcome.

"Yet all but a few people in the picture business were skeptical. On the technical side, those who remembered the earlier abortive attempts to link sound with pictures, ignored the recent advances in sound reproduction, although the evidences were before them. Once the technical feasibility of sound pictures had been proved, they were sure that the public did not want them. Even after the notable commercial success of early sound pictures productions, this belief survived for some years.

"Excessive Credulity"

"As a result of such excessive skepticism within the industry, the transition from silent to sound pictures was hurried, disorderly, and costly. There is no likelihood of a repetition of such a crisis when television becomes a commercial factor. Instead of disbelief, we have, in the case of television, excessive credulity. Both picture people and the public have been waiting for television for five years.

"Besides psychological preparedness, the preventive factors keeping television from coming unexpectedly upon our industry are the great technical and commercial complexity of the new medium, and the existence in the picture business of technically-trained personnel capable of following the progress of television and giving notice of impending developments.

"Television has reached a point in its laboratory development where a small picture (about 6 by 8 inches) with moderate entertainment value, can be transmitted, but with far more complicated equipment than motion picture recording and sound broadcasting require. The cost of development up to this point may be measured in millions of dollars. Before there is any possibility of nation-wide exploitation, hundreds of millions of dollars must be expended for numerous transmitting stations of limited range, connecting cables of new design, and receivers. None of these things can be obtained overnight. There is a possibility of such a development starting in 1937, or more probably in 1938. It should be noted that its scope, as far as we can prevision it, is limited to home entertainment purposes in urban areas.

"Barring revolutionary inventions, there is as yet no promise of the enlargement of the field of television to theatre screen size nor of an extension of the, possible service area to rural districts in this country.

"In the United States a start is being made in reducing television to practice in the field. A new transmitting station is being installed in the tower of the Empire State Building for an experimental service in the City of New York, to begin this fall. About 150 receivers will be furnished to selected observers. These receivers are being manufactured at a cost of probably several thousand dollars apiece, and even upon a quantity production basis it is difficult to see how the cost of the present design could be reduced below $300.00.

Sees No Sudden Appearance

"A new type of cable, suitable for the transmission of television images, is being installed for tests and possible subsequent commercial use between Philadelphia and New York City. Similar developments are in progress in England, Germany, France and other countries. In 1937, therefore, considerable data should be available on points which are now obscure.

"This Committee has been making a study of the technical progress of television during the past year, and possesses a general knowledge of the principal systems under development. A bibliography of the available literature has been compiled and is being kept up-to-date.

"We will endeavor to keep in touch with the pioneering attempts to make television a commercial reality and as progress occurs, reports will be made from time to time. Other than this no action by the Research Council of the Academy appears to be called for during the balance of 1936.

"There appears to be no danger that television will burst unexpectedly on an unprepared motion picture industry."

BOOK REVIEW

FILM AND THEATRE, by Alardyce Nicoll. Thomas Y. Crowell Company. 255 pp. $2.50.

Alardyce Nicoll is chairman of the department of drama at Yale University. His book is by no means the pedantic work it has become habitual to expect from a professorial source. It is a sound, soberly presented report of open-minded study penetrating deeply into the practices and potentialities of film and theatre techniques, both independently and in comparison, and it is a book that anybody in any branch of the motion picture industry, or art, will be repaid by reading.

Mr. Nicoll approaches his subject coolly and deals dispassionately with each of its many phases. He does not bemoan the coming of the film and he does not attribute to it such regrettable manifestations of decline as have been displayed by the theatre in the years of its concurrence. He begins with the premise that the two media are by nature and function distinct, each to itself, and then proceeds to substantiate that premise by a wealth of detailed and documented observation. He maintains that film and theatre may and must progress toward their separate destinies along different and sharply divergent lines which he charts clearly and confidently.

Although he addresses both film and theatre as means of artistic expression, he presents early and holds firmly the point of view that neither may be regarded as successful art if it is not also successful box office. For his frequent references to examples of cinema and stage technique he goes to pictures and plays that have made their mark commercially. There is no pedagogical theorizing unsupported by record of practical application.

In the opening chapter, dourly captioned "Shakespeare and the Cinema," he provides the motion picture industry with a substantial document for use in reply to the pattern charges brought against it from time to time by ladies and gentlemen of hypercritical bent. In a paragraph that runs a page he describes the beginning of an expressional medium, employing all the abusive phrases and accusations habitually applied to the cinema, and then discloses that the description is of the beginning of the Elizabethan drama. A quote: "As for the management itself, writers of scripts realized that frequently it consisted of men who, starting their careers as costumiers or pawnbrokers or money-lenders, had taken up this form of entertainment from purely commercial motives and therefore were intent only on what the box office receipts testified to be of immediate appeal." There is much more in equally useful kind.

Now and again the writing is involved, but it is never vague. The point of view never is obscured. The past, present and probable future of the cinema are outlined precisely. Scissors censorship is protested on the ground that deletion of a part of an integrated composition must destroy in greater or less degree the artistic (entertainment) integrity of the whole. Other problems are dealt with in kindred manner. A bibliography names more than a thousand sources. —W.R.W.

FIGHT AGAINST CHANCE GAMES IN EIGHT STATES

Rates for New Premium Plan Are Based on Percentage of Theatre Gross Receipts

Continued antagonistic attitudes of some city and state law enforcement agencies against the chance game form of stimulating motion picture theatre box offices apparently has little or no influence in wholesale curtailment of the practice, or in preventing extension of the idea in new forms.

A new form appeared this week having potential national proportions, and Bank Night franchise holders were preparing to hold their first nationwide convention, even as attacks were leveled at the prevailing chance game forms in Indiana, Kentucky, Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina, Ohio and Texas.

On the other hand, some of the national theatre circuits were preparing to extend their chance game activities, principally Warner, in Connecticut, and Loew's in New York. The former company has contracted to use Bank Night in the Capitol, Danbury; Palace, Torrington; Broadway, Norwich, and Bristol, Bristol, to begin operations next week. Loew's will reinstate Screeno and Bank Night in 12 Bronx theatres starting May 25.

The new plan of stimulating theatre attendance, through the use by the theatre of premiums offered to patrons in return for a specified number of ticket stubs, has been developed by Bernard Hoffenstein, who was engaged in theatre exploitation in New England for a number of years. The plan is being operated under the name of Associated Stub Clubs, with the organization offering the service to theatres at a rate based on a percentage of the theatre's weekly gross receipts.

Mr. Hoffenstein is general manager of the organization, with David Hoffenstein, his brother, as sales manager. The plan has been in formulation for two years, Mr. Hoffenstein said, and was put into preliminary operation about January 1, this year. Thus far, he declared, approximately 40 theatres have contracted for it.

Rate Based on Gross

The rate to theatres has been determined at an approximate base one-half of one per cent of the average weekly gross, the cost to theatres being estimated at from $2 up each week, dependent upon the type of house involved. The rate, however, is subject to variations, Mr. Hoffenstein indicated, since circuits, for example, may undertake volume membership, which would lower the rate per theatre. Contracts are signed on a 52-week basis, the fee payable monthly.

The premiums, which include the products of several wellknown manufacturers, are varied. The organization buys the premiums from the manufacturer and sells them to the exhibitor, as needed, and in whatever quantity required, at the wholesale price. Representatives are being named for various key cities. The theatres already signed are in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas.

Harry E. McClain, Indiana insurance commissioner, plans to take action against persons in several Indiana cities selling insurance on Bank Night awards. According to information reaching state authorities, quite a few persons are offering "insurance" guaranteeing payment of awards to patrons not in the theatre when their names are called. Mr. McLain alleges these persons are operating without licenses.

Meanwhile, in Lexington, Ky., warrants were issued for the arrest of Snowden and Woodrow Stewart, cousins, following a court inquiry into an alleged fraud in connection with Bank Night drawings in three houses of the Phoenix Amusement Company. County Judge W. E. Nichols, who conducted the investigation, declared the circuit was an entirely innocent victim of the deception.

An early decision on Bank Night is expected in Boston from the Massachusetts Supreme court as a result of the closing of testimony this week. The court is sitting for a two weeks term, and is expected to hand down a ruling on the game's legality within the next three weeks.

Thumbs Up Now

In New York, all leading independent circuit heads were summoned to the office of district attorney Samuel J. Foley of the Bronx for the announcement that the district attorney's office no longer would prosecute chance games in theatres, provided they were played according to the law. Within the last few months Mr. Foley has waged a campaign to eliminate all games from theatres in his borough, but a number of cases before magistrates have been thrown out. Several complaints are now pending hearing in special sessions court, but in view of the district attorney's action, it is thought they will be dropped.

In Charlotte, N. C., however, cash giveaways as generally conducted by theatres in North Carolina are in direct violation of the lottery laws of this state, according to Attorney General A. A. F. Seawell.

Municipal Judge A. L. Luebbers in Cincinnati set this week for the filing of a defense brief by Albert Weinstein, attorney for the defendants in an action involving Sweepstakes. Evidence was heard late last week in the case of Thomas A. Reilly, owner of the Rialto; Nicholas Russo and Bert Leder, ushers, and Jack Pendleton, promoter, arrested in the operation of the chance game.

A grand jury investigation of Bank Night in Houston theatres has been asked by assistant district attorney Allie Peyton. Two months ago this request was made by the district attorney's office, but dropped without action. The investigation, it is said, will determine whether Bank Night falls under Texas' lottery laws.

COMMUNITY-INDUSTRY TIEUP FOR THEATRES

Metropolitan Council Starts With Committee to Plan Application of Law on Minors

Stimulation of the public demand for worthwhile pictures, exemplified by the purchase of tickets at the box office, is the aim of the newly formed Metropolitan Motion Picture Council, which hopes eventually to coordinate the film interests and activities of 125 community and cultural organizations, in addition to parent-teacher groups, in New York City. Reaching into many channels, these organizations represent a combined membership of hundreds of thousands.

The sponsors bespeak friendly cooperation with the motion picture industry, and to carry out its program the council will announce a committee to work with one which the industry will be asked to form.

One of the council's first moves is the formation of a committee headed by Lee F. Hanmer, director of the department of recreation of the Russell Sage Foundation, to plan application of the recently enacted state law governing the admission of children to film theatres.

Ask Exhibitors' Cooperation

"Our intention is to coordinate the ideas of persons who are familiar with the situation, in cooperation with the exhibitors and the authorities, with a view to placing the local law on a sound basis," said Dr. Frederic M. Thrasher, associate professor of New York University's school of education and the Council's technical director.

"The committee will contribute suggestions of value not only on child protection but motion picture possibilities as well.

"We will invite the formation of a permanent contact committee made up of representative members of the industry to help us in working out various matters. We intend to cooperate with the industry in a manner so that it will gain the impression that we are not wild-eyed reformers but seek the encouragement of the production of good pictures through attendance at theatres.

Use Preview Groups' Standards

"The council can perform a great many services. It will recommend films on a suitability basis for adults and the family, using the standard sources of critical and moral appraisal, such as those of the National Board of Review and the previewing groups.

"The lists will be published in our bulletin which will be sent to all interested organizations and individuals who are members of the council, with the aim of increasing patronage for better films.

"The Council also will seek extension of the present program for the development of photoplay clubs in the schools which are creating a greater motion picture consciousness through the study of films and film production.

"The Council does not seek to supersede any existing group or activity, but merely to coordinate the activities of all organizations active in or impinging upon the better films movement in New York City and to provide them with counsel and advisory services. It was conceived in an effort to reduce the overlapping of various groups, their duplication of effort and the competition among them.

Audience for High Type Films

"It will be our aim to develop among the younger groups a potential audience for the higher type of picture, to make it easier for the producers to make such pictures as 'Romeo and Juliet' and others of like character which they would like to make but are hesitant because there is not a sufficiently large audience.

"Much of our program will be devoted to the younger generation. Stimulating the discussion of film production in the schools is an excellent idea. It promotes discrimination between mediocre and good pictures and appreciation of the better ones. It creates a motion picture consciousness in the students which they carry through life."

Dr. Thrasher believed that proper education would create an audience for the better film, and that this method was superior to the negative one of censorship.

"In other words," he explained, "by training you can create a sufficient demand for the better picture to make it commercially practicable, rather than by censorship of bad ones.

Start Bulletin in October

"In our monthly bulletin we will endeavor to bring to the attention of those who have the wrong slant on pictures that there is product being made which merits their support. This will be directed to those who seldom receive material on films, or constructive material. It will be especially designed for young people, with a view to elevating their taste. It will point out those films which meet the demands of the discriminating."

The Council's official bulletin, to be known as the Metropolitan Motion Picture Digest, is to be published beginning in October. A membership in the Council will include the publication. Subscriptions will be available to non-members at $2 a year.

The Digest will serve as a clearing house of information on motion pictures for the New York metropolitan area. Among the classifications of its information are these:

Announcements of events of interest to those interested in motion pictures, such as conferences, conventions, special film showings, exhibits.

Listings of films regarded as exceptional and those above average in quality with audience suitability ratings.

Selections of the Schools Motion Picture Committee of films showing currently in cooperating theatres.

Reviews or brief digests of books dealing with motion picture topics.

Digests of articles on motion picture topics appearing in newspapers and periodicals.

Bibliographical data and source materials on motion pictures and related topics.

Special articles on motion picture topics.

Information on motion picture equipment and its use.

Information on sources and availability of different types of films for educational and entertainment purposes.

Descriptions of the organizations and work of various agencies in the field of motion pictures.

Case-book materials. Descriptions of motion picture activities that will include practical suggestions as to the development of activities such as how to make pictures, how to organize photoplay clubs and direct their activities, how to conduct photoplay appreciation activities in and out of schools, how to use films as educational instruments, how to conduct community motion picture councils, and the like.

Sources of specialized information on motion pictures.

Parent Education Also

As part of the Council's clearing house and conference method of operation, it is planned that the annual conference in May will be devoted to the use of films in parent education. The annual fall conference, open only to members, will be given over to the artistic and technical aspects of motion pictures, with presentations by leading industry figures.

The first annual conference of the Council was presented last Thursday night at New York University in cooperation with the university's motion picture course which is conducted by Dr. Thrasher. The principal speakers were Dr. Arnold Gesell, director of the clinic of child development, Yale University, and Dr. H. A. Gray, research associate, Erpi Picture Consultants of Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Illustrative films made by Erpi for the Yale clinic were screened to show, said Dr. Gray, the advantage of the sound picture in recording and perpetuating current scientific research. Close to 400 attended.

Action Over Academy Name

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has filed suit in Los Angeles for a temporary restraining order and a permanent injunction against Academy Pictures, Inc., and the company's distributing organization headed by the Halperin brothers. The action seeks to prevent the film company from continuing use of the trade name "Academy."

Interstate Takes House

Interstate Theatres, Inc., has added the eighth Houston, Tex., theatre to its string with the purchase this week of the Bluebonnet, a suburban subsequent run. L. E. Newton, former owner, will continue as manager. The theatre will be remodelel and redecorated later.

Delay Orpheum Hearing

A hearing on Referee Oscar W. Ehrhorn's report on the bankruptcy administration of Orpheum Circuit, scheduled for this week in the federal court at New York, has been postponed until May 27.

K. C. Managers Convene

Managers of the 24 theatres controlled by the Commonwealth Amusement corporation, Kansas City, will meet in convention at the Blue Hills Country Club June 2-3.

NATIONALIZING OF FILMS FEARED IN SOCIALIST VICTORY IN FRANCE

General Secretary Predicts a Move to Centralize Control of All Business; Would Open Films to Vicious Propaganda

All Films for Export from France Must Have Visas from Board of Control Under Censorship Decree Recently Announced

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

The landslide toward the Left, in the French Chamber election, with unprecedented gains for the Extreme Left, may have a decisive influence on the destiny of the motion picture industry of France. For the first time the Socialists will figure as the largest party in the French Chamber with 146 seats, and the Communists will have 80 seats. The cabinet will be in the hands of the Socialists, with Léon Blum as prime minister.

It is wellknown that one of the most important aims of the Socialist Party is nationalization of industry. In the Socialist program, such organizations as the Bank of France, public and private banks, insurance companies, industrial concerns, railways would be managed by the State under the direct control of the Government. So, too, with motion picture business.

Interviewed a few weeks ago by the weekly fan magazine Cinemonde, Paul Faure, general secretary of the Socialist Party (S. F. I. O.), said they wanted to make a national institution of the cinema industry. "If some day our party holds in its hands the whole political power, it will make of the cinema industry a state institution, this because it is impossible for a Government which wants to induct a new kind of policy to leave a medium of propaganda as strong as the cinema in the hands of groups which may have interests contrary to those of the Government.

"I have the real feeling that a Socialist State easily would make a cinema industry much better than this one of the present capitalist states.

"I would not use the cinema especially for propaganda purposes. Sometimes we could make some pictures showing our social ideals. But I do not think that propaganda is everything in the cinema. The first condition is to make artistic and fine pictures which are entertainment. If the artistic quality of the films is improved, minds of the patrons will be improved too.

Propaganda in Newsreels

"Newsreels would have first to show real things, to be loyal and honest. There will have to be propaganda in the newsreels for such ideals as peace and social equity.

"We would welcome foreign pictures. They bring to our screens an original note. They help us to know the soul of other nations. It would be stupid to ban them. But it would be stupid, too, to open our borders unreservedly to foreign productions. This is a quantity problem which has its artistic and commercial factors.

"It is generally agreed that state monopolies, especially in France, have given very bad results. Some may be afraid that the Socialist state would make pretty bad pictures.

TICKET SPECULATORS SENTENCED IN RUSSIA

The former managers of three Leningrad theatres and several other theatre officials were among thirty sentenced to prison this week by the Leningrad Provincial Court of charges of wholesale private speculation in theatre tickets.

The three managers received prison sentences of ten, three, and eight years respectively. Four minor employes of various theatres were sentenced to ten years' imprisonment each.

The speculation, the prosecution alleged, deprived the state of hundreds of thousands of rubles in revenue.

"State enterprises may have defects, but it is easy to control them, to improve them.

"If the motion picture industry comes into the hands of official organizations where producers and patrons are together represented, instead of being managed by irresponsible state employees as under the present monopolies, it is sure we shall go forward."

The Communist Party has refused to participate in the new Cabinet, and it is certain that the Socialist Cabinet will not be able to apply its program at once. First it must gain the confidence of the nation, and that will not be easy. But, in any case, there is a big danger that the cinema industry will lose its independence.

Would Restrict Freedom of Movement

Nationalization of the cinema industry means nothing but seizure by two main companies, supported and managed by the State, of the whole commercial activities of the French cinema. Business freedom of distributors and exhibitors, creative freedom of producers, independence of the newsreels, all would be abolished.

It is a general report that it is because of this possible nationalization move that the Tribunal of Trade postponed its decision concerning the receivership of Gaumont-Franco Film-Aubert (G. F. F. A.) as well as Pathé Cinema. It is expected that the government will group these two big concerns as the foundation of the socalled National Cinema. The Radical Socialist Deputy Malvy has not forgotten his ideas of a national Studio, nor has Radical Socialist Deputy Petsche dropped his plan for National Distribution directly controlling theatre receipts. Mr. Malvy and Mr. Petsche may both participate in the Socialist Government.

The French trade press is urging complete cooperation of industry elements in a working organization to protect its interests and to protest at once against nationalization plans.

Nothing will be done by the new government for a few months. The Socialist Government will not be officially chosen before June 1, when the new Chamber goes into action. It is reported that the new Cabinet will include a state secretary for radio and cinema, who would be a Socialist deputy.

Censorship Tightened

An unexpected decree tightening film censorship was signed on May 7 by the President of Republic and was published in the issue of May 8 of the Journal Officiel. The decree affects cinema control and public performances as well as exportation of pictures. Here is in short what is the decree:

All films to be shown publicly must be submitted to the minister of national education. No picture can be shown publicly if it does not get a "visa" from the Board of Cinematographic Control.

Visas may be refused to foreign pictures which in themselves are not considered offensive when the producer of these pictures has participated outside of France in public performances of pictures contrary to France's interests.

This means that foreign producers and distributors risk losing the French market if they show films anywhere in the world which displease the French censorship board.

Something similar happened in Spain a few months ago when the Spanish Government asked Paramount to stop everywhere in the world performances of "The Devil Is a Woman," or face a banning of all Paramount films in Spain.

There was such a development a few years ago with "Beau Geste," which was banned in France. So, too, with Rex Ingram's "Mare Nostrum," when the German Government asked MGM to destroy the film.

Board Must See Films First

All pictures must be shown before the Board of Control at least one week before the first public performance or the trade show.

Every picture in foreign language must be shown to the Board in the same version as it was exhibited in its original country, with exact and full translation of the title, subtitles and dialogue, and with indication of the French title as well as the French surimposed titles.

Members of the Board of Control are to have a special card allowing them to go freely to any cinema in the French territory.

Any individual or any company desiring to export a picture out of France must ask the Board of Control for a special exportation visa. The Board will refuse this special visa for all pictures whose showing in foreign countries would be opposed to France's national interests. The exported version will have to be exactly the same as the version shown in France.

A special "French trade mark" must be printed on all French pictures exported and shown out of France.

The opinion in American film circles regarding this decree was that it did not necessarily constitute a threat to foreign producers and distributors in that certain of its powers always have been specified in censorship decrees.

On the other hand this rigorous pronouncement consolidates many powers already held by the French Government so as to provide airtight political control.

Confusion for Distributors

It was pointed out that new features of the decree were its provision for censorship of newsreels (though not specifically mentioned), a police power exercised until now by the Ministry of the Interior, and the requirement of export licenses for French pictures, a feature believed to have been inspired by the recent discussions over showing of the French film "La Garconne."

Increased censorship is looked upon by many as a danger when the "Popular Front" is come into working control.

A first result of the application of the decree has been confusion for American firms in France, as the law does not specify only French pictures but all pictures exported from France.

Paris is now for many American firms the center of the European Continental market and many prints are sent by these companies from Paris to Belgium, Spain, Germany, Switzerland and elsewhere. French customs has refused to send out the pictures if they do not have their export licenses.

A conference was held on May 12 by the American companies to protest against this measure as in the intent of the decree apparently only French pictures were concerned.

Koenig Is Fox General Manager

ERNEST KOENIG

Ernest Koenig has been promoted to general manager of Fox-Europa Productions, distributors of 20th Century-Fox pictures in France, Belgium, North Africa and Switzerland. The appointment was announced by Sidney R. Kent, president of the company, during the recent European sales convention at Paris.

Mr. Koenig had been sales manager of the French branch of Fox for about eight months, and before that sales manager of the French branch of Warner-First National F. L. Harley is now general manager of the British branch.

Georges Rouvier, who for 15 years was general manager of the distributing company Pathe-Consortium-Cinema, has been named by Lacy W. Kastner to be manager of United Artists for the French and North African territories.

For the first time in the history of the famous theatre Comedie Francaise, an English speaking actor appeared on its stage in a classical French rôle May 8 when Charles Laughton appeared in the role of Sganarelle in Moliere's "Le Médecin Malgré Lui." The performance was given as a special post-midnight benefit.

Maurice Chevalier also made his first appearance at France's great classical theatre, singing several of the songs that have made him famous.

For the first three months of 1936 the state taxes on all kinds of shows in France raised 21,100,000 francs compared with 27,453,000 francs for the first three months of 1935, a decrease of 6,353,000 francs.

GTE Assets Bring $4,039,367 at Sale

Assets of the receivership estate of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., were sold for $4,039,367.72 to Robert G. Starr, New York attorney, for the reorganization committee, at public action in the corridor of the Public Building at Wilmington, Del., on Monday. A memorandum of sale was executed once and the approval of the sale was made Wednesday by Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott in chancery court.

The sale was one of the early major steps in the reorganization of the company which has been in receivership since Feb. 29, 1932. United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware is receiver.

The sale of the estate, which at one time had a potential value of $300,000,000, drew no spirited bidding. Mr. Starr's figure for the entire estate was an aggregate of the prices which he offered for 25 individual parcels of the assets. Christopher L. Ward, Jr., Wilmington, solicitor for the receiver, was the auctioneer.

The assets consisted principally of shares of stock, claims of GTE which are collectible, contracts, checks, drafts, cash on deposit in banks, accounts, patents, trademarks, trade names, and good will of GTE.

Two of the larger items were 18,536 1-4 shares of preferred stock of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, which brought a bid of $644,134.69; and 9,268 1-8 shares of common stock of the same company which brought $231,703.13. Bids on other parcels by Stark were: $896,000 for 10,000 shares of capital stock of J. E. McAuley Mfg. Corporation; $309,250 for 5,000 shares of common stock of Theatre Equipment Contracts Corporation; $417,750 for 3,000 shares of $6.50 dividend preferred stock of Theatre Equipment Contracts Corporation; $136,945 for 9,996 shares of common stock of International Projector Corporation; $13,863 for 151 shares of $7 dividend preferred stock of International Projector Corporation; $27,826 for 219 shares of $7 dividend preferred stock of National Theatre Supply Company and $128,947 for 9,236 47-60 shares of common stock of National Theatre Supply Company; $30,500 for 305 shares of capital stock of Hall & Connolly, Inc.; $58,417 for promissory note of J. M. Wall Machine Company, Inc.; $100,000 for 500 shares of capital stock of Broadway & Ninety-Sixth Street Realty Company; $100,000 for 500 shares of capital stock of Ninety-Seventh Street & Broadway Realty Company; $100,000 for 57 1-2 shares of capital stock of Broadway Varieties Company.

The sale of the assets of GTE was ordered by Chancellor Wolcott on the petition of a reorganization committee representing about $25,000,000 of GTE gold debenture bonds. The reorganization comprises Arthur W. Loasby, chairman; Edward C. Delafield, Harry S. Durand, Lloyd S. Gilmour, Arthur Peck, Conrad H. Poppenhusen, Seton Porter, and Ray W. Stephenson.

It is the proposal of the reorganization committee to issue shares of capital stock in the new company and option warrants for shares of capital stock of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation in exchange for secured and unsecured and debentures of GTE.

The authorized capital stock of the new company will consist of 800,000 shares and will be issued in exchange or readjustment of obligations of the old company; upon exercise of subscription warrants issued in exchange or readjustment of shares of capital stock of the old company; upon conversion of debentures of the new company, and for the general corporate purposes of the new company.

F. & M. Move June 1

Fanchon & Marco on June 1 will move from the Bond Building on Broadway to the RCA Building in Rockefeller Center. The company will occupy half of the 14th floor. Harry H. Thomas has taken an office on the 21st floor in the RKO Building, Rockefeller Center, where he will make his headquarters for the handling of from eight to 12 James A. FitzPatrick pictures.

Documentary Film Program

A series of documentary pictures produced in five countries, England, Russia, France, Germany and the United States was shown last Sunday to Congressmen, diplomats and others in the Grand Ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel.

Film Board Reopens Offices

Ruth Doyle, executive secretary of the Portland, Ore., Film Board of Trade, has reopened permanent offices of the organization at 510 Columbia Building.

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We've got the itch again. Yes, sir, and we've got it bad, too. It is not of the seven-year variety but it is the itch to get out and call on the boys. We don't know just where we will go this time. We had to cut our Wyoming trip short when those high elevations got us dizzy. Now we're waiting for Denny Shea of the HERALD office to tell us where we're going next. He may send us to Kansas, Colorado, Idaho or to Missouri; anyhow we want to go somewhere, for the boys in all of these states need looking after. They are all a nice bunch of fellows but some of them need watching.

Sometimes we have an experience that gets hold of our mind and sticks. We had such an experience once up in a lake in Minnesota when we hooked a northern pike that weighed over twenty-four pounds and he got away from us; we couldn't land him, and when we were telling of this to the boys one of them asked how we knew he weighed over twenty-four pounds if he got away, and we replied: because we were using a twenty-four pound test line and he broke it. There's no doggone sense in asking such a fool question anyway.

But speaking of things that stick in your mind. We had such an experience here at the Moon theatre. We went and saw "Rose Marie," in fact we went and saw it three times, and when we go and see a picture three times it is evidence that it sticks and sticks tighter than our experience with that northern pike.

Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddie, Gilda Gray and Allan Jones are the principal performers. The picture opens with some grand opera music in the Royal theatre. Some of you may not care for the grand opera part but you will be more than pleased with the beautiful stage settings. From here on you will be wide awake. Jeanette has a brother who had killed a mounted policeman and is hiding out in an Indian's hut up in the mountains and when Jeanette starts out to find him she falls in with Sergeant Eddy of the Mounted, who conducts her through the mountains and they stop to see the annual Indian harvest festival, and you will see a real festival, too.

The mountain scenery and the beautiful lakes will stick close to you if you have been in the mountains, as we have a number of times, and when Sergeant Eddy rows Jeanette across a beautiful lake in a canoe and sings "Rose Marie," if you don't say it is the most beautiful and touching scene you ever saw then we don't know pictures, and maybe we don't, as we have only seen several thousand of them. This picture is mostly taken right up in the mountains. Both Miss MacDonald and Sergeant Eddy have very wonderful voices, and the theme of "Rose Marie" is a very delightful one.

There is a lot more to this picture but you will have to see it to fully appreciate it.

Did any of you boys ever play "Everybody's Old Man,;" with Irvin Cobb, Rochelle Hudson, Norman Foster and Johnny Downs? This one is based on the rivalry of two canning factories. Cobb was the owner of one and his friend (who had died) was the owner of the other one, but they had a crooked manager who was trying to run the plant down so he could buy it.

Rochelle Hudson and Johnny Downs were the children who squandered money like there was no end to it until Irvin bought the plant and was made the guardian of these two children, and did he tell those young folks where to get off? Boy, he snubbed 'em right up to the hitching post. You will find this one a mighty pleasing picture and Miss Hudson will impress you as one of the handsomest performers on the screen, that is, if we know handsome ladies.

"Everybody's Old Man" is the kind of a picture that will please everybody, old or young, thick or thin, fat or skinny, because it was built on a pleasing subject which everybody can understand, and we believe everybody will be pleased with it notwithstanding it may not be listed as one of "The Ten Best" and the critics may not give it very many stars, but sometimes a lot of stars don't help a picture as much as the story and performers do, and the director has a lot to do with it also.

It begins to look now like spring was here to stay, and if Old Man Winter will give us a chance to plant garden and rake the lawn we'll apologize for everything we have said about him, for—

When springtime comes to warm us up
We feel as frisky as a pup,
So we will go and plant some stuff
Unless we find the work too rough.
And if we do we'll probably shirk
And get a man to do the work.
For we can't work as we used to do
Back when a boy in seventy-two.

When we haven't anything else to do, we think of some of the oldtimers and wonder where they are and what they are doing. There's Phil Rand of Salmon, Idaho. We remember being out to his home once when his wife fed us on huckleberry pie and Phil fed us on a lot of fish stories. You know Phil's house is right on the bank of the Salmon river and he could catch salmon right out of his bedroom window without getting out of bed.

Then there was Grasshopper Sprague of Goodland, Kansas. The last time we saw Grasshopper was in his home in Hollywood, and we were both sober, but it wasn't our fault. Goodland is out in the western part of Kansas where those dust storms have been coming from, but we doubt if Grasshopper had anything to do with them.

You remember that some years ago the HERALD had an Exhibitor's Beauty contest and Fred Meyer, Phil Rand, E. E. Sprague and ourselves were entered in the contest, and we have always felt like the judges pulled a fast one on us, for we were judged the homliest guy in the bunch. We might have gotten fourth place if Joe E. Brown and Irvin S. Cobb had been in it, but it's rather doubtful at that. The chances are that we would have been placed at the tail of the list.

We wish that Della Goodhand, who operates the theatre at Kimball, Neb., would stick around when we are coming to call on her. That's the way it is with these women: after a man gets about so old he's plumb out of the race with the girls.

Has anyone got a love-song crooner they'd like to swap for a tank of anti-knock gasoline? All inquiries answered promptly. We haven't any.

At Sidney, Neb., we called to meet Carl Smith, the operator of the Fox theatre, and had a very nice visit with him and we found him sober, just as he always is. We had a nice visit with him and had an invitation to come back again some time. We hope to do it, for he seemed to be the right kind of a guy.

We have just been out working in the flower garden and setting out roses and clematis and onions, etc., etc., etc., and our joints are no stiff and sore that we can't tell the truth, and we are going to stop before Ernie rings the bell.

Answer to Question No. 17

Bluebook School Question No. 17 was: (A) What is a straight high-intensity light source? (B) In a storage battery, where does the lead sulphate come from? (C) What is the first step in locating sound equipment trouble of any sort?

The following made acceptable answers to previous questions too late for regular credit: No. 16, W. Edmonds; No. 16, W. Limmroth; No. 15, H. Polies; No. 16, A. F. Sprafke; No. 16, W. C. Brown; No. 15, E. H. Toedte; No. 16, H. B. Smith.

Acceptable replies to No. 17 were received from S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; J. R. Prater; B. DeVietti; R. A. Hooker; W. C. Brown; A. F. Sprafke; W. Limmroth; A. L. Cooper; G. E. Doe; P. and L. Klar; M. and J. Devoy; D. Pollock; F. L. and N. Savlor;; L. B. Hardy; J. McGuire and L. Henderson; W. D. Samuels; W. W. Williams; C. Hawkins; N. R. Tomlinson; O. F. Daniels; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; E. N. Quinn, H. T. Bell, L. Nathan and S. D. Singer; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; H. T. Granger; D. Emmerson; K. D. Cohn; R. D. Nadell and T. H. Samuels; W. J. Larcher and L. H. Morgan; H. K. Abernathy, R. Tomkins and B. L. Shaw; Nic Granby; B. M. Powell and N. T. Brown; R. Mills and J. R. Perkins; H. D. Lally; W. Burns and T. R. Fanning; C. L. Sexton; H. H. Langtry; H. E. Thompson and J. Zanuck; F. C. Nalor; G. Thompson; H. F. Friedlander; P. Hagerty; R. Holmes, C. J. McCabe and J. L. Sharpe; N. Matthews and P. J. Ferguson; H. L. Heggen and L. Marks; G. D. Jones; L. A. Keller; R. L. Morton; F. Powell; T. T. Harper; M. L. Lawrence and J. W. Ruther.

Answering Section A, J. R. Prater says, "A straight high-intensity light source is a lamp equipped with high-intensity carbons, the light from which is collected by a collector lens, passed on to a converging lens that converges it to a spot at the projector aperture. It is the most brilliant light source available for projection and will produce as high as 800 candle power per square millimeter of light source area. Properly handled, a 13.6-mm. carbon trim burned at 120 amperes will produce approximately 63,000 candle-power. For comparison, the reflector type H. I. arc has a unit brilliancy of from 400 to 650 candle power per square millimeter, while that of both the old-style arc, formerly used for projection, and the low-intensity reflector type, is about 165 c.p. per sq. mm."

G. E. Doe says, "Straight high-intensity is a term used to differentiate between the high-intensity light source which employs a plano-convex condenser to collect the light and converge it upon the aperture, and the reflector type high-intensity which employs a convex mirror, or a combination of mirror and wide-diameter, thin condensing lens to do so. Both types have specially chemicalized carbon cores and operate with gas-filled craters that emit light of very high brilliancy."

W. C. Brown explains it thus: "In a storage battery lead sulphate does not form on any part. There may be a molecule or two on the plates, but generally speaking it does not form. In discharging, the materials on both plates are converted into lead sulphate, the electrolyte to water. On charging the negative pole is converted into spongey lead, and the positive into lead peroxide. The electrolyte becomes sulphuric acid."

J. R. Prater says: "Lead sulphate is practically an insulator. Some of this material is formed in all lead-sulphuric acid storage cells on discharge and is reconverted to lead oxide or lead peroxide on recharging the cell. If present in excessive quantities, the sulphate adheres to the plates, especially the positive, in white soluble patches, preventing chemical action, increasing the resistance of the cell, and causing unequal mechanical stresses that may buckle the plates. The most frequent causes of sulphating are over-discharging, too high specific gravity of electrolyte, and allowing the battery to stand for a considerable length of time in a discharged condition."

(C) J. R. Prater makes what I regard as a most excellent answer, as follows: "The first thing is to have a thorough knowledge of the equipment. If one understands his equipment, trouble can usually be located at once, as we have these little aids to help us; namely, our ears, eyes and fingers. The most frequent causes of trouble are of the so-called dead give-away type—that is, that the cause is apparent almost at once, but if it should happen to be more intricate, I start at the exciter lamp and follow right through."

A. L. Cooper, who also made an excellent analytic answer to Section B, says, "The first step in finding any kind of sound system trouble is to ascertain the exact location of the fault—whether it be in the soundhead, amplifier, transmission lines or the speakers. Having done this, it then is only necessary to locate the exact spot in the particular section and take proper steps to clear."

W. H. Edmonds says, "The first step is to check all meter readings, or in absence of meters, all power supply input circuits."

CRITICS HAIL FIRST PICKFORD-LASKY Production WITH A CLOUDBURST OF UNANIMOUS PRAISE!

"Gay farce smartly turned out and done with a sense of humor."
—Rose Pelswick, N. Y. Evening Journal

"Really quite funny, smartly turned, and fanciful with a general lightness of treatment that's rare. In fact, it is astonishing. Farce in the grand Hollywood manner."
—New Yorker

"Rivoli audience enjoyed it yesterday, laughing loudly—its light-hearted romance, cheerful on both a hot and rainy afternoon."
—Eileen Creelman, N. Y. Sun

"This is a very funny, very well written and very well directed picture."
—Lloyd Lewis, Chicago Daily News

"Smart and frolicsome. A splendid cast of comedians—production is handsome one."
—Bland Johaneson, N. Y. Daily Mirror

"Peopled with enough of the bright lights of Hollywood, to insure a successful launching of the first product from the new Mary Pickford-Jesse Lasky studios."
—Kate Cameron, Daily News

"Laughs pack merry film of romance in rain. Not a single unenjoyable minute of film creeps into this rollicking picture. Comedy runs through the film in a rippling stream. Customers walk out of the theatre laughing over the films hilarious hokum and humming the theme song, 'One Rainy Afternoon'. Take my tip and take your best girl to the United Artists. You'll probably find the theatre so crowded that you'll have to sit in separated seats . . ."
—Rob Reel, Chicago American

"Clever and amusing film. Dialogue bright and glossy, and the whole thing is genuinely amusing. Can't think of a better way to spend one of your numerous rainy afternoons than seeing 'One Rainy Afternoon'."
—Carol Frink, Chicago Herald-Examiner

"Decorated with engaging antics. Performed enthusiastically by a crack company and shrewdly directed by Rowland V. Lee. Pleasant entertainment. Achieves considerable merriment—they do wonders in exploiting the funny possibilities of 'One Rainy Afternoon'."
—Howard Barnes, N. Y. Herald-Tribune

"A dandy movie. This is the first film to be produced by the Pickford-Lasky Combination and it's a dandy. A regular champagne of a picture. Sparkling, exhilarating, provocative. It has the sheen of perfect production and is graced by an all star cast. The whole caboodle's A1, the berries, the cream in the coffee and the sugar on the cereal. A most auspicious beginning, Miss Pickford et Mr. Lasky! If you keep on like this, you're apt to become our favorite producers!"

"A merry spring tonic of sparkling comedy. Gay as Paris in the Spring, comes as a delightfully refreshing tonic to screens parched for joyous fables of love and laughter. Bouyant and amusing as a New Year's comedy, iridescent with brilliant satire, bounces with airy blitheness through swift sequences which bring the final curtain down all too soon upon thoroughly enjoyable entertainment. The story, the lines, the situations are a joy, and a capable cast carries them off with a flair and a manner seldom encountered our screens."

THE MARCH OF TIME

RELEASED BY RKO RADIO PICTURES

PRODUCED BY THE EDITORS OF TIME

FAME

THE MARCH OF TIME in your theater each month adds to your bill one of the best known names in the United States today. Mass appeal? Note that Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey this season added a new MARCH OF TIME clown act. That radio's biggest personalities—Benny, Allen, Bernie and Boake Carter—continuously parody the characteristic MARCH OF TIME tempo and phraseology. International Harvester, Hammermill Paper capitalize on its importance with the public in their extensive advertising in national publications. In Congress "Time Marches On" titles a speech, is reprinted, distributed to thousands of voters.

From civic pageants to clothing stores "Time Marches On" (sometimes in a manner not as dignified or appropriate as we should like*). Today it has become a byword with millions. In your theatre it thrills your audience, makes them think, feel, and talk about your show. Be sure that THE MARCH OF TIME—the most inexpensive Big Name you can buy—appears on your marquee once each month.

Dr. Colligan Heads Catholic Writers Guild

Dr. Eugene A. Colligan, president of Hunter College, has been elected president of the Catholic Writers Guild of America in a meeting of the Guild in New York. Dr. James J. Walsh was elected president emeritus, and Joseph A. Durkin, Daniel D. H. Halpin and Joseph M. Brannigan, vice-presidents. Hugh A. O'Donnell was chosen treasurer; Charles Campbell, financial secretary; Clarence E. Heller, recording secretary; Gertrude D. Healy, corresponding secretary, and J. H. Bouillon, counsel.

The following were named to the board of directors: The Very Rev. Fulton J. Sheen, the Rev. Joseph A. Daly, the Rev. Eckhardt Koehl, Thomas F. Woodlock, Richard Reid, Victor Ridder, George Adrian, John Gilchrist, Alex Morrison, Kenton Kilmer, Mrs. Philip A. Brennan, Miss Katherine Edgerly, Stanley Nowak and Nicholas Farley.

Carr May Supervise As Well as Produce

Trem Carr, who recently resigned as production head for Republic, may join Universal as a supervisor in addition to producing a series of six outdoor pictures with John Wayne, he said last week on his arrival in New York from a two-month vacation, during which he visited England, Holland, Austria, Hungary, Switzerland and France.

Mr. Carr said that when he signed to produce the six action pictures under Trem Carr, Inc., for Universal release, an option went along with the deal whereby he can join the company's roster at his own convenience. However, Mr. Carr said he was anxious to take it easy after work at a steady clip for 10 years and he had not decided whether he wanted to make more than six a year.

Double Feature Policy Gains in Kansas City

Double features were offered by 26 out of 39 Kansas City theatres advertising in newspapers May 7, marking an upswing in dual programming for the season. Over the adjacent area a corresponding tendency is being observed. Leadership in the movement is generally attributed to Fox Midwest circuit, which offered doubles at 9 of its 11 theatres on the date mentioned and gave away china at one of them.

U. S. Films Leading in Mexico, Says Seidelman

American product is still far out in front in popularity with Mexican audiences, declared Sam Seidelman, United Artists manager in Mexico, in New York for home office conferences on the product of the new season. The outlook for next season is very promising, said Mr. Seidelman, anticipating one of the best years in that market. Federal censorship he sees as inevitable in Mexico, replacing the present local censorship.

There is a surplus of good American product in the country as a result of the long strike which kept major American product out of the country, and which was settled only a few months ago, Mr. Seidelman declared. There is a real need, especially in Mexico City, for new theatre building or the remodeling of present houses, he said. The considerable use of independent American films and foreign product by exhibitors in the country during the strike has not had the effect of retarding the major product. Spanish and French pictures are the chief American competitors in the country. English product is making no inroads on American supremacy, he said, and only four or five English films, outside of the United Artists London Films releases, are shown in Mexico each year.

Mr. Seidelman will remain in New York about two weeks.

Goldstein in Boston

Jack Goldstein, formerly director of United Artists exploitation, has opened an independent publicity office in Boston.

Lisbon and Skirball Form New Circuit

Ike Libson of Cincinnati and W. N. Skirball of Cleveland have associated their theatre holdings in a new circuit known as Elleness Theatre Corporation. The new chain starts with 18 theatres. Expansion is expected.

New York City's sales tax which distributors have been battling in court for some time, will be continued until July 1, 1937, under the terms of a bill just signed by Governor Herbert Lehman. It returns a revenue of about $60,000,000 per year for unemployment relief.

SCHENCK DROPPING "QUOTA" FILMS; EXHIBITORS HARDEN AGAINST THEM

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Joseph M. Schenck, announcing the intention of Twentieth Century-Fox to draw 10 big pictures a year from British producers and to drop the production of "quota" films, undoubtedly indicated a change of policy likely to be adopted in the United Kingdom by many other companies in the very near future.

The Schenck statement, made to the press at the Claridge's reception to Sidney R. Kent and himself, was important simply as an indication of company policy. Twentieth Century-Fox controls its own studio at Wembley, London, and there makes moderately priced pictures intended solely for British distribution as quota coverage. Progressively, the company has raised the level of these pictures to well above "quickie" standard, booking them to as much business as possible in order to reduce quota losses to a minimum. From this type of production to the big pictures envisaged in the new Schenck plans is, however, a step of the greatest significance.

As chief of United Artists, Mr. Schenck pioneered the practice of major American companies drawing their British pictures from British companies enterprising enough to make them on a scale which indicated an American release at least as a possibility. The rise of London Film Productions is the most spectacular result of that policy, which is now in principle to be adopted by Twentieth Century-Fox, with the incidental result, Mr. Schenck seemed to indicate, of supplanting Fox's own British production policy at Wembley.

Aiming at U. S. Distribution

With four big pictures already scheduled to come from the Robert Kane New World unit, the Twentieth Century-Fox proposition is for six further pictures. Out of the 10, which should be sufficient to care for the greater part of Twentieth Century-Fox quota requirements, Mr. Schenck hopes to get five features good enough for American distribution. The possibility is one which should be attractive to many British production enterprises, even if there is no definite result to negotiations already in progress and expected to be completed before the Twentieth Century-Fox executives leave this week.

Always a realist in his attitude toward the British production problem, Mr. Schenck added to his statement of Twentieth Century-Fox plans a frank avowal of opinion that British producers who hoped to make the American market ought to think it worth while to know their buyers. "They make a big mistake in not going to America to study the public and its needs," he said. "England has too many producers and directors who never see pictures."

Twentieth Century-Fox, if this plan materializes, will be organized to meet any trade situation which can arise as a result of the recommendations of the Departmental Committee on the Films Act and will be well ahead of other American producers who, desiring a similar solution of British production problems, are deferring decisions until it is known what the committee recommends.

Hardening Against Quota

With evidence already before this body from the Board of Trade and from the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, exhibitor opinion, still to be formally presented, is steadily hardening against the quota. The headquarters policy of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association favors a 10 per cent exhibition quota as a maximum, with a greater quota for distributors. Branches are considering this suggestion and one of them, Sussex, has just passed an amendment to official policy demanding complete abolition of the quota.

Whatever form ultimately is taken by exhibitor policy, it seems to be in the last degree unlikely that the distributors' quota will be abolished in a new Films Act; American hopes are, in fact, still based on the possibility of distributors being allowed to spend their money on a few big pictures equaling or exceeding in cost the many small ones at present imposed on them.

Chateau of Trevano Is Sold to Swiss Producers

The famous Swiss chateau of Trevano, near Lugano, Switzerland, with its surrounding properties, has been sold by the canton of Ticino to the Forum Film Company. In the sales contract the company agrees to use the entire property for the erection and operation of a large studio.

The chateau, widely known for its colorful history, was built by Baron von Derwies, Russian millionaire and private secretary to the Czar, between 1860 and 1870. Louis Lombard purchased it in 1900 and attempted to develop it into a second Bayreuth. Mr. Lombard died in 1927 and the chateau became the property of the canton.

Catholic Women Protest Indecency in Pictures

Strong protests against obscenity on the motion picture screen and indecency in dress by girl athletes were voiced in resolutions adopted at the 13th annual convention of the St. Louis Archdiocesan Council of Catholic Women held at the Hotel Statler there late last week.

At the same time, Excise Commissioner Tom Anderson ruled that summer gardens and outdoor taverns must stop their music at midnight.

Composers Form Unit to Protect Performing Rights

As a clearing house for the grand performing rights of serious music in this country, and to promote, protect and police the performance of such compositions, leading American composers over the weekend effected an organization to be known as the American Grand Rights Association, Inc.

In purpose, the organization, which will be known as AGRA, will function similarly to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, with the distinction that the Society is the clearing house and licensing agency for small performing rights, including theatre performances of music.

Formation of AGRA is part of a movement, also, to promote American music against the increased performance of European compositions in the classical and symphonic field. One of its functions will be to guard against infringements and prosecute copyright violations.

Charter members of the new association include 44 composers, two authors and six artists. Credit for the plan was given to Milton Diamond, attorney for international film, theatrical and music interests, who is to leave shortly for Europe. There, it was said, he will complete negotiations already underway for the signing of reciprocal agreements and contracts with similar organizations in England, France, Italy, Germany and other countries.

Directors elected were Mr. Diamond, Aaron Copland, Virgil Thomson, Edgar Varese, John Powell and Roger Sessions.

Meanwhile, answering reports that Warner Brothers were sending out "feelers" with a view to returning to ASCAP, Herman Starr, Warner vice-president in charge of music, declared this week that the company had no such intention. It is understood that more than 200 radio stations have signed five-year licensing contracts for Warner music, although no official announcement has been forthcoming since the new pacts became effective April 1. Nor has Warner announced a dividend distribution to its composers and authors, which was due March 31 for the first quarter.

An international music publishing deal which will give Gaumont British musical films wide exploitation in this country is being negotiated between Jack Robbins, head of the Robbins and Feist music houses, both subsidiaries of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Arthur A. Lee, vice-president of GB Pictures, representing the Cinephonic Music Corporation of England.

James Campbell, head of Cinephonic, which publishes GB music in England, is in New York on the deal, which will give the MGM music interests a half interest in the GB music revenue in this country. The Cinephonic numbers will be included in either the Robbins or Feist catalogues.

On application of the defendant, Judge John C. Knox in the United States district court in New York has directed William H. Hodgson, composer, to provide a bill of particulars in connection with his suit over "The Music Goes 'Round and Around."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

FEATHER IN HER HAT, A: Pauline Lord, Louis Hayward—Played it one night; pulled it the second night. Did not suit our situation. Thought we better pull it. We consider this picture far below a special. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

JUSTICE OF THE RANGE: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—I would say this was above average western. Everyone liked it. Did a nice week end business on a double bill.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LONE WOLF RETURNS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Gail Patrick—I did not see where this picture could have gotten the crowd it brought out at a midnight show, but it really brought a crowd. It must have been the title. Had no complaints. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 2.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

First National

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Haviland—Played this Thursday and Friday to under average business. Played a western on Saturday following and outgrossed both nights of "Captain Blood" by a wide margin. Might have cost a million, but who cares?—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Very good air picture that pleased most of the patrons. Wish, however, some of O'Brien's and Cagney's enemies would tell them they talk too fast. They seem to be so anxious to get in all the words they can so that the audience cannot keep up with them. Stuart Erwin stole the show. Running time, 95 minutes. Played April 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ROAD GANG: Donald Woods, Kay Linaker—Failed to do as much business as ordinary western pictures on Friday and Saturday play date. No stars to draw. If torture is entertainment, this one rates 100 per cent. Played May 1-2.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson, Beverly Roberts—The poorest Sunday and Monday gross in over two years. Jolson has been washed out for years. "Singing Kid" was supposed to be a special, but any western or program picture will gross as much. Don't waste good playing time with this. Played May 3-4. —Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—A fine picture, but you can't put that in the bank or write checks on it. Worth about half what I paid for it. Played on Sunday and fell flat. The exhibitors are interested in box office pictures, not four or five star ratings. Played March 8-9.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

GB Pictures

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans, Helen Vinson—The story is evidently intended to be fantastic and it certainly is all of that. I fancy it would cause a high-grade tunnel engineer to tear his hair, and driving a tunnel through a flaming volcano at the bottom of the Atlantic ocean seems to me more fantastic than is at all necessary. We found the sound rather spotty, some good and some bad. But the attendance was quite satisfactory. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 24-25.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

GARDEN MURDER CASE, THE: Edmund Lowe, Virginia Bruce—An above average murder mystery, well done and one that will hold your audience. Suitable for weekend or dual. Running time, 62 minutes. Played April 24-25.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—An excellent picture of its kind, but it is not the kind my patrons care for. Beautiful scenery, good acting by native cast and interesting story could not put this one over. Personally, I enjoyed it very much. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle. Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—A real good picture. We played on a Sunday midnight to the poorest crowd we ever had. No fault of the picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—A splendid picture that drew about average box office, possibly because we have to play them so old from Metro. However, Gable is no big shot in our town for some reason. Would swap him for a Wheeler and Woolsey any day and pay boot.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—This is something for the book. We played grand opera to our bunch of farmer patrons and they liked it. As a background for the goofy antics of the Marx Bros. they took it and really liked it. This is one of those pictures I booked with misgivings and was glad I played.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—Even though this was a much more pretentious production than the last several made by these clowns, with a liberal amount of good music and supporting players, they still do not go over in our town. Hope that MGM has learned their lesson and will not try another. Running time, 96 minutes. Played May 3-4.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Here is a good little program picture that you should play. A very good drawing one, too, at the box office. Bob Montgomery is one of my favorites and everyone here likes him fine. Running time, 81 minutes. Played April 16-17.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Very good picture that pleased. Una Merkel gives a better performance than Jean Harlow, and Mickey Rooney, as usual, almost walks off with the honors. Jean is popular here and her pictures always please. Played April 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy —My report on this picture is about the same as all other reports I have read. This is one grand show. Jeanette lovely and Nelson Eddy's voice is wonderful. Ditto with MacDonald. What a pair for a musical show. This would be beautiful in colors. Running time, 113 minutes. Played April 5-6. Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—This one grossed fairly well, but I doubt whether the average patron was satisfied with it. There is no question as to the high quality of the film, but most of our patrons wish to be entertained and are not inclined to show any enthusiasm for a gruesome portrayal of scenes of the French Revolution. Running time, 126 minutes. Played May 1-2.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen, Cecilia Parker—I have always thought Metro could not make a "bad" picture, but certainly changed my mind after seeing this and "Kind Lady." Would advise you to pass these up. Do not make a mistake like I did. Terrible. Running time, 62 minutes. Played April 11. —Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia—Herer is one of the best gangster type pictures we have played in some time. Jackie Cooper fine. Also the gangster Joseph Calleia. Do not fail to play this. Running time, 77 minutes. Played April 9-10.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—Very good picture of its kind, but more suitable for weekend. Appeals little to women, which means poor B. O. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 26-28.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

WIFE VERSUS SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—A good picture, but not as "big" at the box office as Metro seems to think or at least we did not do such extra business and the picture was checked in our town. All the stars were good, but have seen them in some just as good. Running time, 89 minutes. Played April 23-24.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Monogram

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Gene Autry, Evalyn Knapp—Real western picture that had everything but wasn't one-two-three with "Strawberry Roan," which we played three times. The third time did as much as this picture.—Harland Rankin. Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

HOPALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd, Paula Stone —A very good small town picture. Plenty of action. It's very short, should be used as a double feature to get up a program or use four reels of shorts. Running time, six reels. Played April 24-25.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen —We failed to do the business on this West picture that we have with previous ones. They seem to be falling out with Mae. This one is about as good as any she has made and nothing indecent. Running time, 81 minutes. Played March 26-27.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd, Adolphe Menjou—A few liked this, especially the ladies, believe it or not. But among the men, the general verdict was thumbs down. Think Lloyd has about run his course. Paramount surely did surround him with a swell cast though. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May 1-2.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda—Do not fail to play this, a good program picture with plenty of laughs. I think Margaret Sullavan much better in stories like "Only Yesterday." She is a fine actress and Henry Fonda's good in this. Running time, 83 minutes. Played April 28-29.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire —Fine picture for the average audience. Jane Withers is just about as good as you could ask for. Pleased our patrons. Played May 9.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST: Virginia Weidler, Eleanore Whitney, Dickie Moore—A mighty fine program picture for the entire family, played on Saturday to nice business. Everyone well pleased. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 18.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—A very fine program picture that did above average business. Will stand up okay for Sunday. Fred MacMurray will really be a box office star with another picture or two like this. Excellent entertainment that did not cost a fortune to make and pleased 100 per cent. Played April 12-13.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

CHATTERBOX: Anne Shirley, Phillips Holmes—Fair picture, but Anne Shirley is the whole show and she talks too much. Nothing much more than an average picture.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—As good as they make them. In fact, this as about the best this team has made so far. Here's hoping there will not be a split among this fine pair. This picture is "tops" in any situation. Running time, 110 minutes. Played March 19-20.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—Divided comments on this picture. Didn't care for it myself and did only average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Paul Lukas, Walter Abel, Margot Grahame, Heather Angel—Very good show, good for Sunday. Not for small town as will not draw for one any night. We played it Friday and Saturday and we starved to death. Did not take in half of the film rental. Running time, 11 reels. Played May 1-2.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Played this on Saturday, was afraid to use it on a two-day booking. We had a nice crowd, but they go on Saturday regardless of the pictures, as it is 15-cent night and we have serials. Some seemed to like this, but a very few. Running time, 96 minutes. Played May 2.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix, Leila Hyams—Excellent for Friday-Saturday patronage and played to slightly above average business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 1-2.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—All our patrons considered this the best Temple picture to date. Shirley has become the best box office bet we have.—Myers Theatre, Francesville, Ind. General patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—Will Rogers will still get 'em in. We did almost as good on this one as we did on "Captain January." Will Rogers sure had some loyal fans.—Myers Theatre, Franceville, Inc. General patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—A very good picture. Raft very good. He is one of our best draws at the box office. They like him in tough roles like this. Rosalind Russell good. Do not pass this one up. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 26-27.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

KING OF THE BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Jack Oakie, Alice Faye—One of the season's best musicals, but failed miserably at the box office. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May 3-5.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—This is the kind that keeps the small town theatre open. That little girl will always gross 50 to 75 per cent above average here. It makes no difference how old we play her, they always pack the house.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Jack Holt—Very good and Shirley sure brings them out on this one. Plenty of action. Boles, Holt and Shirley sure played a good combination. Step on the gas, boys, and let your patrons know about this one. Running time, eight reels. Played April 26-27.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Jack Holt—One of the best by Shirley Temple to date. Drew better than any picture we have shown for the last two years. Good anywhere. Played April 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—We played this picture on Sunday and Monday and had the same luck with it we had with "Prisoner of Shark Island." We didn't even gross film rental on either. Wallace Beery does some very fine work, but the picture had very little box office attraction.—Myers Theatre, Francesville, Ind. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—Very good picture in which Freddie Bartholomew steals the show—as usual. He is becoming one of the favorite stars here. Rather an unusual plot, but pleased. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero, Bruce Cabot—Here is a fine draw at the box office for midnight show. We used it for our preview and it certainly brought them out. Our customers really go for this type picture. Running time, 76 minutes. Played April 18.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Claire Trevor, Paul Kelly—Just program, no more. Cast adequate for the story—in fact, helped to put the story over. Wish they'd give this little Trevor girl a real opportunity. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 29-30.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TWO CONTRIBUTORS JOIN DEPARTMENT

Contributing their first reports to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week are two theatres in Nebraska and Indiana. They are:

P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Nebraska.
Myers Theatre, Francesville, Indiana.

Read the reports of these showmen in the department in this issue.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak—I do not hardly know how to report on this picture. Some liked it fine; others very much disappointed. One woman remarked upon leaving the theatre that she thought they should be singing "Thanks a Million." She had not seen anything. We received a very bad print on this. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 12-13.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

SANDERS OF THE RIVER: Paul Robeson, Leslie Banks, Nina Mae McKinney—Played this as a revival. Thought it should have been a better draw as we played it in February during our cold spell to no business, but did only average business for a revival. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor, Sally Eilers, Ethel Merman—We did not gross very much more with this picture than some of our program pictures. Not as good as some of Eddie's other pictures. Plenty of laughs, but the musical numbers were not near so good. No other faults. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 19-20.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT: Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings—Starts out with a Night Club and then it turns to be a mystery melodrama. Would be much better if the starting with drinking was eliminated. Balance O. K. Keeps them guessing till the very last end. Played April 29.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—One of the best little pictures I have seen for many a day. Noah Beery, Jr., was excellent. Fine show, particularly for the smaller theatres and country patronages. Played April 18.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

Warners

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Jack Oakie, Joan Blondell—A grand bunch of stars in an average program picture. Certainly not worth the rental that I paid as it did only average business in nice weather and no opposition. Played April 29-30.—Warren L. Webber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis, Humphrey Bogart—This picture was liked with the exception of the tragic ending. Would have been better with a good ending. Bogart held the interest when he appeared. Kind of tiresome and draggy. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 3-4.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Serial

Universal

FLASH GORDON: Buster Crabbe, Jean Rogers—A great serial with drawing power. A few like this and serials would come into their own again.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ALIMONY ACHES: Broadway Comedies—A good two-reel slapstick comedy. Should be played on Saturday.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FOOTBALL BUGS: Color Rhapsodies—A colored cartoon that is not so hot. Will get by, but that is all. Columbia slipping on their cartoons.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

GOLD BRICKS: Bert Lahr—A few laughs and pretty good comedy. Our first comedy with Lahr. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

TIME ON A LIMB: Buster Keaton—A comedy that satisfies the critics and Buster takes his parts just with common sense and puts it over without cracking a smile. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AIR HOPPERS: MGM Sports Parade—A good filler about gliders. Will get by.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

ALL-AMERICAN TOOTHACHE: Todd-Kelly—A very good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—Another excellent Happy Harmony, but in case any of your patrons are inebriated, advise them to shut their eyes. Otherwise they'll swear they have "got 'em." Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—A very excellent colored reel. Good any place.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOW TO SLEEP: MGM Miniatures—No wonder this one rated top spot for the single-reelers last season. The honor was deserved.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

PINCH SINGER: Our Gang—The poorest Our Gang comedy we have run. Running time, two reels. —Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

RUN, SHEEP, RUN: Harman-Ising—A dandy colored cartoon that pleased all ages. Beautiful coloring. These cartoons are the tops. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THRILL FOR THELMA, A: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—A Crime Doesn't Pay featurette that ranks with the others of the series. We always receive many favorable comments and the above was no exception. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TOP FLAT: Todd-Kelly—Very good Todd-Kelly short. This team was always popular here, but since Thelma's tragic death they do not go over so well. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VAMP 'TIL READY: Charley Chase—Just fair; a few laughs, but I suppose that's all we should expect nowadays from "comedies." Running time, two reels. —Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

VICTORIA AND VANCOUVER: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—All of the FitzPatrick travel talks are beautiful and very interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Paramount

JUDGE FOR A DAY: Betty Boop Cartoons—Just fair one-reeler. Not much to laugh at. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

JUDGE FOR A DAY: Betty Boop Cartoons—A good Betty Boop.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MOSCOW MOODS—Headliners—Here is a pretentious one-reeler that has everything to justify extra billing. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MUSICAL MEMORIES: Color Classics—Some very pretty music in this, old-time favorite songs with pretty music and color. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas General patronage.

NOT NOW: Betty Boop Cartoons—This is a very poor Betty Boop. Pass it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

FOOLISH HEARTS: Radio Musical Comedies—A very poor short subject. This company cannot seem to make comedies that get a laugh. Running time, 20 minutes.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

GASOLOONS: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—The usual loud-talking, grimacing Kennedy that was able to extract a few laughs from a none too particular Saturday crowd. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

IN RETURN FOR GOOD THE REPORTS HAVE DONE

Reciprocity, returning good for good, is the thought behind the decision of P. E. Braun of the Cairo theatre at Cairo, Nebraska, to start contributing to "What the Picture Did for Me".

"In return for the good I have received from this department I feel that I should contribute from time to time," he writes.

The first reports from this showman are found in the columns this week.

United Artists

FLYING MOUSE, THE: Silly Symphonies—All of the Silly Symphonies are good and very pretty. Running time, 10 minutes.—Miss Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

BEAUTY SHOPPE: Oswald Cartoons—Another dandy cartoon of three monkeys in a beauty shop. Very clever and house in an uproar.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SIGNING OFF: Mentone Musical Comedies—Very good musical with one group of four stealing the whole show. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BETWEEN THE LINES: Broadway Brevities—A very clever idea. The characters in a magazine coming to life. Pleased—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CARNIVAL DAY: Felix Knight—Two reels of mighty good carnival entertainment in beautiful color with good music, comedy and singing enough to please everyone. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

I'M A BIG SHOT NOW: Merrie Melodies—A very good cartoon—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

I'M MUCH OBLIGED: Broadway Brevities—One of the best two-reel musicals we have played. Warner certainly has the good short subjects. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

STEEL AND STONE: Our Own United States—Just a filler. Weak.—G. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TIMBER GIANTS: Pepper Pot—Showing the sawing of lumber and logging. Educational. Just fair.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TROUBLE IN TOYLAND: Broadway Brevities—A very good two-reel musical. Parts played by kids 8 to 12. Drew some extra business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

VITAPHONE CELEBRITIES: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Very good single reel. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MEXICAN PRODUCERS PLEDGED FEDERAL AID

President Cardenas, After Visit to Clasa Studio, Promises Financial and Moral Support

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

Mexican producers who long have awaited what they are confident will put them definitely in the running and able to compete with foreign producers, now feel that their day has come, for federal government financial and moral assistance in production, they have been assured, is virtually at hand. Native producers have been promised by the national administration from time to time that something nice and big is going to be done for them. But these have proved just promises. Never before did the president himself assure the industry that it would get government aid.

This has just been done by President Lazaro Cardenas. He did it after a visit to the new studios near here, the largest in Mexico, that were built and are being operated by Cinematografica Latino Americano, S.A. (CLASA), most recent and enterprising of Mexican picture makers. The chief executive was shown all the ins and outs of the studios and manifested great interest in this phase of the national industry. As he left, instead of saying the usual, "It's very nice. I had a lovely time. Thanks so much," he added to that speech:

"Motion pictures can be successfully made in Mexico. But they must have practical assistance from the government. The industry is too young and has too much to contend with to go on its own, just yet. Without intending to meddle in the industry's affairs, my administration shall give it financial and moral support. I am convinced that motion pictures are an asset to Mexico as they show it in its true light abroad. I am interested especially in the making of first rate pictures that show Mexico's scenic beauties, the life of the people and its folklore. These pictures are an excellent advertisement for Mexico abroad."

President Cardenas further added that he would instruct various government departments to draft a definite program whereby the state shall give the picture industry a helping hand.

Rothacker's 26th Anniversary; At New Eastern Quarters

Douglas D. Rothacker, celebrating the 26th anniversary of "Rothacker" educational motion pictures, opened new quarters last weekend on the fourth floor of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, where extended facilities and an enlarged staff will continue the business of producing non-theatrical motion pictures.

The original Rothacker Motion Picture Company was founded in May, 1910, in Chicago, by Watterson R. Rothacker, former Paramount executive on the staff of John E. Otterson, president.

When the Rothacker laboratories of Hollywood, New York and Chicago were sold in 1925, Douglas D. Rothacker, then vice president in charge of the company's industrial division, secured control of that branch and has continued with it ever since.

B & K CONSIDERS USING CHANCE GAMES IN LOOP

WLS Barn Dance Group Is Booked Into Warner's Capitol in Chicago; Women Convene

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

Chances are that if present plans materialize Balaban & Katz will start soon to use Bank Night in their loop houses. At present the only giveaway game in the Loop is at the State-Lake, where Sweepstakes is being played. The prize there is $100 a week and the jackpot never has reached much more than the $500 mark, thus limiting its attraction.

If Bank Night does come into the Loop area it probably will start at the Oriental theatre. This house, with a popular priced admission of 25c-40c, offers a stage show and first-run feature film policy. The all-day Bank Night plan likely would be used with big awards. Transient trade also would be a factor in the registration and a signature list in the tens of thousands might be had in a few days.

If the idea proves attractive in the Loop the other B & K houses are understood to be in line.

It is highly probable that the Loop houses would use the group plan, with one jackpot, a very large one, and announcing the winning numbers in the various theatres participating.

Expenditure of $1,000,000 to double the present size of their Hollywood color laboratories is contemplated, Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor Corporation, said in Chicago this week on his way to New York from the Coast.

"In 1935 Technicolor manufactured and sold twice the footage of release prints that it did in 1934," said Dr. Kalmus. "Orders on hand for 1936 are again twice those of 1935, and the bookings for the last half of this year are double that of the first half.

"We are adding twenty-five to thirty men a week to the staff of three hundred at our Cole avenue plant. To meet the greatly increased demand, we will operate two shifts this fall.

"Leading producers are of the opinion that the present capacity of Technicolor will have to be doubled at least to meet the demand for next year."

The present capacity of Technicolor is about 75,000,000 feet a year. This is being used to produce a dozen features and many MGM and Warner short subjects, besides cartoons.

The twelve features include "Dancing Pirate," "Garden of Allah," "Ramona," "God's Country and the Women," "Desert Song," "Beau Geste," "Lawrence of Arabia," "Winds of the Morning," a Disney feature length cartoon and several unnamed pictures.

Dr. Kalmus will return to Hollywood in three weeks.

Vincent Is Reelected To Actors' Fund Post

Walter W. Vincent, executive of the Wilmer and Vincent circuit and chairman of the board of Republic Pictures, was reelected first vice-president of the Actors' Fund of America at the 55th annual meeting late last week.

Daniel Frohman, dean of American theatrical producers, was returned as president of the Fund, a position he has held 35 years. Other officers unanimously elected were: Major Bernard A. Reinold, second vice-president; Sam A. Scribner, treasurer; Robert Campbell, secretary; trustees for three years, A. O. Brown, Richard Herndon, Chrystal Herne, Donald Brian, Frank McIntyre and George H. Nicolai. To fill an unexpired term Hugh Cameron was elected trustee for one year.

In the last year the organization received $155,898, Major Reinold reported. Of that, $122,599 was paid out for direct relief, medical services to the sick and burial expenses in every section of the United States. A loss in real estate and other expenditures left an excess of income over expenses of $7,593. An average of 186 persons was assisted weekly by the Fund.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

On Showmanship Change of Pace

Some months back in these pages and often there were discussions no end on the adoption by Fox Midwest Theatres' head man Elmer Rhoden of the Screen Reporter form of newspaper advertising. Mr. Rhoden was good and tired of the "colossal" school of adjective and sought in the new form something to take its place that would be novel and effective.

As to be expected and immediately, much was said by Round Tablers on the merits and demerits of the idea and the soundness of maintaining the same copy appeal over a long stretch. This department declared itself as not too enthusiastic on the possibilities of the new advertising approach for the long pull and also set down an opinion in defense of poor old "colossal." Members found flaws while other theatremen hastened to commend this effort to get away from the usual manner of newspaper display.

And now after a fair trial of a year, the Screen Reporter plan has been found wanting and for the most part Fox Midwest managers have discarded it.

Among the smarter theatremen of this country, Elmer Rhoden is to be ranked up near the top. That he has now decided to switch his advertising attack is proof enough that to get 'em in and to keep on bringing 'em in, the attack must not only be consistent but also varied.

Ours is essentially a business of constant change and to quote Motion Picture Daily, "that the novelty of the (Fox Midwest) plan has worn off and that the public is no longer as much attracted to it as was true at first" only carries out the above thought.

More evidence is forthcoming with the switch—even though slight—in the strictly announcement form of advertising stressed by Radio City Music Hall. The idea behind the typographically well-mannered theatre advertisement finds much in its favor especially in today's welter of confusing "reverses" and amazing varieties of type juxtaposition.

But that this is a "business of constant change" and that showmanship is its prophet has evidently not escaped the keen eyes of the Music Hall's helmsman and thus is enlisted another and important exponent of the muchly desired change of pace.

The recent Show of Showmanship may also be referred to in advancing further cogent reasons for the necessity of pace change. In the exhibits and the displays of highly successful campaigns from the field were offered many concrete examples of the benefits of mixing up the copy attack both in newspaper advertisings and exploitation.

The campaigns, from the most effective of the Quigley Awards winners to the simplest herald, from the strictly class drive for patronage to the widest-open ballyhoo on the streets, all denoted showmanship acumen that indicates clearly the benefit of doing it differently on different dates.

And more immediately to hand are following pages of this section where are set down by various Round Tablers details of the most effective ideas put over during their years of showbusiness—slants that prove again the value of "mixing 'em up" in delivering at the boxoffice.

The community of Clovis is situated down in the heart of the New Mexico plains country where, says Russell Hardwick, you can go 20 miles without seeing a tree. So to switch his advertising attack on "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," Hardwick trucked 175 miles for pine trees, slabs, pine needles and cones to decorate his Lyceum Theatre, the town and much of the drawing area. Folks who hadn't seen a tree in ages, folks who had never seen a pine came from miles around to feast their eyes and souls upon the long-traveled pines and the pine-filled feature picture.

Swell showmanship? You bet it was. But lay yourself an extra wager that the trees, pine needles, cones and all the rest disappeared from the theatre immediately after the date. Hardwick did not use them to advertise his next show, the next, or the next.

Yes, friends, it all simmers down to change, change and yet more change, which brings to mind the story told to the Quigley Awards party in Hollywood by Gabe Yorke on the Paramount lot. It had to do with the Indian chief on location with the "Buffalo Bill" unit who interviewed by one of the local papers expressed himself as being fed up on pictures because he was tired of playing Indian roles.

Hendricks Lists Scores of Ideas For April Silver

One of those masterly campaigns put over for "Colleen" won for Bill Hendricks, Warner, Memphis, the Quigley April Silver plaque and here follows brief outlines of some of the outstanding slants. F'rinstance:

The animated "television" lobby panel so constructed (see photo) that revolving scene from the picture was made visible through mirror when lever was pressed lighting lamps behind unblacked mirror. When lever was released, mirror functioned naturally.

One of the outside sockos was a 24-sheet cut into a jigsaw puzzle with squad of girls assembling the pieces at ball park (see photo) and other prominent spots. Gals were used profusely on other stunts. They distributed novelty heralds including imprinted stenographer cuffs, rode in a long street parade, individual girls in new cars each holding up giant letters to spell out the title, they carried portable phonographs around town playing the hit tunes, they danced in costume at different night clubs and hotels, they acted as seconds wearing lettered sweaters at wrestling matches.

Girls, Girls, and More Girls

Girls, too, operated a travelling radio unit which broadcast tunes direct from station. Another station put on a "prettiest Colleen contest" with winner tied in by Hendricks to rechristen to "Colleen" for one day one of the crack American Airliners out of Memphis. Girl in bathing suit with back lettered made all pools.

Top art school came in on another promotion of Bill's wherein models costumed as colleens posed for the students with prizes given to artists turning out best posters for display in lobby. And then again, girls posed in window showing off "Colleen" hosiery and masked colleen drove new model about town. Strong newspaper campaign was put on with Irish song contests among others.

Hendricks' windows blanketed the town topped with a best "Colleen" window contest among grocery stores with cash prizes and tickets for the winners. Every possible variation of window was used, animated and otherwise, and Hendricks got a lot of attention with an aquarium filled with fish in jeweler's window with title spelled out under water. Spectators were asked to watch the fishes swim through the "o" in the title which was impossible as the letter was glassed in but not visible through the water.

Boys were used to carry jumbo greeting card addressed to stars through streets to be signed by passersby and mailed to Hollywood. Another group carried a mounted 24-sheet around town, stopping to rest of course at the busiest corners. Bannered boats ran up and down the river, and steamboat docking at local pier was also posted.

Other lobby ideas included a "see your voice" gag adapted from an oscillograph whereby the voices of persons speaking into a mike animated a flash across the oscillograph. Attention was given also to a "model your figure" booth where girls were invited to fit themselves into a cutout space supposed to be the measurements of Ruby.

Imprinted oil-change stickers distributed at all filling stations weeks ahead proved helpful, lettered linoleum mats scattered on the streets plugged the date as did girls with water stencils and imprinted slips attached to magazines on newsstands. Early morning free breakfast on opening day aided in collecting the office workers, and special railroad excursion was also arranged.

Hardwick's Initial Carving Slant

Drives 175 Miles To Get Pine Trees On 'Lonesome Pine'

Clovis, New Mexico, is located on the plains and it is possible to drive 20 miles without seeing a tree. Therefore the wonder and curiosity of the folks in that spot when Manager Russell Hardwick, Lyceum Theatre, arranged to obtain pine trees for his campaign on "Lonesome Pine" from the foothills of the mountains, 175 miles away. Trip was made possible without cost through a friend who trucks out of Clovis, 100 trees obtained also at no cost, slab lumber promoted from saw mill, pine cones and needles picked off the ground and whatever logs used for decoration brought in at nominal expense.

Slab lumber was used as base for the miniature 24-sheets and decorated with pine branches for window displays. The slabs were also used to construct walls and roof of house in front (see photo) with two illuminated windows carrying offset cutouts. Effect machine from projection room was placed on building across street and changing color obtained through prism glass and moving color wheel. Large pine trees decorated the sidewalk and top of marquee, with title spelled out in pine cones sawed in half over roof of house. Pine trees eight days ahead were also planted on busy corners and six days ahead this copy was stencilled under trees: "The most important picture you will see this year." Then four days ahead picture, theatre and date were added.

Puts on Carving Contest

Three days ahead, Hardwick took five-foot logs, planed smooth on two sides and planted them in prominent spots in Clovis and in front of stores in eight surrounding towns. To each (see photo) copy was added: "Cut your initials on a log from a tree in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Register initials and name inside. Free tickets to five persons cutting neatest initials. Please use small space."

Double-sided signs made of used window cards were stencilled with this copy and planted where they would do the most good: "Warning! The Falins have broken the peace truce and the feud is on again" with theatre copy. Envelopes with pine needles and sawdust scented with pine odor were also distributed, and heralds placed in all bread loaves at the three bakeries were also used.

Rest of campaign was in keeping with splendid window and radio coverage, letters to teachers and honor students in rural schools, pine tree coloring contest for children in grade schools, wall paper heralds and a smart advertising campaign featured by a series of two column ads carrying "Quaint Blue Ridge Mountain Recipes from the Trail of the Lonesome Pine" with theatre dates under the various recipes.

Entire campaign covered a 60-mile area including nine towns in the trade zone and Hardwick expresses his thanks to the entire theatre staff, and Hardwick, Jr., for cooperation on this most deserving April Bronze entry.

PASKOW WILL SUPPLY COMBINATION AD MATS

So many requests have come to this department and to the author from Round Tablers for copies of the combination ad layouts created by Bob Paskow and reproduced in the issues of April 25th and May 16th, that the New Jersey Warner Theatres ad chief has consented to furnish the mat in limited numbers for use elsewhere at cost plus postage.

The mats may be obtained by writing Paskow at Warner Bros. Theatres, 17 Academy St., Newark, N. J.

Arranges Welcome To Conventioneers

Participation of Mayor Rolland B. Marvis of Syracuse in the stopover welcome to the MGM-Loew's executives was one of the toppers in the fancy greetings campaign arranged by Manager Ed McBride, of Loew's State in that spot.

Special convention train on way to Chicago was illuminated at depot by light squad trucks of local fire department and as train drew in, the visitors were greeted by Veterans of Foreign Wars band, in full regalia.

Broadcasting from the depot was another "first" put over by McBride, who got station WSYR to put lines and broadcasting sets alongside the special for the reception, at which the Mayor presented key to the city to sales chief William Rodgers and then presented theatre head, J. R. Vogel who acknowledged the greetings (see photo) over the mike. E. A. Schiller, Al Lichtman, Nicholas M. Schenck and Howard Dietz also said "hello."

During the stopover, newsboys hurried through the train passing out special newspaper editions promoted by McBride.

Dailies were generous in reporting the stop-over and all in all, McBride piled up a lot of good advertising and prestige for his theatre and the MGM product.

EXCLUSIVE WINDOW. An eye-attractor was the "Desire" window secured by Johnny McManus, Loew's Midland Theatre, Kansas City, featuring gown worn by Dietrich in the picture.

Special "Zero" Display Constructed by Ackery

Up in Vancouver, B. C., Ivan Ackery at the Orpheum for his "Ceiling Zero" date built a novel display in his mezzanine a week ahead, showing a background of a city at night with miniature hangar and aeroplane in foreground. Small wax figures dressed as pilots pointed to a plane made to appear as though it were writing picture title across sky.

Effective radio broadcasts were planted daily, background for announcements was sound of falling plane supposed to be coming from a plane's radio receiver which also plugged picture and theatre.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Tiernan's "Pink" Paper

Jack Tiernan, Hollywood, Cincinnati, Ohio, for "Strike Me Pink" promoted publisher of suburban paper to put out a pink edition, streamer across top carried picture title and playdates. Sweet shop featured a "pink sundae" and distributed pink heralds with picture copy.

Ad Contest Highlights "Things to Come"

Reported first time in the New Haven Courier, was a contest run by John Hesse, Roger Sherman Theatre, as the highlight of his campaign on "Things to Come."

Readers for three days were challenged to rewrite any of the ads on the classified page as they might be written in year 2036. Guest tickets were awarded winners. Paper devoted editorial space to picture and placed announcement stickers on all copies of issue day before. Through tieup with auto dealer, man dressed in costume represented by film was driven about town in bannered new model car decorated in futuristic style.

Harris Writes Song On 'Jazz' Campaign

It was five weeks ahead that Harry B. Harris, skipper of the Exchange Cinema, Lincoln, England, started his drive to acquaint the folks with his date on "Jazz Mad," opening the campaign with a series of "coming" slides. Title on these was twisted about to read as follows: "Jadzzam," "Dazzjam," "Mazzjad," "Jamdaz" and finally the title. All slides carried further lines that details would be run the next week.

Teaser newspaper campaign of one-column ads also were planted. The line of copy used was as follows: "Who Is Getting Jazz Mad?" "Who is likely to get Jazz Mad?" etc., etc., with the break ad giving further credits. Break ad took form of a two-column type ad that stood out solidly.

Interest was heightened at every performance week ahead with an original theme song, written and sung by Harris and co-author Victor Raymond accompanied by orchestra and audience, and relayed outside by loudspeakers. Copies of the song were distributed to encourage the folks to sing.

Lobby display included a home-made flasher made up from cardboard boxes. Stencils of each letter of title were cut out of stiff paper with sufficient border allowed to fit tightly into the lid. Stencil was pasted over with colored grease-proof paper and box lid cut enough to display the letter. Lamps were inserted through hole in side of box and secured, box and lid painted black and flasher attached.

Heralds, posters, window displays and full lobby display were also utilized advantageously and for street bally Harris promoted and decorated a car, put a trio of jazz-players in it and toured the city with the turnout. Title was planted atop the vehicle without mention of theatre to arouse interest.

After the screening prisoner was interviewed on "why crime doesn't pay" and papers carried page one stories on the stunt. Police motor cycle escort, blowing sirens, and presence of high police officials helped build up the date.

High School "Forever" Parade

While at the Strand, Altoona, Pa., Brown promoted a street parade of 3,000 high school students with three brass bands on "Forever After" to hook in on the general excitement of a football game taking place the day of the picture's opening.

Banners and other copy tied in as follows: "Altoona Beat Johnstown Today and Forever After," theatre credits also carried. After parade through main streets procession paraded around football field.

"Cohens and Kellys" Rent Store

Week ahead of his date at the Strand, Altoona, Brown planted large sign in untenanted department store reading "Rented by Cohen and Kelly." Merchants made vain attempts to locate the new firm, and even newspapers went for the gag. Day ahead sign was changed to read: "Cohen and Kelly have agreed to disagree. Watch them make up at the Strand."

Built around Harry Langdon's quest for his sweetheart in "The Strong Man," Brown tied in with stores and paper by having photographer from inside different stores snap pictures of girls gazing at the window displays. Photos were run in paper the day following and to gals who identified themselves, daily gave cash prizes and merchants' merchandise prize. Different store was selected each day. Paper broke a lot of stuff on the slant and as soon as the gag got under way store windows of course got a lot of extra customers hoping to be snapped.

Brown Brings Criminal to See Show

The response from the men in the field for the best and most effective exploitation ideas put over during their years of showbusiness has been very satisfactory and as this slant has proven productive of a lot of box-office stuff it has been suggested that more of the same be carried in future issues. Members are requested therefore to forward details of their best ideas and what they did and how they did it will be set down in these pages from time to time.

Publicity Breaks Feature Wally Caldwell's Toppers

Out in Toledo, Ohio, at Loew's Valentine, Wally Caldwell has been clicking for a long time with a lot of swift stuff and reports the following as among his most effective over a long period. F'rinstance:

Across from the theatre stands Trinity church, said to include the city's swankiest congregation. Wally wrote to the vestrymen offering $5,000 annually if theatre could use the slanting slate roof facing theatre entrance for exploitation sign to be changed weekly. Offer, of course, was refused but Wally was praised by church folk for his enterprise. Papers, tipped off by Caldwell, reproduced his letter and reply and cartoonist illustrated how church roof would look with a Gable 24-sheet.

Years ago, Caldwell had Jackie Coogan—six at the time—stop off on his way East to accept key to city from Mayor. Jackie swung the key and clipped Hizzoner on the side of the head. Photographers caught the shot, which broke all over the country.

Doug Fairbanks, Sr., making personal during the World War was induced to wire the late President Wilson for some sort of message to Toledoans on generous giving during first Liberty Loan drive. Mr. Wilson did so, addressing wire to Doug at the theatre and all papers reproduced the presidential wire.

When Oscar Doob asked Caldwell to get behind the national Marie Dressler Birthday Party put on a few years back, Wally wired Postmaster-General Farley for permission to place a regulation mail-box in the lobby so that well-wishers could send greetings in person to the late star from the theatre, during run of her then current picture. Farley wired his Okay and photos not only broke the local sheets but also hit all the news wires.

Advertises Bull-Fight For "The Spaniard"

When John Creamer, now at the Benton, Kansas City, was skipper at the Paramount, Chillicothe, Mo., he had the town talking with a series of teaser ads on the bull-fight stunt in conjunction with "The Spaniard." In the first ad, John advertised for a place to put on a Spanish bull-fight signing it "Senor Cortez."

Editor of the sheet was hooked in to query readers on whether or not they would like to have the event put on and letters pro and con were run. Also promoted was another ad signed "Committee of Citizens" to the effect that they were agin' it, and for the blow-off Creamer ran a sock display, addressed to "Senors and Senoritas" and signed "Ricardo Cortez," star in the picture, stating that since there was objection to the actual bull fight, the folks could see Cortez as the Matador at the theatre.

L. J. McCarthy, Creamer's Fox Midwest division manager, thought enough of the stunt to send it around to all his managers last year to work on "The Trumpet Blows" and of course it can be worked again from time to time on similar attractions.

Drohan Runs Lobby Display Of Local Manufacturers

As part of a "Canadian Prosperity Week," Pat Drohan, manager, Capitol, Chatham, Ont., Canada, made up a nice lobby with samples of various goods (see photo) manufactured in the local county. The unusual flash of course brought a lot of folks to the theatre and the papers made much of the tieup. For street purposes, Pat promoted a parade led by the Chatham Kiltie Band.

Drohan also reports fine returns from serializations of coming pictures, the stories much in demand from local editors. Among the most recent were "Fauntleroy," "Small Town Girl," "Country Doctor" and "Robin Hood." All the serials are announced ahead with big free display ads.

Walt Davis Describes Various Click Ideas

Members are well acquainted with the exploitations put on by Round Tabler Davis at the Capitol, Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada, and for this special section, Walt sends along some effective slants on gift tickets, community work, theatre parties and Farewell Nights. Says Davis:

We are doing a consistent selling of our Gift Tickets. In the past, churches and small organizations having entertainments, always solicited the theatres for complimentary tickets for prizes. When they solicit us we inform them that our Home Office frowns on issuing gratis tickets, but we show them and tell all the merits of our Gift Tickets. There is no piece of merchandise they could buy for forty cents that could compare with the enjoyment the winner would get out of a visit to the Capitol.

Just the other day we sold 48 to the Kinsmen Club for prizes for their Carnival and we got a lot of publicity from it. These are just a few of the highlights of the little innovation of Gift Tickets.

Community Work

We have a convenient space in our foyer for a candy table. Some church or women's organization, has a candy sale every Saturday afternoon. We are usually booked from five to eight weeks in advance. This candy is donated and is made in many different homes. Naturally, the Capitol Theatre is kept constantly "alive" on account of the number of people and activities that are connected with each candy sale. Furthermore, there are no candy shops near the theatre so we get no reaction from that source. The woman's page of the daily papers, carries a notice of the sales.

We have been more than successful in selling theatre parties—do not feature cut-rates. But by holding a section of seats any evening (with the exception of Saturdays and holidays) till 7:30—this appeals to organizations and groups of workers. We induce them to come at 7:30 and have their business meeting and supper afterwards.

Every Wednesday Night we have a Farewell showing of one of the past hits. They are run immediately following the last feature. Wednesday is the opening day of our mid-week program. By using the Farewell picture it makes us a good opening, doubling in receipts on any other day in the week. The rental price of the Farewell picture is very reasonable, as it has been shown in all the other theatres and is really a farewell showing of that picture. This beats a preview, as at a preview you do not know how many might attend the regular showing. The Farewell picture is "found money."

For "Sutter's Gold", Joe Hewitt of Robinson, Ill., set out a number of different size boxes painted green with bottom covered with clay or earth. On this was set a number of "nuggets" made of pebbles dipped in bronze. Stones varied in size from that of a pea to an ordinary marble. No copy was used at first and, after everyone in town had offered an opinion as to the reason for the displays, Joe gave out the tiein on the picture and where it could be seen.

Davis' Trade Paper Ad Display Board

Also recommended by Davis is a one-sheet board display (see photo) made up of ads taken from motion picture trade journals. These flashes also include picture pages and "Showmen's Lobby Laughs" from Motion Picture Herald and other such reproductions which he says have proved to be very fine crowd gatherers.

Gates Lists Ideas That Sold Well

The following are among the better money-getters for Arnold Gates, manager, Loew's Park, Cleveland, starting with tiein with local car line to have conductors on all cars passing the house call out name of theatre when they announced the cross street where the Park is situated.

Street-stopper was the filming of a fight between two men on busy street rooftop. When crowds gathered, banner was flown with copy on coming show.

Tied in with electrical appliance store to furnish prizes such as ice boxes, washing machines, radios, etc., on memory contest, each week photos of five stars posted in store until 20 pictures had been shown. Contestants wrote names of each star on special entry blank, also titles of last two pictures. Store carried this in all ads plus the current show at the Park.

Effective in getting away from the conventional dress style show with sponsor paying all expenses. While clothes were also shown, the hair angle was tops. 25 models were used and the show proved very popular.

Street bally was bannered donkey on "Night at the Opera" wherein the animal would lie down on car tracks at busy intersection, until removed by police. Tied up traffic, made papers, announced on radio.

An indoor Easter Egg Hunt which he could not use due to local restrictions is also recommended by Gates wherein small colored cards cut in shape of eggs were tacked under seats, placed one under each seat. At a certain time in the program, children are instructed to lift seat, remove egg and stand by for announcement of prizes.

Locally Made Picture Brings Extra Business

Made up of shots of merchants, local civic and scenic clips, schools and colleges, a home town picture tilted grosses for Manager Herbert Hairrell, Strand, Athens, Tenn. Participating prominents helped Herbert to get off the nut.

On "Country Doctor," a Twin Club was organized with prizes for the three oldest sets of twins present. Stunt proved outstanding in gathering publicity. Imprinted cards for serials are also used, with each chapter punched out when presented by youngsters. To all those turning in card with all numbers punched out, guest ticket is given.

Realistic Lobby Sells Graver's "Harvest" Month

Accompanying photo is one of the lobby arrangements created by Larry Graver, of the Grove, Willow Grove, Pa., to plug a recent October Pictures Harvest. Among the various decorations were stuffed birds, squirrels, rabbits, fox, raccoon, etc., and also shocks of wheat, pumpkins, autumn leaves.

Rock garden in center of lobby had pools at top and bottom with water pumped from below to run over falls at top. Front was trimmed with leaves, burgees, and box office covered with pampas grass.

On "Baby Face," Graver planted a ring game in lobby, women patrons invited to try and ring any of five 10-inch cutouts of male stars for guest ticket. Stunt was backed by three-sheet of Stanwyck.

For "Don't Get Personal," a lot of laughs were gotten by a lobby flash of a crude dog house labelled "any port in a storm." Small welcome mat and bottle of milk were placed at entrance and attached to clothes line were stockings, undies, etc.

Temple Birthday Card Signed by 5000 Children

For advance on "Captain January," at the Hippodrome, Cleveland, Mort Goodman, of Sid Dannenburg's Warner ad crew, reports a real sock in the shape of a ten-foot greeting card (see photo) to Shirley Temple on the occasion of her seventh birthday.

Planted in the theatre lobby, children, and adults, too, were invited to sign the giant card, some 5000 names being inscribed on the first two days of the date. Greetings were then airmailed to Shirley on the Fox lot where the starlet posed with it mounted on a step ladder, the shot used by all the wires.

Local papers ran a number of breaks, showing the first child signing her name, Temple and the card. United Airlines also got shots of one of the tots delivering the greetings to one of the stewardesses on the plane.

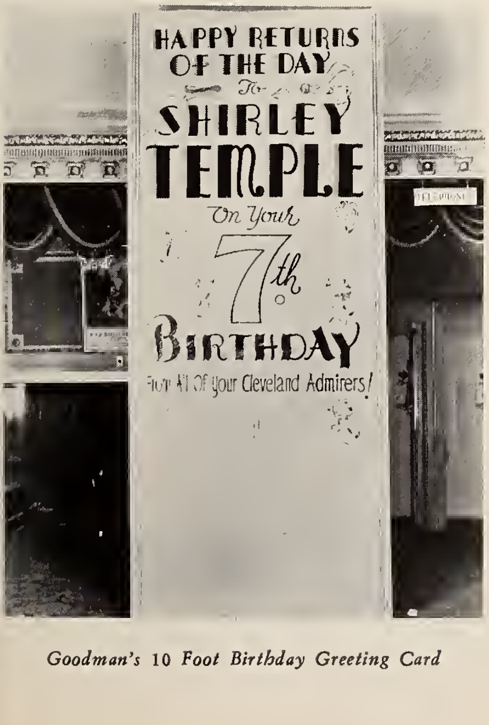
Triple Stage Wedding Tops Bryan Campaigns

Stood 'em in the aisles and hung 'em from the rafters, said Bunny Bryan, manager, Pantheon, Chicago, on his triple stage wedding. Started the ball rolling month ahead with trailers and newspaper stories inviting entries until three couples were obtained. Buildup continued until week ahead when Bunny broke a page of co-op ads and repeated on opening day. All advertisers had to contribute three gifts of clothing or dishes, etc., which were displayed in lobby. No screen credit was given.

Radio stations played wedding marches, couples were taken around to all cooperating stores for photos, newspapers did nobly, and though as to be expected the stunt produced a lot of headaches, Bryan says the final gross was more effective than aspirin.



Goodman's 10 Foot Birthday Greeting Card

Bunny Bryan's triple stage wedding described on this page takes this pen back to the exploitation days out of the Paramount office in Seattle when a stage wedding idea was thunk up by the late Fred Walton of Bellingham, Wash. Fred had the house sold out completely for the public splicing and, not wanting to disappoint the rest of his patrons who could not get in, sold the bride and groom on doing the wedding again for the second show, and still turned 'em away.

Week ahead of "Pursuit of Happiness" Bryan planted couple in lobby bedded down with board between them as in the picture and plenty of explanatory display copy around the stunt (see photo, Aug. 10, 1935 issue). Prior to the bundling flash, cards were posted all over the theatre reading: "Bundling Positively Forbidden."

Snipes Circus Copy on "Variety"

Playing "Variety" day and date with a circus, Bryan sniped all the circus paper with "See the circus in 'Variety,'" and had a Boy Scout trapeze display in lobby a week ahead. Business proved better than average opening day whereas previously the circus date killed grosses.

Lobby Lecture Sells Tickets

On Capt. Craig and his "Sea Killers" adventure film, Bryan found the lobby display of diving equipment, swordfish, octopus, etc., a real attention-getter. However, the real ticket-seller, he says, was a lecture every time a crowd gathered to see the display—which evidently proves the old-time pitch still is potent in the right spot.

Dutkin Sells Week's Shows With Four-Page Programs

Over at the Parkside, in Camden, N. J., Charley Dutkin, of radio-fame, has few newspaper facilities and therefore depends a lot on his meaty four-page programs to sell the whole week's shows of five changes. Sunday and Monday are plugged on front cover, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday on inside two pages, with Friday and Saturday on back page.

Press book mats are Dutkin's heaviest ammunition and he manages to make his additional attractions, gift and novelty nights, etc., stand out importantly in the copy.

Shares Double Truck Ad With Local Store

Most effectively did Manager J. M. Gow, Capitol, Nanaimo, B. C., tie in with the annual January Clearance Sale put on by one of his large stores which advertised the event with a special double truck special printing. Entire back page was given over to the theatre attractions. Ads were stuffed in every copy of local paper covering entire area up to 40 miles north and south, the tie-in on Gow's "Mutiny" date helping to break a lot of records. Theatre share of the cost was small, says the Round Tabler.

On "Country Doctor" Gow tied in with Carnation Milk for lobby display in return for which the milk people planted window cards in all grocery stores, credit lines in all store ads.

Circus Top Front Features Louie's "Clown" Campaign

One of his best exploitations, on "Circus Clown" is favored by Louis Charninsky, at the Capitol, Dallas, in which the entire front was transformed into a big top with all the atmosphere and circus talent (see photo), the bally alone coming to over $300, which Louie says results at the boxoffice justified.

Lobby was covered with sawdust, sideshow banners covered walls, inside and out. Fortune teller, red lemonade, peanuts and popcorn were on hand, wild animals of all kinds were borrowed from local zoo and placed alongside of walls in cages. Trap artist from the Big Show did his act from flying trap hung from top of lobby, Chaplin and Popeye impersonators also performed in lobby, as did three clowns.

Street parade was put on with circus band wagon and band, drawn by four white horses, Louie himself on horse leading the procession. All the talent and the animals on a flat top wagon were in line and much excitement prevailed. In addition, Charninsky carried extra newspaper ads, posted additional paper, distributed heralds and window cards, used radio.

Another topper from Charninsky was put across on "She Done Him Wrong," a 22-foot art head of Mae West reaching the dome of the lobby.

Miniature Circus Big for Goldquist

Two clickers stand out from among the slants forwarded by Round Tabler F. C. Goldquist, now at the Web, in Savanna, Ill. He describes the miniature circus display (see photo) used at the Palace in Danville, and the "Four Horsemen" street stunt (see photo) at the Plaza, Galesburg, Ill. Says "F. C.":

The woods are full of miniature circuses these days and I often wonder if these are used when theatres play pictures of this kind. I built a model circus years ago and used it occasionally in stores and windows. This went over big in Danville a number of years ago while we were playing a midwinter circus at the Palace Theatre. I also used the circus in a store on "Circus Days" the old Jackie Coogan film. It also came in OK on "Sally of the Sawdust." On the latter picture I built a typical sideshow "rag" front; built a brilliant circus body which I mounted on a car pasting a 6 sheet on the side and hired a small band to make a "din" out in front at strategic times.

Four Horse "Horsemen" Bally

Going away back to "The Four Horsemen" I recall painting two long banners which I placed back to back and mounted on the ends of four poles. Four horses of the proper colors were secured and mounted by four Legionaires in uniforms. Each carried a pole and rode through the streets of Galesburg single file carrying the banners. We had quite a time getting the horses "broke" to this strange procession, but finally put it across.

Holden Ties Cubans To "Patrol" Opening

When queried on his standout exploitations, Earle Holden, of the Capitol, Atlanta, lists as his topper a tieup with the Cuban Government wherein a flight of planes was sent over to Miami for the opening of "Dawn Patrol," when Earle managed the Fairfax in that spot. The lowdown on this and other tieins he favors are as follows.

Tied up with the Cuban government whereby they sent a flight of four planes from Havana to Miami to open the picture. Tied up every civic club in the city on this. Probably only international tie up ever made between two countries. President of Cuba sent personal representative to be at the prevue showing. City of Miami thought so much of the stunt they have made the visit of Cuban fliers to Miami a yearly event ever since. This was the first theatre stunt ever pulled in Miami that ever made front page of Miami Herald. Pulled in 1930.

Seymour Morris reports a tiein with a taxi company to haul folks from the theatre home free of charge providing patrons paid their way downtown. While at the newspaper office framing the tiein ad, another taxi owned heard of the hookup, got all the rest of the drivers together with the result that the next morning the paper blossomed out with ads from all taxi outfits offering the same theatre trip and on grosses.

Creates Cocoanut Ice Cream

"The Cocoanuts," done while located at Fairfax in Miami. Sold large manufacturer of ice cream idea of making cocoanut ice cream after much difficulty. Manufacturer stated cream would not go. They tried it and it has been a popular seller ever since. They could not fill the demand when the ice cream was introduced and naturally the picture was plugged plenty.

Tolls Bell for "Byrd"

"Byrd at South Pole," also done while located at Fairfax in Miami. Secured from railroad company the largest locomotive bell that could be found. Took this to the theatre, built stand in front of theatre and mounted bell. Announcement placed on sides of stand to effect "bell would ring five minutes before showing of feature." A simple stunt, but one that created much talk, inasmuch as downtown Miami was not in the habit of hearing a locomotive bell suddenly ring out. Railroad station some distance from downtown. Every time bell would ring, people would come from all directions.

Stages Air Battle on "Angels"

On "Hell's Angels," at the Fairfax, Miami, outstanding stunt of this campaign was staging of gigantic aerial battle over the theatre 30 minutes before opening performance. Tied in with National Guard who had machine gun company and about 6 machine guns, loaded with blanks, on the marquee. Tied in with Curtis Wright flying service to send all their planes over the theatre at certain time. Private pilots decided to get into the fun and the flight consisted of 15 airplanes. As they approached the theatre, the machine guns opened fire. Planes also dropped aerial bombs, especially made that exploded with loud bang but harmless effect. All planes participating had "Hell's Angels" painted on bottom wing. Incidentally, Young Stribling, the fighter, now dead, piloted his own plane in the formation.

Holden's Award "Flanders" Campaign

For "Dog of Flanders," done at Capitol here in Miami, outstanding stunt that won my Silver award was I believe the enormous amount of publicity secured through the tiein with the Georgian for the dog giveaway. Refer to my campaign book for number of inches.

Five Unit Performance Clicks for Lamm

Digging through his files, Julius Lamm, Uptown, Cleveland, came across campaign on his recent five-unit show put together to build up his feature attraction. All advertising carried the five idea, the separate units enumerated in individual spaces.

In addition to the big picture, Julius had a Bowes short, March of Time, Popeye and newsreel, all of which was plugged via trailer 10 days ahead, on special lobby posters. Other ad slants included hand-bills, stories and ads in the big dailies, foreign and neighborhood papers, shopping guides.

Golf Lessons In Lobby Worked Well for Moss

While at the RKO Theatre, in Los Angeles, Dick Moss, now at the Boulevard, in the same spot, had a well-known professional give golf lessons in the spacious lobby. Contests have also clicked hard for Dick, one for a Constance Bennett double landing page one stories for a week. Winner appeared in lobby wearing identical costume used by star in pictures. Reviewers contest on a Garbo years back, had paper sponsor contest for best review by readers.

Moss also details a comedy carnival slant, using a Chaplin, Lloyd and Laurel and Hardy presented in conjunction with regular show. Paper was tied in to request from readers opinion on which of the comics they considered the greatest.

MORE ON JOFFEE'S FREE PASSES

CANNOT ENDORSE IDEA SAYS CARTER BARRON

Dear Mike:

Something for nothing?

Decidedly no for the obvious and often proven reason that Americans depreciate anything for which they don't have to dig deep down in their jeans for. Is it possible that any theatre which has been established in any community for a period of years has not catered to almost all of its citizenry, excluding of course those people who will not come to the movies for any reason? I am a firm believer that movie patrons today do not patronize a particular house just because it is the most beautiful in town or simply because it offers institutional benefits that competitive houses do not hold forth.

People today are picture-shoppers. Unless people are very fastidious about what house they frequent, and these are in the gross minority, they will pack the worst house in town if it has the best picture in town. The best proof of this is the many beautiful, ornate houses in America who are playing to ridiculously small audiences simply because they can't feature good product. Sure, Mr. Joffe will get 10,000 more customers—but only for that week or period during which he makes his free offer.

They may be impressed on their first visit and return the following week, but if in subsequent weeks he does not have an attraction infinitely more appealing than his competitors I am afraid he will be out whatever money he spent for those institutional advertisements. As much as I would like to be able to agree that Mr. Joffee is wise, in the light of dollars and cents I am simply unable to endorse the idea. I cling to the theory the only thing that makes for good steady patronage is good pictures.—Carter Barron, Loew's Theatres, Eastern Division Mgr.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

WHAT ARE THE EFFECTS ASKS HUGH GARDNER

Dear Mike:

Enjoyed the ideas or arguments pro and con on Barney Joffee's "Free Pass" method. I agree heartily with both sides. I am sure that Hal Kopplin of Miami, Florida, if he knew what a wonderful thing Joffee and his associates have done in taking over the old Pantages Theatre in Kansas City after it has been closed for a number of years, located on dirty Twelfth Street, would understand the "why" of Barney Joffee's free pass idea. Circumstances do alter cases.

Starting with a house that had always had a cheap reputation in a cheap district, they even went so far as to buy another store show next door and changed it from a cheap burlesque joint to a respectable type of straight picture grind show, thereby helping the neighborhood of The Tower. The fact that they recently, even before their second anniversary, were able to raise their admission to 35c, denotes showmanship.

I thought at the time they opened The Tower that it would have been better if they had obtained the Orpheum in a better location and which was closed. I know though that they have brought the better class into The Tower and have kept the old patrons as well and I imagine the "Free Pass" idea was to get more of the better class folks down to see what a real show they had. Knowing the situation, I think it was a wonderful jesture.

Letters on this page from various of the members continues the discussion pro or con, on the merits of Barney Joffee's free pass stunt detailed in the issue of April 18. Round Tablers Carter Barron, John Trewhela and Tom Soriero express themselves as agin' it while Hugh Gardner aligns himself on Barney's side with some facts on the beginning of the venture.

Gardner, and no doubt others, would like to know how Joffee has fared with this advertising experiment and we have forwarded the request on to the Kansas City theatreman.

What I would like to read now in your interesting department would be a recital by Mr. Joffee as to the effects his ad had. —Hugh Gardner, Manager, Orpheum Neosho, Mo.

Giant Star Cutouts Stop 'Em on "Fleet"

Much in evidence in European show circles and now catching on over here is the gargantuan figure cutout for theatre and outside exploitation. Eddie Melnicker of Loew's, Atlanta, holds height honors with his "Pagan" cutout that topped 65 feet and the general idea is now utilized by Manager Rudy Kuehn and publicity chief Bob Deitch, for "Follow the Fleet" at the Stanley, Jersey City, N. J.

Two star cutouts, each 25 feet high (see photo) were placed at either side of stairs.

SANTA CLAUS DOES NOT GIVE AWAY HIS WARES

Dear Mike:

To me passes are "poison ivy," except those given to newspaper reviewers. I remember when a boy and working in the office of a railroad company a saying in common use: If you want to find out the defects of a road, ask the fellow who travels on a pass. Passes, for the most part, are not appreciated, and why a theatre should give away the only merchandise we have to sell—seats—any more than a merchant playing Santa Claus and giving away his wares, is beyond me. It makes a "red" out of lots of folks when they see their nabor "horning-in" on a free-for-cost ticket.—John W. Trewhela, Babcock Theatre, Billings, Mont.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

GOOD ATTRACTIONS FILL THEATRE SEATS

Dear Mike:

I read with interest your comment pertaining to passes, etc. Personally, I am dead against that kind of advertising. Years ago I was in favor of it. We did not have so many theatres for the public to go to and we used to paper the houses on the opening of a play or picture to get the public in and reap the benefit of mouth-to-mouth advertising. If the public saw a great picture or play, it would build up a deal of good will.

However, any exhibitor today that hands out hundreds of passes or coupons has to bear one thing in mind: you can always get the public when you give them something for nothing, but to make them come back and pay is another thing. To build up good will that way is just kidding ourselves, for the ones that exercise the offer of using these passes are the same ones who will pay elsewhere if they see an attraction that appeals more to them. The reason is that we have so much opposition. There are more theatres and attractions today, and to try to make the public come to one theatre all the time cannot be done unless this theatre at all times has attractions that will draw, for the show is the thing. That is the only means that will fill the house. Free passes on poor or fair pictures will never do it. Good will alone today won't bring the public in when you haven't the attraction, which it seems to me is the primary object of this ad.

In my years of show business I have talked to men in other lines, and the consensus of opinion is that the public always feels that when they get something for nothing there must be a "catch" to it. If it was good, you would not have to give it away, and that applies to theatres. Showmanship, coupled with good attractions, fills the theatre seats. Passes never bring in the shekels at the box office, for the ones that use them are likewise the one that usually pan a show, but passes can serve their purpose if given out where value can be received. I mean by this: tieups with merchants that work out a mutual benefit. Of course that usually is taken care under "Exploitation."—Thomas D. Soriero, Manager United Artists Theatres, Los Angeles, California.

'Housewives Matinee' Held By Sobler at Spreckles

A special showing of "Love Before Breakfast" and dubbed a "housewives matinee" was held by Abe Sobler, Spreckles Theatre, San Diego, Cal., for which he promoted a beautiful breakfast set which was given to woman holding lucky number ticket.

Lobby display featured attractive girl standing at table fully set with the winning dishes (see photo). Another stunt that attracted attention was the black eye street bally for which Abe used two blonde girls, each with their eyes painted with a realistic "shiner" and carrying black suit cases with catchlines, picture and theatre credits.

Dietz Sock Copy Sells "Love Before Breakfast"

Sylvan Dietz at the Rialto in Glens Falls, N. Y., had special window cards made up for "Love Before Breakfast," copy reading: "Championship fight of the year, Rialto Theatre, Ringside seats! Battling Kay, Carole Lombard vs. Socko Scott, Preston Foster. Two fiery contestants, ten riotous rounds to a dizzy decision. Referee, Dan Cupid; Purse, Matrimonial sweepstakes in Love Before Breakfast."

For his street bally, Sylvan used an old man with long beard in wheel chair, who pushed himself about town, sign on chair reading, "You're never too old to enjoy..." etc., etc.

On "Captain January" through tieup with cooperating department store, Temple dolls, dresses, etc., were given away at kid matinee, store devoting window to display and distributing star photos. For the lobby, baker contributed a Temple birthday cake which was cut and given to patrons.

Milking Contest Staged By Winans for "Way"

Announcement of a milking contest said to be the first ever held on a Gary stage, was made by City manager Clyde Winans for the "Milky Way" opening at the Palace Theatre. Cows were brought by bannered truck and parked in front of the theatre hours before contest was scheduled, flood lights playing on them.

A mechanical cow was promoted and set up in lobby next to table with card detailing contest, which was plugged in newspapers and trailer. 18 milkmaids were chosen from those who applied and these were introduced on stage opening night and divided into relays of threes, each relay was allowed two minutes to demonstrate their speed in the "art" of milking. Cash prizes were awarded winners.

For street bally Winans used a clown dressed as a milkman carrying a tray of milk and set of boxing gloves. Bannered car toured nearby towns distributing heralds on the contest and entire staff wore white coats and caps during run. Bud Moulder, assistant manager, aided on the campaign.

Johnson Hosts Patrons During Anniversary Week

To stimulate business during anniversary week at the Gauley Theatre, Gauley Bridge, West Va., Lee Johnson used a special trailer two weeks ahead stating that in appreciation of patrons' business for the past year, all those celebrating birthdays during "the" week would be admitted as guests of the management. To avoid complications, names and birthdates were registered in a book.

Charninsky Honored By Centennial Head

For his excellent work in building grosses in the smaller towns representing the Interstate Circuit and the Texas Centennial Exposition, Louie Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Tex., was presented with a ten gallon hat (see photo) by W. A. Webb, general manager of the Centennial Exposition. Louie makes a collection of these hats, having already received top pieces from Ken Maynard, Tom Mix, Buck Jones, Reb Russell and Tim McCoy.

Friedman's Lobby Display Sells "Hitch Hike Lady"

Ted Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y., for "Hitch Hike Lady" made a tieup with Domino Sugar whereby they distributed circulars plugging the picture four days ahead. Windows were arranged, lobby display constructed featuring sugar products and girl handed out samples and imprinted recipe books.

For "Harmony Lane," Ted constructed a lobby display consisting of a three sheet attractively cut and placed in illuminated shadow box. Heralds paid for by local merchants' ads were distributed one week ahead.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Fisher's "Pompeii" Front

An attractive front for "Last Days of Pompeii" was constructed by Julius Fisher, Capitol Theatre, Singapore, S. S., with cutout letters (see photo) standing approximately 20 feet high. Simulated volcano was planted atop marquee from which smoke and flames issued.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Two Girls and a Boy Bally "These Three"

A special screening of "These Three" was held by J. Phelps, Loew's Vendome, Nashville, for critics, school teachers, ministers and radio executives. Two girls and boy were used on streets two days ahead carrying appropriate copy and special book was built in lobby from which girl called subscribers advising them of playdates.

Imprinted napkins were distributed in leading night clubs, heralds handed out during teachers State convention and service staff and cashiers created a whispering campaign.

Jackson Sponsors Theatre Club

With merchants hit hard a few years back by bad business conditions, Manager E. R. Jackson, Best, Pulaski, Tenn., hit upon the idea of a free show one day a week, Friday, in cooperation with leading stores. Over 30 came in with Jackson, giving theatre tickets with each dollar purchase. Stores in smaller neighboring villages also cooperated. Each store was allowed 200 tickets weekly at reduced prices with color changed for each free day and tickets good only for the day they were stamped. Merchants put on special sales and advertised heavily.

The event was called "Merchants' Theatre Club" and lasted four weeks. Admissions ran from 1,200 to 2,100 on the free days, theatre having 480 seats. In addition to the added business, Jackson says that many patrons who came in on the cuff returned as steady paying patrons, reflected in the increased grosses throughout the year following this campaign.

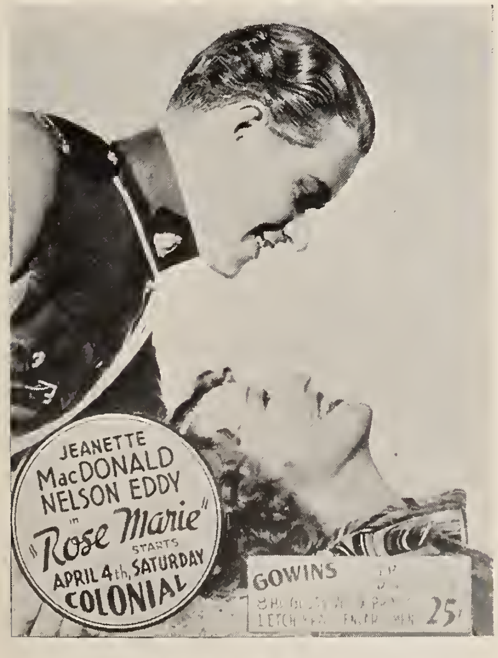
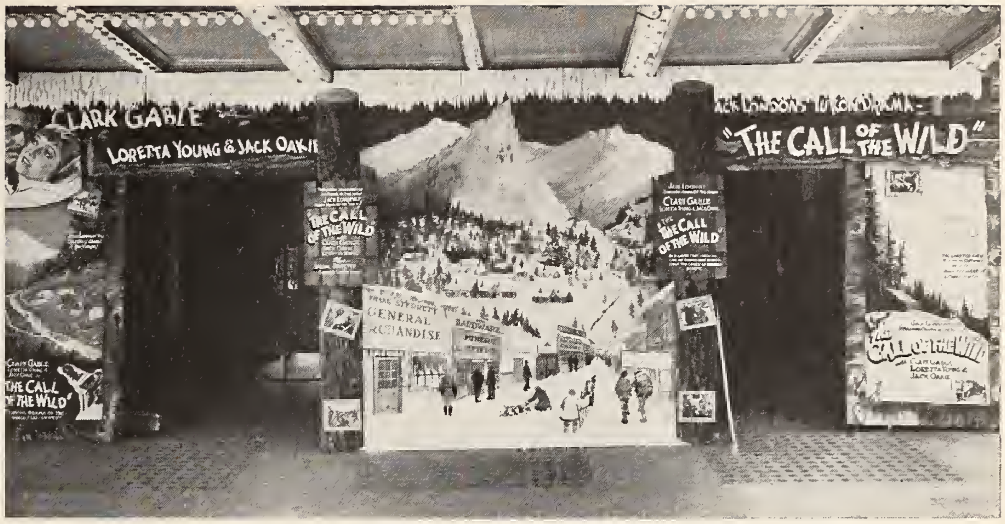
Next in line are Guttman's doorman and cashier cards headed by the "I am your doorman (cashier)," rest of card telling about coming show. Reverse side carries merchant copy which pays for the printing.

Ads in local Shopper's Guide are also found helpful and Mike makes a personal trip through all surrounding rural communities once a month with window cards and one-sheets on coming attractions. His rural trade is especially strong on week-ends.

Guttman has also inaugurated a policy of running monthly a two-column calendar ad of all coming attractions in the next 30 days. Says folks clip this for future reference.



Guttman's "Rose Marie" Photo Novelty Card



STUPENDOUS FRONT. Created by Ralph W. Wood, of the Circle Theatre, in Portland, Oregon, on "The Call of the Wild", this most attractive front brought all the attention it well deserved. Mr. Wood is a firm believer in the theatre front as a show window in his location and does a lot of selling with this type of display.

Gag Heralds Sell "Dead" for McCuan

L. W. McCuan, Uptown Theatre, Dresden, Tenn. distributed "wanted" heralds for "The Walking Dead," offering passes to two young ladies who would volunteer to stay through the entire show alone, one on one side of the house and the second on the other. Herald advised that an ambulance would be stationed in front of theatre in case of emergency.

To the graduating classes of high school, McCuan mailed printed congratulatory cards with invitation to attend show during commencement week as guests of the management.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Contest Highlights "Zero" Campaign

Frank Shaffer, Virginia Theatre, Harrisonburg, Va. promoted a full page co-op ad for "Ceiling Zero" in which each merchant's ad contained an oversized letter in upper left hand corner. These when properly assembled spelled picture title and stars, cash prizes going to winners, paid for by cooperating merchants. Stories running in papers.

Gaily colored heralds with art work were widely distributed, 24 sheet posted on large board at County Court House and special lobby was constructed.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Promotes Refrigerator For "Country Doctor"

Ed Harrison, Capitol, Pittsfield, Mass. for "Doctor," had gas company come through with refrigerator for giveaway and distribute heralds. Box was displayed in lobby during run and company's ad included picture mention and copy on the Quins.

Doctors and nurses were circularized, baker devoted window to large cut of the babes and featured Quintuplet sets of cookies. Department store came through with window display of baby goods, dolls, etc., the latter were also planted in the lobby, and colored photos of the starlets were framed and used in jewelers' windows.

Kids Help Bally "Times" for Bruno

James Bruno, Loew's Burland, Bronx, N. Y. rounded up the kids in his neighborhood to help bally "Modern Times." Each youngster was given a cutout letter of the star's name and paraded about town, stopping and spelling out the name.

Through tieup with luggage shop, lucky numbered sales slips were handed out, corresponding numbers posted on blackboard and tickets going to the holders. Soda dispenser in ice cream parlor wore a Chaplin derby and mustache, fountain also decorated with cutouts. James also posted notices on bulletin boards of neighborhood schools.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Schumann's 'Obsession' Window

Accompanying photo shows drug store window secured by S. B. Schumann, Ritts Theatre, Rittman, Ohio, for "Magnificent Obsession." Color scheme was yellow ribbons on a field of green with stills made transparent with lights from behind. Top of window had two lavender flood lights and Schumann reports it very effective.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

IN THE RAW

JUST supposing that the New Deal's Resettlement Administration was to employ some photographers and editors and put together and print a piece of rotogravure literature entitled "The Plow That Broke the Plains" in say about seven and a half pages. And then let us suppose that the government bureau then approached Mr. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, president and publisher of the New York Times, with a request that the literature mentioned be substituted for the New York Times Sunday rotogravure section and circulated to the subscribers as a part of the paper.

What do you fancy Mr. Sulzberger would say?

Possibly he would not care for the idea.

But last Sunday, under an unbiased headline: "Raw Deal for the New Deal," Mr. Frank S. Nugent, in charge of the Times motion picture section, takes the motion picture industry to task because it has not accepted for distribution and exhibition a twenty-eight minute picture on what has happened to the Great Plains.

It appears that the Resettlement Administration's three-reel picture was put together by Mr. Pare Lorentz, who by the bye, is one of the more capable members of the New York cult of screen commentators.

The picture is what the British have come to call so euphemistically "a documentary" film, that to differentiate it from theatrical product, and all too often to label, abroad, just plain industrial advertising copy for the screen.

The assertion is made that the picture is well done and that it exposes the ravishment of the trans-Missouri prairie, presenting finally some indication that by turning a lot of it back to grass some homesteads can be developed and protected.

Most of the shouting on the subject of the picture is done by young persons who think that grass is something that grows between the sidewalk and the curb in Forest Hills and who would not know chaparral from lilac. Meanwhile it relates to a region which the Creator found available only for first class bison and third class Indians.

The merits of the picture, however, and the worthiness or practicality of the cause, have no bearing whatever on the issue.

Assuming cinematographic and "documentary" perfection for the film, and granting tremendous merit for its cause, one may yet inquire what that has to do with the motion picture theatre screen. The fact that the motion picture industry has a mechanism for purveying entertainment to the millions, and has thereby acquired an audience, does not mean that it is free to deliver over that audience to some government bureau which wants to deliver a message on physical geography and related social concerns.

That audience no more wants, and no more would accept, pictures of the ilk of "The Plow That Broke the Plains" than it would serial presentation of the Congressional Record in the New York Times or the Daily News.

One is reminded at the moment of a considerably more exciting feature length picture on a related subject, entitled "Grass," the cinema tale, epic maybe, most documentary, about the travels of the wild Bakhtiari tribesmen and their herds in the pursuit of grass, fleeing the seasonal drought across a hell of desert, raging rivers and mountain walls. The picture was edited by the editor of this page, for release by the then puissant Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The production was hailed and cheered and lauded by the press, and all the sophomore critics of the day. It swept out across the nation on a wave of tremendous publicity and laid flat on the floor. Its gross income was $75,000 in a season when a typical, program drama released under the same auspices with a tenth of the same publicity and no laudation would gross from $700,000 upwards, and a mine run Gloria Swanson clothes-horse opera was good for more than a million. That's how the public eats grass pictures.

Mr. Nugent naively observes of "The Plow That Broke the Plains": "It probably will not reach the neighborhood theatres where it might repay in information the local Federal taxpayer whose contributions to the government made the film possible."

Do we gather that the taxpayers are to be found mostly at neighborhood theatres? Are we to assume that the taxpayer is looking to the cinema where he now and then buys entertainment for New Deal reports? Having paid for the picture by what Mr. Nugent poetically calls "contributions," is the taxpayer now to be invited to have part of the show for which he bought his seat canceled so he can see what fun the alphabet boys have had playing movies out among the buffalo wallows?

The expression in the New York Times assumes importance beyond the scope of even that great newspaper, since the outgiving is typical of a whole uproar of like indignations because the screen is not handed over to the New Deal.

Let the Resettlement Administration go hire a hall and see what it draws.

This Week

Threat

The dove of peace fluttered over the Broadway managers and the playwrights this week but for a demand of nine film companies for a change in the basic agreement covering the sale of film rights of plays. The companies threatened withdrawal of financial backing, which reached a peak of $1,500,000 in the season just ended, and was indicated as $2,000,000 for 1936-37.

See page 13.

Cooperating

The cooperation of exhibitors in furthering the community better films movement, and the aid of producers in raising film standards were warmly praised by social leaders and club women attending the annual convention of the Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs, at Kansas City.

The conclusions of the convention and an explanation of the machinery of the better films councils in Missouri are reported on page 15.

3 Year Plan

Plans for producing 34 pictures over a three-year period were divulged by Major Henry A. Procter, M. P., on his arrival in New York Tuesday. Five companies in which he is an executive will be represented.

Details of Major Procter's program are on page 26.

Flash

Financial attention in motion pictures this week was centered on Columbia's nine months statement in which $958,578 profit was reported; Universal's registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission of statements describing a new stock structure, intended for purposes of simplification; RCA's initial dividend declaration of 87½ cents on first preferred stock; approval of General Theatres Equipment's reorganization by the courts, and observations by financial editors of the New York Herald-Tribune that theatre receipts and film rentals of Twentieth Century-Fox are running ahead of last year.

See page 50.

Turnabout

The Pettengill subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee acted surprisingly this week, when, in recommending passage of the Pettengill anti-block booking bill, they purged the proposal of all references to blind selling.

The present and future status of the Neely-Pettengill block booking measure is described on page 27.

Second Stage

With general approval obtained from six distributing companies for its 10-point program for improving exhibitor-distributor relations, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is prepared for its second stage of trade practice conferences, that of drafting specific clauses.

The progress to date is reviewed on page 46.

Lull

As the annual between-seasons lull brought a kind of leisure to Hollywood last week, eyes and ears were wide open to catch symbol or cymbal betokening the break of news from Paramount and Universal ensuant upon executive inspection of concededly momentous portent.

A closeup of the situation is presented in "The Hollywood Scene" on page 21.

Uphold Quota

British exhibitors have further intensified the arguments in England over the continuance of the quota law governing importations, by voting against any abolishment of the restrictions. They also voted unalterable opposition to a return of the old order of compulsory blind buying and block booking.

Voiced by a large group of London owners, representing a typical cross-section of exhibition in England, the results of the poll appear on page 24.

G-B Not for Sale

Twenty-four features for 1936-37 and a statement that the company will not be sold, contrary to previously published reports, were the principal developments made known last week at the annual sales convention of GB Pictures, in New York.

Titles of the new program and the talent assigned to make them are outlined on page 63.

Detail and Denial

President S. R. Kent of Twentieth Century-Fox arrived in New York on Tuesday after nearly six weeks in Europe, revealed details of the production arrangement worked out with British National and denied various reports lately current relating to the company's objectives at home and abroad.

The story is on page 56.

"Hostile"

Germany's "hostile attitude" toward creative workers has forced postponement of the annual congress of the Confederation of Performing Rights Societies of the World, scheduled for Berlin in June, E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, disclosed.

Washington and Ottawa legislative developments on copyrights also are reported on page 62.

Curtain

Last Friday's twilight saw the curtain rung down on the second annual Show of Showmanship sponsored by Quigley Publications and produced by the Manager's Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Attendance was clocked at more than double the previous high. Among those present were enthusiastic talkers-up of Los Angles and Chicago as bidders for second and third run bookings. At a late hour no decision had been reached as to whether the production will be roadshown.

Newsreel as Weapon

John Dored writes a firsthand account of the significance of the motion picture newsreel to Italy's present movement in Ethiopia to mould a new Roman Empire, and in it describes the recent pillaging in Addis Ababa.

Denham Active

Seven of the 15 stages planned for London Films' studio at Denham are now ready for equipment, writes Bruce Allan of the HERALD's office at the British capital:

Other developments, including the independent exhibitors' proposal that the quota be cut in half, are treated in the article on page 56.

Kennedy Returning

The management and directors of Paramount Pictures Corporation will learn in a few days the result of the survey conducted by J. P. Kennedy of the studio situation in Hollywood when he arrives with his report. He left California Tuesday for New York. It is likely a special meeting will be called to hear Mr. Kennedy. At the same time J. J. Ford will report on his study of the company's theatre situation.

Will Rogers Drive

Approximately 5,000 theatres this week are participating in the drive to raise funds for the maintenance of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac, N. Y., for the ill and needy of the stage and screen. Governors in 44 states have voiced their approval of the campaign and have urged their citizens to cooperate.

Well paired Director and Scenarist Frank Capra and Robert Riskin, dually responsible for uptodate, locally topical "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," "It Happened One Night" and generically similar productions, have toiled with the attention gaze of professional Hollywood full upon them as they brought from printed page to cutting room John Hilton's "The Lost Horizon," a novel of diametrically opposite attributes staged in spectacular proportions by Columbia.

Photographs and data indicative of results are published on pages 16 and 17.

Unsnarled

Unsnarling the legal skein tediously spun about the Government's anti-trust action against major film companies, recently settled out of court, continued this week with affirmation by the U. S. Supreme Court of the Department of Justice's right to ask dismissal without prejudice of the Fanchon and Marco civil suit in St. Louis early in the sequence of actions subsequently abandoned.

Grounds for the decision are cited on page 18.

Dismissal

Complaint of Bernard Gogel asking $3,000,000 damages from American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and Electric Research Products for alleged violation of the Sherman and Clayton antitrust acts was dismissed in the United States district court of New York this week by Federal Judge John C. Knox.

Excerpts from the judicial ruling are published on page 59.

52 from Republic

Fifty-two features and four serials will be offered by Republic Pictures for the new season, according to J. J. Millstein, general sales manager, who will preside over the company's sales meeting in Chicago June 5-6.

The product is described on page 59.

Actors Elect

Actors were busy with ballots during the week. In New York the Actors Equity Association voted the regular slate of councillors into office. In Hollywood the Screen Actors Guild reelected its executive officers.

Executive personnel and details of the voting are given on page 26.

Wages

Wages became the subject of much conversation and a bit of action East and West during the week, with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees demanding of independent producers payment on the same scale applied to major studios and New York operators' locals resuming consideration of a long proposed merger recently tabled.

These and related matters are treated of in a story on page 18.

Simplified

Stipulations filed this week by counsel for Irving Trust Company as trustee of RKO reduced claims against the company $27,000, financially speaking, to $2,930,000, numerically to a total of eight. Obliquely, RKO was virtually eleminated from participation in profits from operation of the Radio City Music Hall under a revision of the agreement defining participation of Rockefeller Center, RCA and RKO in affairs of the theatre.

A report of the operations involved is published on page 18.

Paper Resistance

Resistance to the trend started by Paramount's announcement that it will rent instead of sell accessories to exhibitors beginning June 1st will be a major topic of discussion by delegates to the National Poster Service Association's three-day convention in Cleveland June 2-4 with plans to enter upon large-scale manufacture of accessories and trailers to be placed before the meeting.

Pertinent information appears on page 26.

Delegates to the Twentieth Century-Fox sales convention scheduled to open May 30th in Chicago will be told that the company's program for 1936-37 will be composed of 67 feature productions and 96 short subjects, exclusive of newsreel editions, according to advance information obtained in New York. Four Will Rogers pictures will be re-released.

Additional information relating to the program is published on page 26.

Educational Stars

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, announced on Tuesday that his company will produce 52 two-reelers and 46 one-reel subjects next season. Among the stars for these are Buster Keaton, Buster West, Tom Patricola, Bert Lahr and possibly Lupino Lane. About 60 per cent of the product will be made in the East.

GB to Empire

Distribution of Gaumont-British product in Canada will be transferred from Regal Films, Ltd., to Empire Films, Ltd., under an agreement covering a seven-year period, according to Paul Nathanson, newly elected vice-president of Empire, who attended the GB sales convention in New York last week.

Ramifications and implications of the deal are dealt with on page 28.

STAGE IS FACING LOSS OF $2,000,000 FILM BACKING

Hollywood Threatens to Withdraw Financing Unless Definite Clause to Guide Arbiter Is Written Into Agreement

More Than 40 Per Cent of Past Season's Broadway Production Investment Accredited to Motion Picture Companies

Withdrawal of the motion picture industry's generous contribution from stage production is threatened by nine contributing film companies unless the Dramatists' Guild changes certain provisions in the manager-playwright minimum basic agreement which was ratified by the Guild membership on Monday.

At stake is the $2,000,000 support that has been indicated for Broadway next season, bringing to a new high the film industry's participation in the legitimate theatre, which reached a peak of $1,500,000 in the season closing this Saturday.

After three months of sharp dissension the fight appeared to have been settled when the Guild members by a vote of two to one adopted the agreement covering the production of stage plays as previously agreed upon between the Guild and the League of New York Theatres. The pact is effective immediately for five years.

Protest Provisions on Sales

Demanding that the provisions governing the selling to motion picture companies of plays which have film backing be "frozen" into the contract, the major companies notified the Guild prior to the vote that no picture money would be forthcoming if the clause was permitted to stand. Willing to overlook some other provisions which they also had objected to, the film companies centered their criticism on the procedure which set up a board consisting of five producers' and five playwrights' representatives to instruct the arbiter in deciding the disposition of plays for screen purposes.

"The picture companies object to an arrangement that could be altered from week to week," said Richard Aldrich, in charge of Columbia's play activities. "We want a definite picture clause written into the contract by which the arbiter would be guided."

Pending settlement of the issue, Mr. Aldrich said that those companies which will continue their film backing regardless will do so only with playwrights who are not members of the Guild and who have not signed the agreement. He believed, however, that the disputed point eventually will be ironed out.

The companies which have taken this stand are Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Warner Brothers, RKO, Universal, Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox and John Hay Whitney's Pioneer Pictures (RKO) and Selznick International, releasing through United Artists.

The film producers' ultimatum was delivered to Sidney Howard, president of the Guild, in the form of a letter from J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of MGM.

In reply, Mr. Howard said: "I am mindful of Hollywood's protests against the contract and its decision not to invest money in the theatre if the contract is approved. However, I have disregarded these because film producers have already invested in plays under our contract and did so even before the contract was amended."

SAYS FILMS DON'T NEED THE STAGE

Refuting "a deep conviction" that the legitimate theatre is indispensable to the motion picture industry for story material and acting talent, Melvyn Douglas, who has been in the theatre 17 years and a screen actor for five, declares "that the theatre could die tomorrow and the picture business would hardly know it."

"The screen today is getting most of its story material from novels and original manuscripts," he pointed out. "And even when a story idea does come from the theatre it has to be so completely rewritten that it no longer is the same as the play.

"The same is true of acting talent. About the best that can be said of young actors who come to the screen from the stage is that they are promising material, capable of being trained to become screen actors.

"Motion pictures may continue to use the theatre merely as a convenient place for recruiting likely material, but the day when the stage was indispensable to the screen definitely has passed."

He added that he "could see no reason for prolonging the fight against the managers when the dramatists have a much better contract than they ever had before."

A spokesman for the contract committee of the League of New York Theatres, the Broadway producing managers' organization, said that the film companies "may rest assured that nothing will be done to prevent their financing of the theatre," and that the matter would be straightened out without a great deal of difficulty.

Twenty-five amendments were ratified at Monday's meeting of the Guild, some changing phrases, some entire stipulations. Both the producers and the dramatists expressed relief at the termination of the fight.

Meanwhile it was made known by the film industry's representatives that probably 40 per cent of the Broadway production investment in the 1935-36 season came from the motion picture companies, and that this percentage would be appreciably increased in 1936-37, provided the Guild met the industry's terms.

MGM, which bankrolled Broadway to the extent of approximately $500,000 in the season just ended, will continue as the No. 1 company in this respect with at least an equal investment. Paramount or Warner Brothers will be in the second spot, with Columbia third, Twentieth Century-Fox fourth and the others contributing in a smaller measure.

Samuel Goldwyn, United Artists member-producer, has been aloof from play backing, but Broadway observers report that he would be willing to finance one or two productions which appear to be "sure things."

Columbia may venture $250,000 in Broadway investments through Mr. Aldrich, who will produce himself and may finance outside producers. Mr. Aldrich is on the hunt for scripts, and expects to put on three or four plays next season. Mr. Aldrich participates in the financing, under his arrangement with Columbia.

Next season hardly a Broadway producer of any importance will not have picture backing, and in three or four seasons Hollywood will be in complete possession of "the street," in Mr. Aldrich's opinion.

Cites Complaints

He said the industry is endeavoring to avoid using the term "Hollywood backing," because of the complaints of such playwrights as Elmer Rice and Sidney Howard, who have expressed trepidation over the effect on the legitimate theatre's standards from the influx of Hollywood money and influence.

Declaring that those fears are groundless, Mr. Aldrich cited "Ethan Frome" and "Pride and Prejudice," both backed by MGM, as plays which could not, or would not, have been produced by individual managers because they did not appear commercial. Both fine productions, they proved successful, too, at the box-office, and MGM was justified in its judgment.

New Broadway recruits from the motion picture ranks are Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, formerly of Paramount, who have formed a theatrical producing triumvirate with Leland Hayward. The firm will operate without film backing, it was announced, and while the program will begin with a new play by Hecht and MacArthur, it will present other authors' plays and finance other producers.

Backing Analyzed

Reviewing the extent of motion picture sponsorship of the New York stage in the season which just expired, Bosley Crowther reported what he considers the record in the New York Times, as follows:

"There have been produced on Broadway since June 1 of last year (from which date each new season starts) some 90 new plays and 12 new musicals exclusive of all revivals, WPA presentations and other assorted non-qualifiers. Of this number, 26 (or 25.4 per cent of the total) were financed either wholly or in part by Hollywood money, meaning that one out of every four new shows seen on Broadway this past season was put there by West Coast gold.

"To date, the film rights to only two of these 26 ventures have been bought by film companies, in both cases by the company which financed the Broadway production."

After speculating whether "the amount of money invested is worth the return in potential film material, which is, after all, what the film companies are primarily interested in," Mr. Crowther continued:

The Plays

"Against the 26 productions, backed by the picture companies, there have been to date only five plays from the past season purchased 'over the counter' for transfer to the screen. They are Dead End, for which Samuel Goldwyn paid $165,000, the largest picture sale of the season and one of the largest in recent years; Call It a Day, which was actually bought in London, prior to its Broadway showing, by Warner Brothers for $50,000; A Slight Case of Murder, also snapped up by Warner for $42,500; Parnell, for which MGM paid $27,500, and Winterset, acquired by RKO for $27,500. An odd circumstance with respect to the latter play is that a bit of MGM money went toward the financing of it, according to reliable report.

"The other two purchases of the season have been Pride and Prejudice, backed by MGM, and bought by them for $50,000, and Sweet Mystery of Life, an expensive and unsuccessful stage offering, for which Warner Brothers footed the bill and then paid $50,000.

"In addition to the two above-mentioned plays, the productions financed this season either wholly or in part by 'movie money' have been as follows:

"MGM—Jubilee, Ethan Frome, First Lady, Paradise Lost and Bright Star. (In the latter, it is said to have been the money of Irving Thalberg, an MGM, executive, which went toward production costs.)

"Warner—Boy Meets Girl, For Valor, Good Men and True, Eden End, Sweet Aloes and Weep for the Virgins. Likewise, The Body Beautiful and Play, Genius, Play were backed by Doris Warner and Mervyn LeRoy, members of the Warner family, and therefore substantially that company.

"Paramount—Paths of Glory, Most of the Game, There's Wisdom in Women and May Wine.

"Columbia—Stick in the Mud, The Postman Always Rings Twice and Star Spangled. Also, Tapestry in Gray was backed by B. P. Schulberg, who was connected with Columbia at the time.

"Twentieth Century-Fox—Libel! and Larger Than Life. (The latter never arrived on Broadway, however.)

"Pioneer—Jumbo.

"It would also be legitimate to include 'Room Service,' which was tried out with MGM backing, but never came to town. Since it is definitely promised for next season, however, the technical point will be waived and judgment reserved until next year.

HELEN HAYES AWARDED DRAMA LEAGUE MEDAL

For her work as Queen Victoria in the Broadway success, "Victoria Regina," Helen Hayes was awarded the Delia Austrian medal by the New York Drama League, bestowed annually on the player who, according to the League's ballot, has given the season's best stage performance.

Miss Hayes was awarded the medal by an overwhelming vote. Last year it was Katharine Cornell who carried off this honor with her Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet."

The official returns from the Drama League's mail ballot was:

440 for Helen Hayes' Victoria.

160 for Katharine Cornell's Joan in "St. Joan."

65 for Burgess Meredith's Mio in "Winterset."

55 for Alla Nazimova's Mrs. Alving in "Ghosts."

Critics pointed out that Miss Hayes won the award in a year when no foreign players offered any serious competition.

"Movie Money" Defined

"Of course, when a film company is said to have backed a show, the meaning is that the production was actually accomplished through a regular Broadway manager who happened to get his 'bankroll' from that source instead of Wall Street, an 'angel' or elsewhere. Among the managers who have worked this past season with 'movie money' are Sam H. Harris, Max Gordon, Gilbert Miller, George Abbott, Arthur Hopkins, Billy Rose, the Group Theatre, Dwight Deere Wiman, Laurence Schwab and Milton Shubert.

"To conclude that 'movie money' has pretty completely preempted the legitimate theatre would be decidedly misleading, however. The largest price of the season was fetched by an independently produced play and there are still several independent productions which are open to strongly competitive bidding. List among them 'Idiot's Delight,' 'End of Summer,' 'Victoria Regina,' 'Blind Alley,' 'On Your Toes' and 'Co-respondent Unknown.'

Include Preceding Season

"Finally, the past season has included the sale of the film rights to several plays from the preceding season and before. 'The Old Maid,' which won the Pulitzer Prize for 1934-35, was knocked down to Paramount for $40,000; 'The Children's Hour' went to Samuel Goldwyn for $40,000; MGM picked up 'Kind Lady' for $35,000, 'Petticoat Fever' for a price which was conservatively estimated 'at more than $15,000' and 'False Dreams, Farewell' for $8,500, and Selznick International took 'Dark Victory' for an undetermined price. Also RKO acquired 'Behold the Bridegroom' for $25,000 and 'Green Grow the Lilacs' for an unnamed figure, while Twentieth Century-Fox bought two really old ones—'A Gentleman From Mississippi' and 'Poor Little Rich Girl.'"

Bureau of New Plays

With a view to story material and to encourage new playwrights, seven large film companies are sponsoring a Bureau of New Plays under the direction of Theresa Helburn, one of the heads of the Theatre Guild. The bureau will award prizes and fellowships totalling $6,700 to college students and recent alumni who prove they can write plays.

The bureau will be financed by a group consisting of one representative from each of the participating companies: Richard Aldrich, Columbia; J. Robert Rubin, MGM; Russell Holman, Paramount; Leta Bauer, RKO; Franklin Underwood, Twentieth Century-Fox; Willard S. McKay, Universal, and Jacob Wilk, Warner Brothers.

If a play accepted warrants Broadway production, it will so be arranged, and all plays may be purchased for films through the efforts of the bureau. The contest opens June 1 and ends November 1.

MGM Defendant In Copyright Suit

A copyright infringement suit, with damages said to total more than $1,000,000, has been filed in the United States district court, Cincinnati, by Margarette Tuttle, local author, against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The action is based on claims that "The Unguarded Hour," produced by the defendants, infringes on the plaintiff's novel, "Kingdoms of the World," which was copyrighted in November, 1926, under which the plaintiff obtained sole rights of printing, reprinting, publishing, vending, dramatizing and translating the work in whole or in part.

In January, 1925, the petition states, the plaintiff sold the silent picture rights to a scenario, "The Unguarded Hour," to First National for $25,000, the plot, characters, incidents and dialogue of this scenario being substantially the same as those of her book.

The plaintiff further claims that the MGM picture deprives her of the right to sell the sound rights of her scenario. Continuing the infringement, despite notification to MGM, it is alleged in a plea for an injunction to restrain further showings of the picture, in addition to which the plaintiff asks for an accounting of all public showings and profits, demanding $250 damages for each time the picture has been exhibited in the past two years.

BOX OFFICE SUPPORT CALLED SOLE GUARANTEE OF BETTER PICTURES

by KENNETH FORCE
in Kansas City

The women who are directing the better film work of the Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs, conferring at Kansas City at the Federation's triennial convention, last week, were warm in their praise of the fairness and cooperation of theatre men, and of the response of producers to their appeals. Mrs. Arretus F. Burt, chairwoman of the Federation's motion picture department, expressed the same feeling to the general session of 500 women, representing thousands of members.

At the special conference of better films councils, Mrs. Burt and the chairwomen of the four better picture groups—St. Louis, Moberly, Nevada, and Springfield—attributed improvement of pictures to the work of all civic, social, and church groups, plus "the fine help" of motion picture folk themselves. Each of the chairwomen emphasized particularly that an increase in better films has depended and will continue to depend on support of such pictures by the residents of a community.

Absent from the conference was the bias and fanaticism of socalled "reformers." The reports and discussions expressed appreciation of the fact that the films make up a great industry on which millions depend for their livelihood, and a willingness to understand the industry's problems and point of view in any effort to obtain better films.

79 Theatres Cooperating

Formed six years ago, the St. Louis Better Films Council, under Mrs. H. W. Schmale, has 79 cooperating theatres. Its previewing committees have reported 1,097 pictures, 522 features and 575 shorts. Of the features, 231 were marked for family use, 133 for adults and young persons, and 158 for adults alone. Only one was not recommended for anyone, "Remember Last Night?" and all exhibitors in Greater St. Louis complied with the council's request not to show it. A request was made not to show "Klondike Annie" on family night programs. Of the shorts, 572 were marked for family use, and three for adults. A protest was made against one of 12 stage shows previewed, but there were no protests against advertising.

The council has checked 3,020 pictures for family night programing, and reports a decided improvement has been shown in pictures rated for this classification. Last year, there were 619, this year 803, an increase of 184 so rated. In 1935, there were 20 pictures not recommended, this year one.

Weekly reports are mailed by the council to 680 subscribers—clubs, schools and churches—one of them to Bombay, India. Too, the report's weekly rating of films is broadcast over Station KMOX, St. Louis, every Saturday morning. A list of educational films also is compiled for use in school, church and club programs. The council sponsored the premiere of "Midsummer Night's Dream."

FORM NEW ALLIANCE IN MUSIC PUBLISHING

An international film music publishing combination of considerable proportions is being formed by Robbins Music Corporation, a subsidiary of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which virtually has closed a deal to represent Twentieth Century-Fox and Gaumont British, it is understood.

The British alliance will be with Cinephonic Music Corporation of London, giving the Robbins firm exclusive representation for Gaumont British film music in this country. Twentieth Century-Fox music publishing is now handled through Sam Fox Music Company and Movietone Music Corporation.

With the Leo Feist publishing house and several important subsidiaries in the Robbins combination, the new consolidation will rival Warner Brothers' Music Publishers' Holding Corporation in strength.

The council, whose monthly meetings have an average attendance of 300, protested to producers the appearance in gangster films of Sybil Jason and Shirley Temple, and "we feel this protest was heeded, for both children since have appeared in pictures which we could recommend for the family." On the other hand, the council wrote commending "that beautiful picture, 'One Night of Love.'"

The council studies visual education and the value of teaching children how to judge a motion picture.

The better film work of the Missouri Federation, Mrs. Schmale said, led to the adoption of the Federation's policy by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the Legion of Decency. Some 5,000 theatres throughout the United States have adopted the family night policy of the Federation.

Theatremen Made "Partners"

The Springfield council was organized in 1934. Headed by Mrs. Harry Bissett, it previews only those films about which criticism is heard before they come to Springfield. The council has, it is claimed, by its spirit of cooperation and fairness, made partners of theatre and film men at Springfield in attaining its objective of better films. As a result it never has been refused the cooperation of theatremen.

The same spirit dominates the Springfield city censor board of six members, of which Mrs. Bissett has been president four years. In that time the board has barred only two features in their entirety.

Discussions Reflect Appreciation That Millions Depend Upon Industry for Livelihood; Seek to Understand Problems

Work of the council, which is composed of the mayor, the city commissioners, clubwomen and members of men's civic organizations, is in itself testimony to its desire to be constructive. Emphasizing knowledge of good films and patronage of them, the council, through the superintendent of schools and principals, worked out an activity ticket for junior and senior high school students which entitles them to a reduced admission to outstanding pictures.

Further than that, in the effort to stimulate a discriminating appreciation of fine pictures, English teachers advise students of outstanding shows, particularly those based on literary classics, and give students school credit for having attended.

The Better Films Council of Moberly, formed about three years ago, now includes practically every religious, educational and civic group in the city as well as Federated clubs. In addition to the council, members, ministers, school board members and teachers have a voice in deciding audience limitation of the outstanding pictures the council previews each year "through the courtesy of T. P. Davis, Fox Ozark manager," Mrs. Fred C. Ross, council president, reported.

At Christmas, the council each year sponsors an entire week of family films, publicizing them through the schools, clubs and churches of Moberly and of surrounding towns.

Sell Tickets in Churches

It has sponsored and actually sold tickets for such films as "Berkeley Square," "Henry VIII" and "One Night of Love." For the last-named the church chairwomen actually sold tickets in the churches.

Conforming to the Federation's policy of selective programs for children, the council early inaugurated a series of student matinees held at intervals of every 10 days to two weeks.

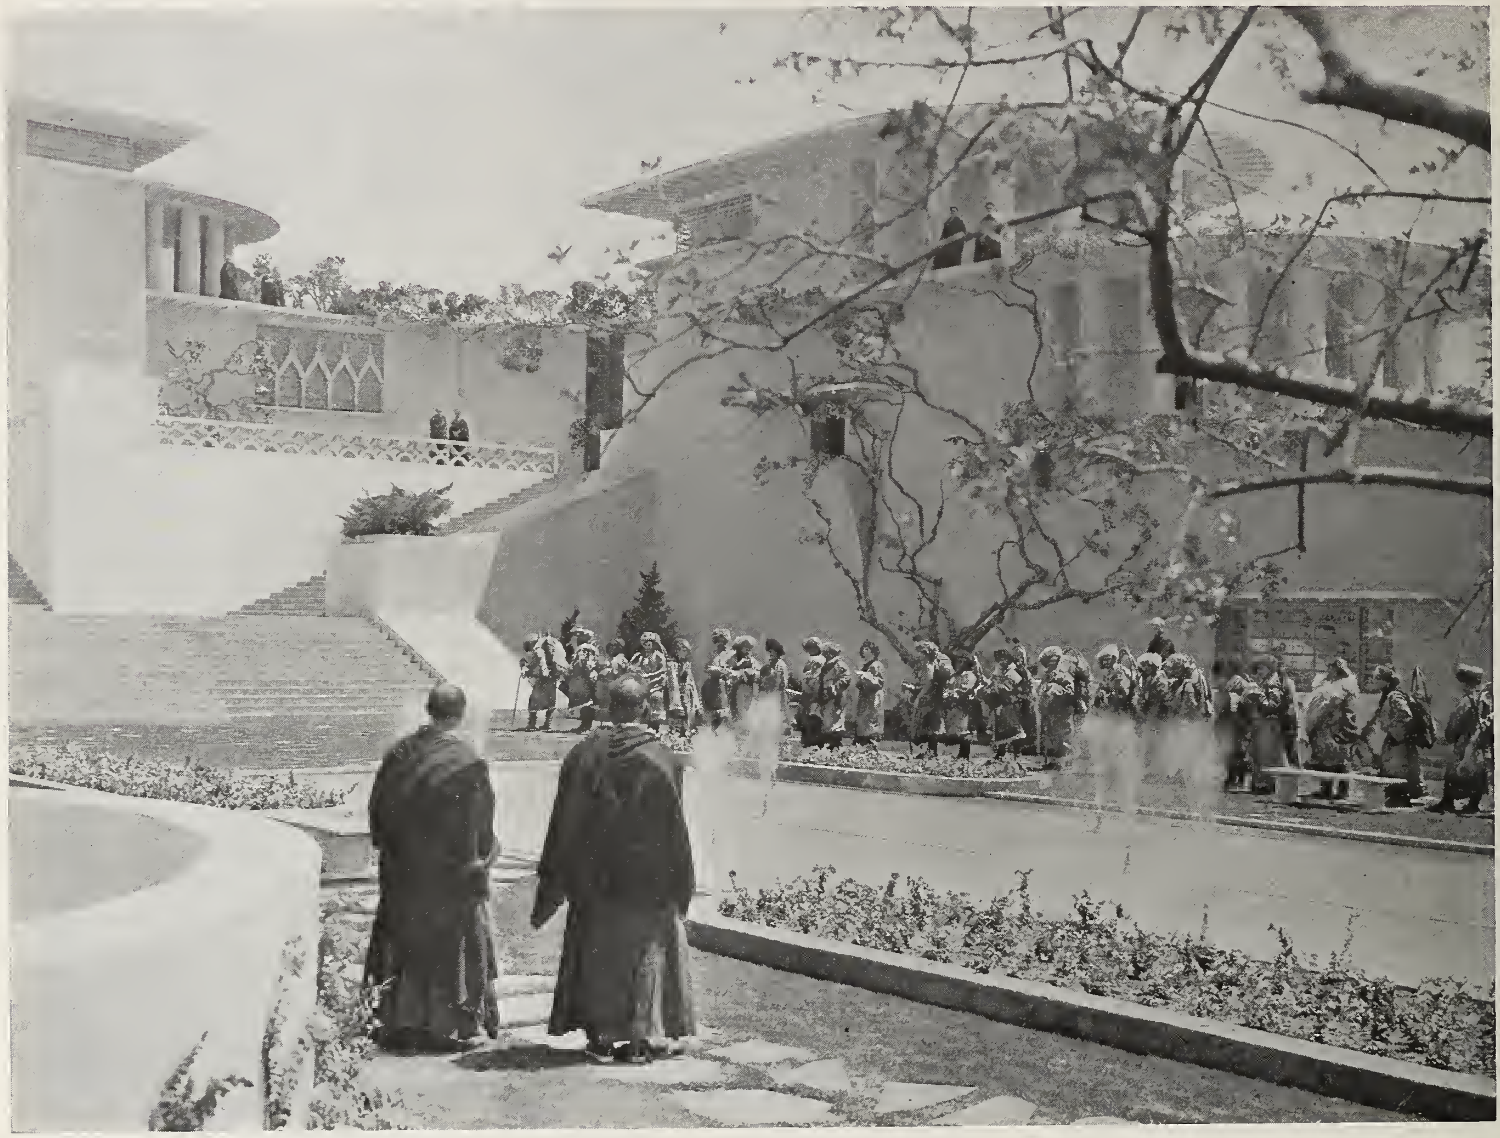
Each year during National Music Week the council has an outstanding musical film shown, and a students' matinee is given. The Music Club cooperates in the promotion of films.

Mrs. Ross urged women to "take cognizance of the fact that the motion picture, conceived primarily as an instrument of entertainment only, has evolved into one of the greatest forces known in the world today, ranking second only to the printing press as an educational factor.

"We must strive to keep what we have won in motion pictures, and we can do that only by actively supporting better films. It is your presence there as recorded in the box office receipts, which is the only true barometer of the success of the film, and on that alone depends whether or not we are to have a repetition of that type of film. It is up to us whether motion pictures will become a terrific menace or one of the greatest blessings ever known to mankind."

Mrs. Lanaham, chairwoman of the council at Nevada, Mo., which is the oldest in the state, made a similar report. The Nevada council for better films was formed 10 years ago.

MYSTIC TIBET LIVES ANEW



by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

TO the production of "The Lost Horizon" from James Hilton's bizarre novel of like title Columbia summoned the notably congenial talents of Director Frank Capra and Scenarist Robert Riskin from the far field of realistic, contemporary fiction wherein they wrought "It Happened One Night," "Broadway Bill," "Lady for a Day" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." To their purpose the company assigned a substantial production budget and the services of Ronald Colman, Jane Wyatt, Edward Everett Horton, Isabel Jewell and John Howard, to name a few members of a large cast. Photographs reproduced herewith convey a partial impression of the result.

The story of "The Lost Horizon" is as far removed generically from the type of material which has previously engaged the attentions of Messrs. Capra and Riskin as their long record of successful co-operation is exceptional. Whereas most or all of their collaborations have been concerned with somewhat improbable events which they have made to seem altogether plausible incidents in the otherwise commonplace lives of plain people, the obligation imposed upon them by the Hilton novel is to endow with equivalent verisimilitude frankly fantastic events occurring in the lives of extremely extraordinary people in remote and, for general purposes, largely legendary Tibet. That is the narrational feat achieved by the author of the book and accountable for its popular sale. In their picturization of the story the scenarist and director have adhered closely to the author's formula. Best evidence of the Capra-Riskin ability to invest the improbable with plausibility is "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," a hilariously successful stretching of the long arm of coincidence.

In a prologue employed by way of getting into the story through establishment of the unnatural as the natural, a musical chord releases a man's mind from the encirclement of his mental horizon and he relates the story that follows.

IN 'LOST HORIZON'

A Herald Pictorial Preview in Advance Stills

In the story proper a small group of white travelers is caught up in the fury of a Chinese rebellion. They find seeming safety in an airplane piloted by a native and discover too late that they are being flown into the interior of Asia. The plane crashes and the pilot is killed, whereupon the survivors learn that they are in Shangri-La, a mystically idyllic place where time stands still and peace is perpetual.

The visitors are made captive and their leader falls in love with the age-old and ageless woman who holds them prisoner. He becomes a friend of the Lama, and, when that dignitary dies, is elevated to his position. He has found happiness and declines to believe his brother's assertion that all he has faith in is in reality illusion. Finally persuaded to accompany the others when opportunity to escape presents itself, he endures the rigors of arduous flight over mountain and desert only to decide, ultimately, that Shangri-La and its inhabitants are genuine and to set out on the uncharted back track to its charming allurements.

To Messrs. Capra and Riskin have been assigned, as noted, the task of inbuing this highly imaginative tale with the essential credibility that experience defines as box office. It is a rare type of production and theirs is a rare record of achievement. Observant onlookers see in the choice of Ronald Colman, starred in many pictures requiring the combination of dependable romantic interest with the appeal of adventure depicted in terms of forthright physical performance, and in the apportionment of the comedy allotment to veteran and dependable Edward Everett Horton, definite promise that the Capra-Riskin colors will fly again at the masthead of a masterpicture.

Industry Welcomes Rodgers As MGM's Sales Manager

William F. Rodgers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new general sales manager, met New York's motion picture officialdom formally for the first time in his new capacity at a testimonial luncheon Wednesday at which he was guest of honor. Held at the Cinema Club in the Hotel Algonquin, 110 of New York's most important executives crowded the main dining room, from which 71 were turned away.

Mr. Rodgers, appearing in the photograph second from right, heard the plaudits of Toastmaster Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the MPPDA; Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of MGM production; Martin Quigley; Al Lichtman, assistant to President Nicholas M. Schenck at MGM; J. Robert Rubin, general counsel for MGM, and John W. Alicoate.

Claims Against RKO Reduced

Only eight claims totalling approximately $2,930,000, which were filed by general creditors of RKO in the company's reorganization proceedings, remain to be negotiated as a result of the filing in U. S. district court of New York this week of stipulations for the allowance of 20 claims at a total of $1,227,000.

The $2,930,000 of claims remaining is exclusive of RKO's secured debt in the principal amount of $13,768,500. Negotiations or investigation of the final eight claims is now under way. There were $55,104,721 of claims filed against RKO under its reorganization proceedings. Of these, approximately $5,000,000 were withdrawn and reductions amounting to approximately $16,500,000 were effected in others by stipulations or contesting. A total of about $30,200,000, including the secured debt of the company, has been allowed to date.

The stipulations filed this week by Donovan, Leisure, Newton and Lumbard, counsel to Irving Trust Company as trustee of RKO represent reductions of about $27,000.

Meanwhile, RKO is virtually eliminated from immediate participation in profits of the Music Hall under the terms of a revised agreement defining the participation of Rockefeller Center, RCA and RKO in the operations of the house.

U.S. Body Upheld In St. Louis Case

The right of the Department of Justice to ask Federal Judge Molyneaux to dismiss without prejudice the Fanchon and Marco civil suit against distributors in the St. Louis matter was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court this week.

The St. Louis decree was affirmed, without written opinion, in passing on the appeal for review filed by the distributing companies involved. In so doing, the court accepted the government's contention that dismissal without prejudice is not in an equity suit brought by the government under the anti-trust acts a final judgment from which appeal may be taken.

In appealing for review of Judge Molyneaux' order, the distributors urged that approval of such action would give the government an opportunity to harass business men whom it could not secure convictions against, as in this instance, and carry them from court to court until a favorable verdict was assured.

Tax Case Deferred

A hearing on the appeal of Jewel Productions, Inc., which objects to the collection of a gross receipts tax by the city of New York on film shipments outside the city, has been postponed for about a month.

IATSE Demands One Studio Scale

Wage negotiations between the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators and the independent producers in Hollywood having failed, the union officials have instructed members to demand of independents the same scale as is in effect at the larger studios.

Officials said that further discussions with the producers are out of the question, and that the independents must adhere to the prevailing major studio wage.

Hollywood also reported that conferences were under way between the IATSE and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, with contracts likely to be signed momentarily.

Meanwhile, Pat Casey, labor representatives for the major producers, was considering a closed shop demand by laboratory workers in the East, presented by the IATSE under terms of the union's agreement with the major studios, which granted recognition to the international and its affiliates.

An agreement on a 10 per cent increase for newsreel cameramen is reported to have been reached, and contracts await signatures.

The IATSE reported that operator and stagehand locals have been almost uniformly successful in maintaining wages and working conditions and that many locals have obtained improvements. A report to that effect will be given at the convention of the IATSE in Kansas City, starting June 8th. The executive board will go into session June 1st.

One of the major subjects on the agenda is the operator situation in New York City and the proposed merger of Local 306 and two unaffiliated unions, which recently was called off. It was indicated that attempts to consolidate the unions may be revived after the Kansas City convention, failing which the IATSE unit would launch a drive to seize power in the metropolitan area.

SMPE to Nominate Executive Officers

Nominating ballots have been distributed to fellows and members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers returnable June 1st. Officers whose terms expire December 31, 1936, are H. G. Tasker, president; A. N. Goldsmith, past-president; S. K. Wolf, executive vice-president; J. I. Crabtree, editorial vice-president; W. C. Kunzmann, convention vice-president; J. H. Kurlander, secretary; T. E. Shea, treasurer; E. Huse and M. C. Batsel, governors.

Trans-Lux British Deal Foreseen

Presence in London of Percy N. Furber, chairman of the board of Trans-Lux, is being interpreted as indicating resumption of conversations with Norman Hulbert of Capital and Provincial News Theatres relative to expansion. The British Broadcasting corporation, planning store shows for television purposes in the fall, is mentioned in connection with another possible Trans-Lux tieup.

Hiatus and Portent

As Hollywood relaxes with slightly underscored relish in the comparative calm that links each production year with its calendar successor, eyes are leveled across tea cup and cocktail glass in the general direction of Paramount and Universal, while well trained ears sift out of seething chit-chat items conceivably denoting the probable trend of affairs as related to executive visits. Stories are as plentiful as turf tips and accorded equivalent credence. Interest, cloaked as carefully as the facts it seeks, is unanimous, personally, professionally and artistically.

With the departure of Joseph P. Kennedy on Tuesday, following a comprehensive survey of the Paramount studio situation, conversation pertaining to the present and future policy and personnel of that organization turned upon two tangible factors. It has been made clear that William Le Baron is to continue as operating head of production. It has been announced that predesignation of specific pictures as "B" product has been abandoned, a development pleasing to a vast majority of the citizenry. Pending news officially released after Mr. Kennedy's report is submitted to the board of directors, Paramount "ins" and "outs" are busily exchanging wishful opinion as to what will be what and who who.

Attention shifted swiftly to Universal at midweek with the arrival of R. H. Cochrane on his first visit to the Coast since his election to presidency of the company. He came by train, accompanied by P. D. Cochrane, advertising and publicity chief, with J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board, making the trip by air. Uninformed officially as to the purpose of the visit, and reading into it as many implications as is par for the circumstances, gossips rallied around the single authenticated fact, that Universal preferred rose 7½ points on Monday on the New York stock exchange. You don't have to live long in Hollywood to know what the colony can build on a foundation like that.

Hammer and Saw

Hammer and saw are loud in five major studios. Warner is nearing completion of its building program started several months ago. Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Universal are still engaged in construction operations previously reported. Now Paramount is augmenting its facilities, adding a new sound stage.

The new Paramount stage is being erected on the back lot for outdoor production. A number of 40-foot steel towers and two light platforms 150 feet in length are called for in the specifications. It will connect with the tank stage on which Lewis Milestone is shooting scenes for "The General Died at Dawn" and will be used first for that production.

Now you see him—generally you don't—but a lot of people will hear a great deal of and from him during the next three years. He is Pete Smith, unseen star of the screen, whose new contract with MGM calls for 54 Pete Smith Featurettes, 18 to the year. They will be produced by Jack Chartok.

With completion of this structure, Paramount will have seventeen sound stages, fourteen of them enclosed, one a tank setting and another a metal assembly used for railroad terminal sequences.

Personal

Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks has expressed an immense liking for Hollywood. . . . Eric von Stroheim and Noah Beery have been offered contracts by the Russian government but haven't signed any. . . . Rex Ingram, the colored actor in "The Green Pastures," whom fan writers around the country consistently confuse with the retired director of identical name, says he isn't going on in pictures because, having arrived at the top in portraying "De Lawd," there isn't any "up" to go to from there. . . . Walter Wanger is off to Europe preliminary to commencing production under his United Artists affiliation and the studios will be closed six weeks. . . . Remington Schuyler's painting, "Custer's Last Stand," once a fixture of fifty thousand bar rooms, was used as a source of scalping technique by Edward P. Lambert in preparation for making "The Last of the Mohicans." . . . Lindsley Parsons, Republic publicity director, has been made story supervisor, with Jack Hardy succeeding him.

Viennese Visitor

Dr. Eugen Lanske of Austria, whose unofficial mission has been unofficially described as the encouragement of producers in the use of Vienna as a motion picture setting, has been a guest of Adolph Zukor during the fortnight. Dr. Lanske professed deep admiration of American screen product, declaring that "American films do not suffer at the hands of the Austrian censors because America does not produce pictures which offend Austrians." He added that American films make up more than 40 per cent of the total product shown in Austria.

Dr. Lanske was accompanied by Frederich Waller, Austrian consul for seven Western states, and Hans Leo Reich, writer on motion picture topics for Austrian publications.

Product

Seven pictures were completed and five went into production during a week slowed down by common consent as sales conventions went into session heralding the annual product announcements which are expected to touch off a blaze of studio activity early in June.

Paramount started two features. In "A Son Comes Home," Mary Boland, Julie Hayden, Donald Woods, Wallace Ford, Lynne Overman, Arthur Mace and Purnell Pratt are principals. E. A. Dupont is directing. "Hearts of the West," a Harry Sherman production, went into work on location at Big Pine. As Howard Bretherton directs, William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison and George Hayes are again teamed in the lead character roles supported presently by Lynn Gabriel, Sidney Blackmer, Charles Martin, John Rutherford and Warner Richmond.

"Ride 'Em Cowboy," final feature which Buck Jones makes on his present Universal contract, started. Jones is starred with Luana Walters, George Cooper, Donald Kirke, J. P. McGowan and Joseph Girard prominent in the cast. Lester Selander is directing.

Republic started "A Ticket to Paradise." The cast includes Roger Pryor, Wendy Barrie, Claude Gillingwater, E. E. Clive, Andrew Tombes, Luis Alberni, Gavin Gordon and Stanley Field. Direction is by Aubrey Scotto.

Warner Bros. and Republic each contributed two to the seven pictures completed. In Warner's "Blood Lines," a race track story, Patricia Ellis, Dennis Moore and Mickey Rooney with Virginia Brissac,

Seven New Films Make Debuts on Hollywood Scene

Charles Wilson, Raymond Brown, Gordon Elliott, Frank Faylen, Charles Joy, Jimmy Eagles and Robert Emmett Keane are presented. William Clemons directed. "The Bengal Killer," a drama of the circus, will present Barton MacLane, William Hill and June Travis with Paul Graetz, Joseph King, Richard Purcell and Carlyle Moore, Jr. Louis King directed.

One of Republic's new pictures is "Beneath the Seas," a story dealing with Florida sponge fishermen. The cast includes Russell Hardie, Ben Lyon, Ann Rutherford, Irving Pichel, Fritz Leiber, Vince Barnett, Maurice Murphy, Nigel de Brulier, Paul Porcasi, Victor Potel, Karl Hackett and Mike Tellegen. Lewis D. Collins directed. "Winds of the Wasteland" also moved to the cutting room. John Wayne is starred with Phyllis Fraser, Yakima Canutt, Douglas Cosgrove, Lane Chandler, Sam Flint, Lew Kelly, Robert Kortman, Ed. Cassedy, W. M. McCormick and Charles Loreker in the supporting cast. Mack Wright directed.

At Columbia "San Francisco Nights" was completed. It presents Margaret Churchill, Ralph Bellamy, John Gallaudet, Marc Lawrence, George McKay, Jean Howard, Lafe McKee and Arthur Loft. D. Ross Lederman directed.

Paramount's contribution to the completed list is "Spendthrift," a Walter Wanger production. Its cast is made up of Henry Fonda, Pat Patterson, Mary Brian, June Brewster, George Barbier, Halliwell Hobbes, Spencer Charters, Richard Carle, J. M. Kerrigan. Ed Brophy, Charles Irwin and Clarence Muse are included. Raoul Walsh directed.

Last of the completed pictures is tentatively titled "The Mercy Killer," 20th Century Fox, but probably to be released as "The Crime of Doctor Forbes." It features Gloria Stuart, Robert Kent and J. Edward Bromberg with Sara Haden, Henry Armetta, Alan Dinehart, Charles Lane, Taylor Holmes, Charles Crocker-King, Paul McVey, Russell Simpson, Paul Stanton, DeWitt Jennings, Jack Mulhall and Frank Mayo. George Marshall directed.

Horlacher-TWA Pact Drawn on Air Service

Horlacher's Film Delivery Service has drawn up a pact with Transcontinental Western Airways to handle the delivery of all packages sent air express where it has offices. The deal also provides for picking up and delivering parcels sent on the new zeppelin, Hindenberg. The German airship will make 10 round trips this summer.

It is understood Horlacher's will extend its operations to Pittsburgh. Louis Molitch, New York manager, is now there working on the arrangements.

N. P. J. Cogley Passes

Nicholas P. J. Cogley, stage and screen player, who appeared in Keystone Comedies for years, died late last week at his home in Santa Monica, Cal. He was 67.

BOYS STILL PREFER BASEBALL TO RADIO

A study of the reactions of 3,345 New York children, between the ages of 10 and 13, to radio programs was reported upon this week by Dr. Azriel L. Eisenberg of Teachers College, Columbia University. Although boys and girls had similar preferences in their recreations, the survey disclosed that they disagreed heartily in one instance —the boys preferred playing baseball to the radio, while the girls preferred the broadcasts.

The youngsters indicated they would rather listen to the radio than read, play a musical instrument or solve a puzzle, but that they ranked the radio below the movies, the "funnies" and listening to an orchestra on a stage.

Walter Wanger Will Release His Films Through UA

According to George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of United Artists, who has just returned to New York after several conferences with producer-owners of the company in Hollywood, Walter Wanger will produce under the releasing banner of the company in the future instead of Paramount, which was Mr. Wanger's last outlet. The deal has been in work for some weeks and its consummation was expected.

Negotiations have also been completed for the formation of a new producing company to be known as Walter Wanger Productions, with Mr. Wanger as president. The present owners of United Artists will hold a financial interest in the newly-organized corporation.

The agreement between Walter Wanger Productions and United Artists is to run for a term of years. The new company will produce six feature length pictures a year for release through United Artists. Mr. Wanger has been identified with the industry for more than a decade, following a career as producer of plays in London and New York. He was general manager in charge of production at Paramount for many years and followed this as an executive producer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. More recently he was vice-president of Columbia.

Recently, however, he produced independently for release through Paramount, his two latest pictures being "The Moon's Our Home" and "The Case Against Mrs. Ames." He arrives in New York this week for a short stay before leaving for a six weeks' vacation in Italy.

Louisiana Council Resolution

The Louisiana Council for Motion Pictures, meeting this week at the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans, adopted resolutions opposing programs which include two feature length pictures.

Rogers Drive Is On this Week in 5,000 Theatres

Approximately 5,000 motion picture theatres throughout the country, circuits, independents and affiliated houses, this week began the one-week drive for the Will Rogers Memorial Fund, which extends through the end of the week.

Months of organization, under the supervision of zone heads, have preceded the start of the drive, under the leadership of Major Leslie E. Thompson, chairman of the campaign committee. Designated as a tribute to the late comedian and film star, the campaign seeks to raise money for the maintenance and support of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac, N. Y., formerly known as the National Vaudeville Artists Sanitarium and Lodge. The sanitarium was a gift of a group of film executives to the Rogers Memorial Commission.

The theatre drive in 44 states has the active support of governors. The chief executives of about 10 states within the past two weeks have issued proclamations urging people to contribute to the cause. The latest proclamations were those of Governor Park of Missouri and Governor Lehman of New York, who declared: "There could not possibly be a more fitting memorial to his name and I urge all of our citizens to join in this tribute."

The memorial hospital will be maintained as a retreat for the ill and needy of the stage and screen professions.

Theatres are participating in the drive under either one or two plans. About half of the total number which are joining in the drive are conducting collections among the audiences, taken in conjunction with a trailer, which features Bing Crosby singing "Home on the Range," a Will Rogers favorite, and containing tributes and appeals from Lowell Thomas, Irvin S. Cobb and May Robson.

The alternative plan, to which approximately 2,500 houses have subscribed, entails membership by the theatre and the promise to contribute a fixed amount, ranging from $10 for seating capacity up to 500 to $25 for capacity above 2,000. It provides also for the use of a short trailer announcing the theatre's participation and urging patron contributions, to be left at the box-office.

Seek to Ban Billboards

Attorney General Paul Dever has filed nine actions in the supreme court at Boston to enjoin advertising concerns and others from maintaining 8 billboards in Boston and one in Somerville. These are the first proceedings to enforce billboard laws established in 1924 and upheld recently by the U. S. supreme court after 9 years of litigation.

Referee Allows Skouras Claims

Referee in Bankruptcy Hope in St. Louis has allowed a claim of $20,000 against Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., by the Middletown Realty Company, based on a sublease on an airdrome. Two other claims, one for $272,000 and the other for $6,715, have been withdrawn.

"1 MOMENT PLEASE"

In its 7th Week at the Astor Theatre the business for M-G-M's "The Great Ziegfeld" on Thursday was $302 better than the first Thursday. That's really excellent! In Frisco the 6th week is topping the 1st week by almost two thousand dollars. That's magnificent! And we're happy to report that this great Road-show in its 225 engagements (the list is increasing daily) is doing SWELL!

(Isn't it a jolly thought that "THE GREAT ZIEGFELD" (At Popular Prices) will be the first release of M-G-M's 1936-37 season and what a flying start for M-G-M's YEAR OF BIG ONES!)

BRITISH OWNERS INDORSE QUOTA; WANT BAN KEPT ON BLOCK BOOKING

67 Per Cent of Exhibitors Replying to Association's Questionnaire Oppose Complete Abolishment of Quota Law

England's most heated motion picture controversy of the day: How should the quota restrictions governing film importations be continued, if at all—is surprisingly enlivened by the startling disclosures from exhibitors that (1) at least two-thirds of theatre owners are opposed to complete abolition of the quota law, and (2) some four-fifths are unalterably opposed to reintroduction of compulsory blind buying and block booking, now outlawed.

The opinion on the subject was ascertained from a questionnaire circulated by the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association among owners in the London territory, that group representing a cross-section of exhibition in the country, coming from "cinemas representing all types, sizes and grades of theatres in industrial and rural areas and county towns." Among those who did not reply, however, were theatres controlled by the large circuits of Gaumont-British, Associated British Cinemas, and Union Cinemas.

About two-thirds of those who answered are opposed to quota restrictions being continued on renters only.

Opinion seems about equally divided on the question of whether the new quota legislation period should be set at five or ten years.

Some 67 per cent of the exhibitors flatly declared that they are opposed to the complete abolition of the quota law, although the exhibitors were split evenly on the question: "Do you find any serious difficulty in profitably complying with quota requirements?" Twenty-two per cent said that the reason they find serious difficulty in this connection is because their audiences dislike British-made motion pictures, whereas 41 per cent claimed the difficulty is due to the non-availability of suitable product.

67 Per Cent of England's Owners Favor Quota; Blind Sales Opposed

Theatre owners in the London territory and the surrounding countryside, selected as being representative of exhibition in that country, participated in a poll conducted by the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association—England's MPTOA—to determine owners' attitudes toward the quota law and compulsory block booking and blind buying which is now outlawed. The results of the questionnaire follow:

Question.	Answer (in terms of percentages of total number of answers).
1. Do you think quota should be abolished entirely (i.e., on both exhibitor and renter)?	No: 67 per cent.
2. Do you think quota on renters only should be retained?	Yes: 29 per cent. No: 67 per cent.
3. If a new quota act should follow the present one, what period of years should it legislate for? (The present act covers a 10-year period.)	Less than 5 years: 21 per cent. 5 years: 31 per cent. 10 years: 40 per cent.
4. Do you find any serious difficulty in profitably complying with quota requirements?	Yes: 49 per cent. No: 50 per cent.
4a. (Only to be answered if answer to No. 4 is Yes.) Is this due to your audiences disliking British product?	Yes: 22 per cent.
4b. Is this due to the non-availability of suitable product in your situation?	Yes: 41 per cent.
5. If a quota on exhibitors is to be continued, what do you regard as a fair percentage?	In favour of: a 5 per cent. quota, 4 per cent. a 7½ per cent. quota, 2 per cent. a 10 per cent quota, 47 per cent. a 12½ per cent. quota, 2 per cent. a 15 per cent. quota, 29 per cent. a 20 per cent. quota, 12 per cent.
5a. And what the corresponding percentage on renters?	In favour of: a 5 per cent. quota, 2 per cent. a 10 per cent. quota, 11 per cent. a 12½ per cent. quota, 3 per cent. a 15 per cent. quota, 15 per cent. a 20 per cent. quota, 47 per cent. a 25 per cent. quota, 11 per cent. a 33⅓ per cent. quota, 1 per cent.
6. Would permission to block and blind book be any advantage to you?	No: 80 per cent.

Producers Await Action

Bruce Allan, of the QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS offices in London, reported last week that Hollywood producers making pictures in England, as a result of the recommendations of the Departmental Committee of the Films Act, are deferring decisions on future activities until it is known what the committee recommends.

"With evidence already before the Departmental Committee from the Board of Trade and from the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, exhibitor opinion, still to be formally presented, is steadily hardening against the quota," said Mr. Allan. The new poll, however, shows a new attitude.

"The headquarters policy of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association favor a 10 per cent exhibition quota as a maximum, with a greater quota for distributors," continued Mr. Allan. "CEA branches are considering this suggestion and one of them, Sussex, has just passed an amendment to official policy demanding complete abolition of the quota.

"Whatever form ultimately is taken by exhibitor policy," added Mr. Allan, "it seems to be in the last degree unlikely that the distributors' quota will be abolished in a new Films Act; American hopes are, in fact, still based on the possibility of distributors being allowed to spend their money on a few big pictures equaling or exceeding in cost the many small ones at present imposed on them by the present quota stipulations."

Thorough Inquiry

Evidence of the thoroughness with which the Departmental Committee on the Cinematograph Films Act is investigating conditions in British production to determine their progress under the quota requirements is found in a questionnaire now being circulated by the Board of Trade to every studio and producer, asking for details of activities and plans.

Some Say Usefulness Ended

Distributions, too, are being queried, through the Kinematograph Renters Society.

Agitation on the part of some British exhibitors to do away with the quota law has been heard for some time, their contention being that the system is no longer necessary to protect British producing companies. It is that specific point which the official Departmental Committee seeks to establish, now that the act is nearing its expiration, in 1938. The law specifies a percentage of playing time each exhibitor must devote to British-made pictures. Under its provisions both British theatres and distributors now have to fulfill a 20 per cent requirement until 1938, the law having started in 1929 with a 7½ per cent quota for distributors, and a 5 per cent quota for exhibitors.

34 Pictures in Three Years is Procter Program

Major Henry A. Procter, M. P., announced on his arrival in New York Tuesday plans whereby 34 pictures are to be produced in the next three years by the five companies in which he is an executive. The cost contemplated is $15,000,000.

Major Procter is president of Capital Films corporation, Cecil Films, British Cine Alliance and Somlo Films, and a director of Trafalgar Films. All of these will become parts of a holding company which is being formed to be headed by Major Procter, who will be in America until July 8th.

"We may come over to produce," Major Procter said.

20th-Fox May List 67 with Shorts at 96

Twentieth Century-Fox will release 67 features and 96 shorts, exclusive of Fox Movietone News, next season, it is understood branch managers, sales executives and salesmen will be told at the annual convention which opens in Chicago on May 30.

Of the 67 productions, 52 are scheduled to be made on the coast and five in England. One of the five English pictures will be "As You Like It," with Elisabeth Bergner. Four others will be made by New World Pictures under Robert T. Kane. Six outdoor action features, three of which will star Richard Arlen, will be produced by Sol Lesser. Revival of four Will Rogers pictures, namely "State Fair," "Lightnin," "Ambassador Bill" and "Doctor Bill."

The shorts lineup for 1936-37 is expected to be the same as the current season's list of 58 single and 38 two-reelers.

Two of the specials planned by the company will be "Queen of Sheba" and "King of the Khyber Rifles."

National Decency Legion Classifies 18 New Films

Of 18 new pictures reviewed, the National Legion of Decency, in its classification for the current week, lists 12 as unobjectionable for general patronage, four as unobjectionable for adults and two as objectionable in part. The new pictures and their classifications follow:

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "And So They Were Married," "Die Stimme Der Liebe," "Darkest Africa," "Fatal Lady," "Half Angel," "Man's Best Friend," "The Mine with the Iron Door," "The Princess Comes Across," "Schloss Vogeloed," "The Singing Cowboy," "Three Wise Guys," "Wolves of the Underworld." Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults": "Jailbreak," "The Law in Her Hands," "Scandals of Paris," "Sins of Man." Class B, "Objectionable in Part": "It's Love Again," "Daredevils of the Earth."

Writers Organize New Coast Unit

Screen Playwrights, Inc., was launched formally in Hollywood late last week by former members of the Screen Writers' Guild who dissented from a program of unionization and dictatorial closed shop.

The 60 writers attending the initial meeting Thursday night approved a constitution and bylaws and elected a board of 11 directors, as follows: Rupert Hughes, Bess Meredyth, William Slavens McNutt, Kubec Glasmon, William Conselman, Sonia Levien, Grover Jones, Frank Butler, Gerald Geraghty, Waldemar Young and Tom Reed.

Mr. McNutt, who was named secretary, while presiding at the session condemned the Guild for "radicalism" and declared Hollywood scenarists did not desire to be dominated by New York through the Authors League of America, with which the Guild is preparing to amalgamate.

"Although we are not looking for a closed shop," Mr. McNutt said, "we will cooperate with other groups of writers in Hollywood for our mutual advantage." He reported that producers had indicated a willingness to listen to "sane proposals" to correct "any situation under which the writers feel they have been wronged."

Film Baseball League Underway

Teams representing the Music Hall, National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Pictures are tied for first place in the Motion Picture Baseball League. Other teams represent Paramount, Consolidated Film Industries, United Artists, Skouras Circuit, Loew-Metro and RKO.

Actors Equity and Screen Guild Pick Officers for Year

Election of the "regular" slate of councillors of Actors Equity Association in New York and reelection of the officers of the Screen Actors Guild in Hollywood featured activities in the organized profession this week.

The Guild, at its annual meeting Sunday night, returned Robert Montgomery as president, and named as first vice-president, James Cagney; second vice-president, Claudette Colbert; third vice-president, Chester Morris; secretary, Kenneth Thomson; assistant secretary, Boris Karloff; treasurer, Noel Madison; assistant treasurer, Murray Kinnell.

Eleven directors to serve for three years were elected as follows: Humphrey Bogart, Cagney, Miss Colbert, Montgomery, Joan Crawford, Dudley Digges, Frank Morgan, Morris, Pat O'Brien, Edward G. Robinson and Thomson. Walter Connolly was elected to serve for the unexpired two-year term of Arthur Byron, who has returned permanently to New York.

In the last year 78 members joined directly, it was announced, and 488 others were admitted through the reciprocal tieup with Equity.

Contrary to anticipation, Equity's 23rd annual meeting passed quietly, on Monday, with the administration ticket of 10 candidates and four replacements elected to the council.

Poster Men Plan Own Production

Arrangements for the manufacture of all types of advertising and for handling trailers will be the principal topics to be discussed at the three-day meeting of National Poster Service Association in Cleveland, on June 2-4.

Next in importance, it appears, will be a discussion to evolve plans, if possible, to offset Paramount's new system of renting accessories, instead of selling them to exhibitors, giving theatres credit refunds for the return of accessories after they are used.

The organization plans to print its own posters and manufacture photographs and lobby displays, it is stated. Negotiations are pending whereby the poster renters will sell and distribute trailers made by Theatre Trailer Company, headed by Michael Hoffman.

Seven new members have joined the national association, making a new total of 51. It is expected that the membership will be increased to 70 during the convention.

HOUSE MOVES TO END BLOCK BOOKING, NOT BLIND BUYING

Dropping of Blind Sales Abolishment Plan Viewed as Compromise to Get Favorable Report; Action Doubted

Progressing further than any similar legislation presented in years, a Congressional proposal to regulate motion pictures, at least partially by prohibiting "compulsory" block booking, stood this week favorably reported by subcommittees of both branches of the national legislature.

Surprising even the most highly informed motion picture legislative watchers, a subcommittee of the House of Representatives favorably reported the Pettengill anti-compulsory block booking bill but by a sudden decision purged the legislation of all references to blind selling.

Members of the House subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee privately expressed the hope that opportunity might be found for the consideration of the bill before Congress adjourns. This is held to be extremely unlikely, however, in view of the work that must still be accomplished on the Administration's "must" legislation and its relation to the proximity of the national political conventions which officially launch the Presidential campaign.

The purged clause to prohibit blind selling by distributors, compelling them to provide synopses to exhibitors well in advance of release, was one of the more important sections demanded for passage by clubwomen who appeared at the public hearings some weeks ago. Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, probably the largest motion picture interest which has fought for the bill's passage, also sought abolishment of the blind selling practice.

Since appearing before the committee, however, in the interest of the blind selling prohibition, and the other clauses, Allied States itself has become involved in a motion picture producing and distributing enterprise, through an arrangement with Chesterfield and Invincible Pictures. Allied hopes to "deliver" to Chesterfield-Invincible some 4,000 exhibitor accounts for 1935-36, for a program of some 18 pictures, which, it is assumed, are to be sold in advance much in the manner of the present system which Allied's original anti-blind selling provisions of the Pettengill bill had hoped to destroy.

A favorable report on the similar legislation introduced by Senator Neely of West Virginia was made to the Senate interstate commerce committee earlier in the month by the Senate group in charge of the bill.

The anti-blind selling provisions were a major subject of attack by the large distributors who testified at the public hearings held by both Senate and House groups this winter, it being contended that nobody could say what would be in a picture until it was completed.

Under those provisions, it would have been unlawful for any distributor to offer to lease a motion picture feature without at the same time furnishing a complete and true synopsis, outlining the story, incidents and scenes and showing the manner of treatment of dialogue and scenes. If a picture so leased was found to be "substantially different" from the synopsis the exhibitor was to have the choice of canceling the lease without liability for breach of contract and recovering all damages suffered by him because of such difference, or of retaining the lease and recovering damages for breach of warranty.

In addition, failure to provide the synopsis would have rendered a distributor liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment up to one year, or both.

Elimination of these anti-blind buying provisions served to break a deadlock which has existed among members of the House group for several weeks, and was seen in Washington as practically tantamount to the throwing overboard of the civic and social groups which so strenuously supported the bill.

It is not believed at Washington that the dropping of the blind selling provisions, demanded by Representative Peyser of New York, was acceptable to those members of the subcommittee in favor of the measure, but was seen as the only way to get a favorable report on the bill in time for possible action before adjournment.

A formal statement was issued by Representative Pettengill of Indiana, following the reporting of the measure, this week, in which he said, "The majority of the committee feel that with compulsory block booking forbidden, the alleged faults of blind selling would tend to correct themselves."

The effective date of the bill, he pointed out, has been made 18 months from the date of its enactment "to give the industry ample opportunity to adjust itself" to the change in selling methods.

The bill prohibits "compulsory" block booking, but does not outlaw the practice, since a distributor may offer leases en bloc at a designated lump-sum price for the entire group and at separate prices for the several films, provided the block and individual prices do not serve to operate "as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease for use and exhibition only such film or films of such block or group as he may desire" or tend to require an exhibitor to take the entire group or lose any particular films or tend to lessen competition. At the same time, there is nothing in the measure to prohibit an exhibitor from offering to lease in blocks.

The action of the subcommittee this week places further responsibility for the bill in the hands of the full House committee, which must decide, first, whether to make a favorable report to the House and, second, whether to make a special effort to obtain consideration by that body, since congressional leaders, anxious to adjourn the session before the Republican national convention if possible, are unwilling to let any controversial legislation come up. A similar problem confronts the Senate committee.

Members of Allied States Bound For Cleveland Annual Convention

Allied States Association of Exhibitors has sounded the convention call, and this weekend members representing several hundreds of theatres from all over the country will start converging on the Hollenden Hotel, in Cleveland to participate in the annual meeting, which opens Wednesday morning and adjourns late Friday.

"Film buying" in its relation to the present activities of large companies' 1936-37 product plans and sales will be the keynote, but considerable pre-convention attention is being directed to the promised presence of Russell Hardy, special assistant to United States Attorney General Homer Cummings. Mr. Hardy will explain recent anti-trust suit developments in the courts and their relationship to the independent owners. Daniel Bertrand, who recently issued an NRA report on films, will also attend, as will J. Edgar Hoover, David Palfreyman and D. L. Lowe of the F.H.A.

H. M. Richey, of Detroit, manager of the convention, already is at the meeting headquarters conferring on arrangements with P. J. Wood, of Columbus, and M. B. Horwitz, of Cleveland. They will later meet with Allied chieftains, Abram Myers, Washington, chairman of the board, and Nathan Yamins, Massachusetts.

Some of the other principal convention speakers scheduled include: Mayor Harold Burton, Cleveland; Henry Greenberger, Cleveland; George W. Weeks, sales manager of GB Pictures; Ray Tesch, Wisconsin; P. S. Harrison, New York; Edward Golden, Chesterfield-Invincible, who will explain Allied's new product tieup; W. F. Rodgers, sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Walter Littlefield, Boston; Colonel H. A. Cole, Texas, and Sidney E. Samuelson, New Jersey.

OTTERSON DENIES ERPI "INFLUENCE"

Former President of Erpi Testifies at Resumption of Inquiry into A.T.&T. Relations

Examination of John E. Otterson, president of Paramount Pictures, Inc., and formerly head of Electrical Research Products, Inc., was resumed in New York on Tuesday by Samuel Becker, special counsel for the Federal Communications Commission in its investigation of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its relations to the motion picture industry.

Little of consequence that had not already been known was developed in the questioning of Mr. Otterson, from whom counsel attempted to draw admissions with respect to Erpi's influence in the Paramount reorganization.

Denies Erpi Suggested Receiver

Testifying that Erpi had an unsecured creditor's claim of $1,800,000 against Paramount when that company was beset by the financial difficulties which resulted in the receivership in 1933, Mr. Otterson denied that Erpi had at any time suggested a receiver.

Through direct testimony and by correspondence files subpoenaed from Erpi, it was shown that the company had supported Charles E. Richardson's appointment as trustee in the Paramount bankruptcy, and subsequently sought support of other creditors to maintain Adolph Zukor as president upon Paramount's discharge from bankruptcy.

Mr. Otterson identified a slate of nine industrial figures as approved by Erpi for membership on the board of the reorganized company, these including Karl Hoblitzelle, Barney Balaban, Martin Quigley, Watterson Rothacker, Mr. Richardson, George J. Schaefer, Mr. Zukor, Frank C. Walker and E. V. Richards.

Mr. Otterson denied that Erpi supported the designation of any candidates to positions of influence within Paramount in the expectation that "friendly interests" would aid Erpi in obtaining renewals of its service licenses with the film company.

Letter to Bloom Read into Record

A letter from Mr. Otterson to Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric Company, was read into the record, which emphasized the importance of "friendly trusteeships" in maintaining or protecting Erpi's theatre licenses.

He had declined an invitation to become a Paramount trustee or director, Mr. Otterson testified, and had not considered becoming president until John D. Hertz of Lehman Brothers, bankers, suggested the possibility. Asked if Lehman Brothers were "substantial holders" of Paramount securities, Mr. Otterson replied: "I believe not."

He testified that he brought R. E. Anderson, former Erpi vice-president, into Paramount as treasurer at a salary of $700 weekly; that Herbert Wilcox was employed as statistician and engineer at $500 weekly; that Watterson Rothacker came from General Service Studio and was elected a vice-president of the Paramount production subsidiary, though the position was described as "temporary" and was terminated within the last two weeks. Keith Glennon also was drafted from Erpi for a Paramount post, Mr. Otterson said.

Describes Own Contract

His own five-year contract as president, Mr. Otterson said, calls for a compensation of $3,000 weekly and a bonus. However, if a bonus is paid, his salary will be reduced. At Erpi he received a base salary of $50,000 a year, including, he explained, "reductions made during the depression."

In earlier testimony Mr. Otterson traced the inception of talking pictures in 1927, when Western Electric, through Erpi, endeavored to have the film industry adopt its licenses.

Mr. Otterson declined, on advice of counsel, to turn over to the commission certain letters he had taken with him to Paramount from Erpi. The correspondence was identified as the "Beck Plan re British Quota," and included letters between Mr. Otterson, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and James H. Beck, Jr., MPPDA representative in London.

Calls Letters "Irrelevant"

Arthur H. Schwartz, of the office of Nathan Burkan, Mr. Otterson's attorney, said the letters were "irrelevant" and that he was prepared to oppose moves to obtain them. However, Mr. Schwartz declared that he had shown the correspondence to Mr. Becker and that he did not think they should be included in the record.

The hearing was before A. G. Patterson, director of the FCC's telephone division, in the Securities and Exchange Commission offices at 120 Broadway. Mr. Patterson in recessing the hearings said no more sessions were likely to be held in New York this summer, but that the commission will hold a hearing in Washington on June 2.

Mr. Becker said he expected that the report of the commission on its A T & T investigation would be ready for Congress next fall. for the introduction of further legislation if needed.

AMPA Meeting for Tuesday Discussed

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers may change its meeting day from Thursday to Tuesday. The proposal is being considered by the membership. The organization's board of directors has discussed the matter and has reached an agreement that Tuesdays are preferable to a number of members and newspaper representatives.

Because metal casts were not ready, awards for the best advertising copy designed for the trade and public, the most practical press sheet and the best poster will not be made next Thursday as planned, but on June 4.

BOSTON WILL CENSOR SKOLSKY'S COLUMN

"Hollywood," syndicated column written by Sidney Skolsky, is to be censored in Boston. A complaint by Joseph H. Brennan, business manager of the New England Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America affiliate, drew a prompt response from Robert Choate, managing editor of the Boston Herald and Traveler. Mr. Choate replied that he already has taken adequate steps to see that items directly derogatory to exhibitors will not appear henceforth. "Skolsky's column will go through my hands personally," he said.

About a year ago the column was eliminated in Boston for about three or four days on complaint of local exhibitors and since objections in the past had had only a temporary effect, Mr. Brennan said he would follow the matter very closely.

Empire Takes GB Sales for Canada; Hanson Seeks 100

Empire Films, Ltd., has closed a deal to distribute Gaumont British product in Canada, Paul Nathanson, newly elected vice-president of Empire, stated late last week during the GB convention at the Warwick Hotel in New York. It runs seven years effective with the 1936-37 lineup of 24 features.

Regal Films, Ltd., has been releasing GB's product in Canada for the past three years. Also, in addition to GB's pictures, Empire next season will handle 62 Republic and Educational pictures.

With 14 units already in the circuit and deals on for the acquisition of six additional houses, Hanson Theatres Corporation, Ltd., is aiming for a goal of 100 theatres in Canada, Oscar Hanson, vice-president, stated in New York over the weekend. There is no specific time limit in which the goal is expected to be reached, but it is planned to extend from coast to coast.

Negotiations for the half dozen houses, all of which are in Toronto, are scheduled to be consummated within a month, Mr. Hanson said. Associated Theatres, Ltd., headed by Mr. Hanson, is booking for 35 Canadian theatres.

Norton to Manage Pinewood Studios

Stockholders of British and Dominion have approved a 10-year contract by terms of which Captain Richard Norton, a director of the company, will become managing director of the Pinewood studios. The step is understood to be a factor in the arrangement whereby Robert Kane will produce New World films in England for Twentieth Century-Fox.

Marry the Girl

(Radio)

Comedy Romance

This is an adaptation of an original by Howard Emmett Rogers, one of the industry's most accomplished humorists. The screen play is by P. J. Wolfson and Phillip Epstein, who did the recent "Love on a Bet." The time is the present and locales are in and about New York.

In character it is a romantic comedy. The dialogue is funny, situations promise to be hilarious and the action speedy. The plot revolves around the matrimonial adventures of a meagerly paid civil engineer who is convinced that two can live on his wages and a mannequin who does not hold the same opinion but is willing to take the matrimonial dive. It is comically complicated by a light dramatic and romantic triangle involving a rich young scapegrace who is romantically attached to the girl, but instead of the interloper being a menace, he is really the character who keeps the squabbling husband and wife together.

The picture is being directed by Leigh Jason, who made "Love on a Bet," and in the lead is the star of that feature, Gene Raymond, also seen in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and "Hooray for Love." The girl in the case is Barbara Stanwyck, currently in "A Message to Garcia" and recently seen in "Annie Oakley." The third party to the triangle is Robert Young, whose most recent picture is "Three Wise Guys," but who also appeared with Miss Stanwyck in "Red Salute."

Principal supporting players are Ned Sparks, making his first American film since his sojourn in England, and Helen Broderick, remembered for her part in "Love on a Bet" with Raymond. Minor players included are Billy Gilbert, Eddie Dunn, Sidney Jarvis, Ward Bond, Edgar Deering and Hattie McDaniel.

The picture is being produced by Edward Small and is the first on his new Radio contract. It will be recalled that among many other features he was the producer of "Palooka," "Transatlantic Merrygoround" and "Count of Monte Cristo."

Mercy Killer

Crime of Doctor Forbes

Tentative Titles

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

The topic of this picture, which is the basis for its drama and mystery—mercy killing—is currently a subject of deep public interest. The debate, pro and con, with doctors, social workers and lay folk indulging their opinions, has been vivid. It forms the basis for what this production undoubtedly will engender, sensational exploitation which, if intelligently guided into controversial discussions, cannot but help the picture's exhibition.

The story is not a dogmatic exposition of mercy killing. Rather, preceded by a beyond-the-pale romance, it is the medium through which a baffling death mystery is developed, and, as in these sequences the production takes on a flamboyant topical news headline character, a dynamic courtroom drama. Mainly it concerns three persons, a distinguished elderly specialist, his young wife, and the famous doctor's youthful protege. During an absence in an effort to find a cure for a rare disease, the young folk fall in love. Pursuing his experiments, the specialist is seriously injured. His hospital aides, including the young doctor, are summoned to try to save his life. The doctor dies, despite heroic efforts, but when poison is found in his body, the young doctor is accused of murder and is arrested. Testimony of various witnesses implicating him with the dead man's wife, establishing the possible motive that he wished his patron out of the way in order that he might marry the widow, tend to draw the accused man close to conviction. Though defense attorneys work on the theory of mercy killing, the young man is silent himself until, following a strange conference, it is revealed that the man did not come to his death by a criminal act, but rather through the merciful intentions of three individuals.

The story is an original screen play, actually inspired by newspaper headlines, written by Frances Hyland and Saul Elkins. Direction is by George Marshall, maker of the recent "Show Them No Mercy" and "A Message to Garcia."

The cast is headed by Robert Kent, seen shortly ago in several Paramount pictures including "One Hour Late," "Car 99" and "Four Hours to Kill"; Gloria Stuart, recently in "Professional Soldier" and "Prisoner of Shark Island," and J. Edward Bromberg, noted New York stage actor who scored an outstanding success in the similarly atmosphered stage play, "Men in White" and now "Under Two Flags," and the forthcoming "Sins of Man." The principal supporting players are Sara Haden, a woman doctor who worships Bromberg for his scientific achievements; Henry Armetta, who is the unwitting medium fostering the romance between Miss Stuart and Kent, also the main comedy relief; Alan Dinehart, Charles Lane, Taylor Holmes, Charles Crocker-King and DeWitt Jennings. Others in the cast are Paul McVey, Russell Simpson, Paul Stanton and the silent day favorites, Jack Mulhall and Frank Mayo.

Two in a Crowd

(Universal)

Comedy

The direct significance of this title is that the story related under it concerns two persons, a fellow and a girl, in a crowd of amazing events involving an odd crowd of characters. Some of the incidents are dramatic, a few of them are menacing, most of them are pitched to the tune of love interest and all of them are potentially comic. Not the least important of the funny characters is a race horse, demoted to the status of hauling a coal wagon and so disgusted with this lot in life that the mere sight of a hunk of coal was sufficiently powerful enough to cause him to run an over-his-head race and save the situation for the young folk caught in the hectic crowd of events. It all happened because the fellow and girl found two pieces of hot money. When they pieced them together, they became involved with creditors, show producers, gangster, landladies and business men to whom they owed money, with the cops, idle actors and race track touts. It all seems that it will make for much merriment and consequent colorful showmanship availability.

The interesting yarn is being played by an interesting group of players. The leads are Joan Bennett, now in "13 Hours by Air" and "Big Brown Eyes," and Joel McCrea, featured in "These Three" and "Splendor." A third important character is Elisha Cook, Jr., a stage player making his entry into pictures. Other players of definite name value in the cast are Alison Skipworth, currently in "The Princess Comes Across," Reginal Denny, featured in the forthcoming "Romeo and Juliet," Henry Armetta, presently appearing in "Let's Sing Again," Andy Clyde, Nat Pendleton, Donald Meek, Bradley Page, Paul Porcasi, Ed Gargan and Matt McHugh.

Being directed by Alfred E. Green, the production has the earmarks of being of the character that will be appreciated by audiences and exhibitors.

Ticket to Paradise

(Republic)

Comedy Romance

Despite the title sound, this is quite a mundane story. It's built around a situation that should be productive of much fun and excitement. Played by an exceptional cast of performers, all of whom have been prominent in recent popular pictures, it looks to have a strength in personalities worthy of the comedy character of the plot.

In details the experiences of a young man, who, though suffering loss of memory in a traffic accident, retains all his other faculties. Police who find him wandering around subject him to tests which ridiculously indicate that he is a taxidriver by profession and put him to work as such, recommending that as he rides around he ask his passengers if they can identify him. Naturally he meets a girl, and she, sympathetic to his bewildered condition, takes him home, falls in love with him much to her father's disbust, and gets him a job in a stock broker's office. Here he turns things topsy turvy until the girl, convinced that he really is wealthy and smart, starts helping him get a newspaper publicity campaign that will establish his identity. A whirlwind cross-country tour is launched, and as the result of another hilarious mixup the amnesia victim has his consciousness restored, thereby dissolving the girl's father's objections to their marriage.

The cast features, Roger Pryor and Wendy Barrie in the leading roles, with Claude Gillingwater. Principal supports are Andrew Tombes, Luis Alberni and E. E. Clive. Other than Gavin Gordon, minor players have comparatively small screen name significance.

Action Drama

This story glorifies the knights of the roaring motor cycles, the motor cops who ride the highways campaigning against the increasing death rate on the open road. Basically it is fast-moving drama, compensated by a vein of conflicting love interest and highlighted by a full quota of comedy. Essentially it is a thrill action picture, packed with intense excitement all the way through. Practically it is a topical exploitation feature which, with due recognition to its dramatic entertainment possibilities, should be the beneficiary of all sorts of publicity in contact with police departments, newspapers, insurance companies, auto clubs and safety organizations.

From a practical production background standpoint, it provides a liberal insight into the workings of a state highway patrol, the methods by which recruits are trained and the dangers they encounter in going about their daily work. For entertainment purposes, it takes a circus thrill-trick motorbike ride into the patrol. Erecting conflicting romance among another member of the corps, a girl and the recruit, it takes the cops through an adventursome series of events including a brush with a gang of smugglers in which the ex-circus rider pulls a hair-raising stunt that traps the criminals. But with love lost, excitement is lost and he returns to his circus crash exploits.

The story features Jack Holt, in a part that promises to outdo any of his previous thrill action characterizations in the character role. John King, one of Universal's newer players, is his roaring road partner and also the one whom Nan Gray, now in "Sutter's Gold," prefers to consider more affectionately. Other players contributing to the production's exciting quality are Eddie Acuff, seen in several Warner pictures, Ward Bond, Douglas Fowley, William Tannen, George Stinson and Joseph Sawyer.

Adapted from an original story, the picture, which was being made during the transition of Universal ownership, was handled by three directors who specialize in thrill action stuff, Edward Laemmle, William Nigh and Jean Negulesco.

Blood Lines

(Warner)

Drama

The pounding hoofbeats of thoroughbred horse racing form the background for this action drama of race track chicanery and regeneration. Imaginative fiction in character, it is the counterpart of incidents that occasionally crop up wherever the sport of kings is popular. As such it has a popular flavor that not only presages substantial average entertainment but also opens the doors for up-to-date, stirring exploitation campaigns.

The story, which is an original screen play by William Jacobs concerns a young jockey who because of indiscretions of his father is not trusted. Befriended by a young husband and wife as he is about to be sentenced to a reformatory, he gets his chance and rides a thrilling winning Derby race. Becoming involved with double crossing gamblers, he is mixed up in a scandal, is barred from American tracks and goes to England where he soon becomes the country's foremost rider. Dire days having befallen the young couple, their horse is the sole remnant of their fortune. Entering it in an English race, the boy who is riding the favorite permits his old steed to win, endangering his own life that he might help his friends recoup. Another scandal ensues and the boy again is set down, but the young folk, influential once more because they are again affluent, assure him that they will see his suspension is lifted in the States.

Mickey Rooney is featured as the jockey. The young couple are Patricia Ellis, now in "Love Begins at Twenty," and Dennis Moore. Players who will be seen in atmospheric and character parts include Virginia Brissac, Charles Wilson, Raymond Brown, Gordon Elliott, Frank Faylen, Charles Foy, Jimmy Eagles and Robert Keane.

Public Enemy's Wife

(Warner)

Drama

The essence of this story is drama. It is a furtherance of the entertainment idea that pits G-men against vicious criminals. Because of recent happenings in which government men have succeeded in rounding up public enemies, it has topical significance that skillful showmanship may cause to redound advantageously in exciting patron interest. While the story is dramatic, it is not without a variety of other assets, most important of which is a uniquely contrived romance marriage.

The story is about a woman, innocent participant in criminal activities, who wants to get away from the person she feared and hated most, her husband. Freed from jail, she is contacted by government agents anxious to obtain from her information that will forever keep her husband behind bars. Unable to supply any leads, she seeks to put her past behind her; changing her appearance she meets and falls in love with a wealthy playboy. The man learns her identity and reneges on going through with the ceremony. To trap her husband who has escaped, G-man causes her to go through with an authentic ceremony. Vengeance bent, the mobster catches up only to have the efficient G-men trap him, and the girl whose sympathies for her new husband have ripened into love is willing that the unusual marriage continue.

The picture features Margaret Lindsay, last in "The Law in Her Hands," as the woman. Pat O'Brien is the G-man and Robert Montgomery his teammate. Cesar Romero plays the role of public enemy and Dick Foran the swain who lost his courage. Other players are Selmer Jackson, Richard Purcell, Joseph King and Addison Richards.

His Majesty Bunker Bean

(Radio)

Comedy

Adapted from the Harry Leon Wilson novel, among whose other screen credits are "Merton of the Movies" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" and the play as produced several years ago, this production is hilarious romantic comedy. The story, funny always, nevertheless is completely human. It will be screen-told through the media of clever dialogue, ridiculous situations and interesting characterizations.

It concerns a young fellow who exists under the handicap of a discouraging inferiority complex. Striving to overcome his handicap, he falls prey to a group of unscrupulous charlatan clairvoyants. Made to believe he is the reincarnation of several supermen, he runs into every day business and romantic happenings that eventually wind up in disaster to his dreams and ambitions. It is only the very practical inspiration of the girl of his dreams that really forces the lamb to become a lion, conquer those who would browbeat him, win a fortune and the girl.

Two newcomers, Owen Davis, Jr., erstwhile New York stage actor, and Louise Latimer, who made her screen debut in "Murder on the Bridle Path," with Davis, are featured in the leading roles and are the central figures in the stormy romance and most of the comedy. They are supported by a capable cast which includes several of the screen's most accomplished character actors. Listed are Robert McWade, who is Davis' scourging boss and nemesis and eventual father-in-law, Hedda Hopper, Jessie Ralph, Berton Churchill, Sybil Harris, another newcomer; Lucille Ball, Edward Nugent, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Russell and Maxine, Elliott Hicks and Leonard Carey.

A William Sistrom production, the screen play is by Dorothy Yost, among whose credits are "Gay Divorcee" and "Alice Adams," and Edmund North and Jomes Gow, who collaborated on "One Night of Love" and "I Dream Too Much." Direction is by Edward Killy and William Hamilton, and this is the fourth feature on which they have cooperated.

Beneath the Seas

(Republic)

Drama

Being produced on extensive scope, this production is a romance tinged drama of hardy men who risk their lives in a hazardous occupation. Localled in the Florida Keys, it is a story of sponge fishermen, the commercial conflict between the deep sea divers and the hookers, the weaker ones who work in shallow waters, and the romantic conflict that involves a girl and a representative of each group. Essentially a thrill action story, it concentrates on elements in dialogue, situations and action that make that quality vivid and entertaining. It also is being produced in a manner so that there will be plenty of potentially unique showmanship angles with which to sell it.

Based on a story by Eustace L. Adams, Wellyn Totman and William A. Ulman, Jr., the screen play is by Totman and Robert Lee Johnson. It is being directed by Lewis D. Collins.

Featured roles in the story are in the hands of an adequate list of players. The three principals about whom most of the drama and all the romance rotates are Russell Hardie, Ann Rutherford and Ben Lyon. The next most important players are Irving Pichel, Fritz Leiber and Vince Barnett. The supporting group includes Maurice Murphy, Nigel De Brulier, Paul Porcasi, Vic Potel, Karl Hackett, Francisco Maran, Frank Yaconelli and Mike Tellegen.

Outstanding production features are the semi-educational picturizations of how sponges are gathered, the constant fights both beneath the seas and on land between the rival fishermen, and the culmination of the romance, subsequent to several tragedies that bring about fairer opportunity for the "hookers."

Romantic Drama

This adaptation of a stage play combines romantic love interest and drama in a way that makes for desirable entertainment. Based on a well grounded story and soundly produced, it contains the ingredients in story content for any kind of audience from the teen age up. In this quality, together with personalities presented, exhibitors are provided with wide latitude in concocting interest creating campaigns.

Human interest is the pitch to which the production is keyed. That quality is an effective attribute to its heart-warming love interest, tense drama and gay comedy. Played by a large cast, it permits about half a dozen of the members, particularly Robert Taylor, Loretta Young, Basil Rathbone, Patsy Kelly, Joe Lewis, Marjorie Gateson, Monroe Owsley and John Miljan, to contribute exceptional performances. In Rathbone, the heavy, it offers a menace almost certain to have audiences hooting, hissing and yelling for his scalp.

The plot is simple, intriguing and powerful. Through the machinations of maid Gracie, Ellen Neil, obviously a personage of higher social status, becomes a servant in the Winfield mansion. Almost immediately she comes under the terrorizing spell of chiseling, lustful butler Wroxton. Elevated to the position of Mrs. Winfield's personal maid, she comes to the attention of the home-from-college son, Richard, who mistakes her for a party guest. The action evinces that it is a case of love at first sight.

Later, while on a maids' night out lark with Gracie, sequences that are full of gayly exciting comedy, she becomes part of a sailors' brawl and eventually is arrested in a raid on a gambling house where she has gone with pick-up Coakley. Wroxton, whose advances she has been able to fight off, procures her release. The family moves to Maine and the romance with Richard is beautiful and idyllic, although Ellen strives to convince the boy that marriage is impossible. However, as it is subsequently learned, the pair do marry.

Richard returns to college, letters to Ellen are intercepted by Wroxton, who via the medium of servant gossip learns that Ellen is to have a baby. Unaware of the relationship, the vengeful butler accuses the girl of promiscuousness, citing the arrest incident as proof. Though Mrs. Winfield is tolerant, Mr. Winfield rises in wrath and demands Ellen's dismissal as a gold digger when she acknowledges her marriage. As he institutes annulment proceedings, Ellen, advised by Gracie and her boy friend Smiley, hires shyster lawyer Stapp to protect her interests. As Winfield goes after the girl with hammer and tongs, Richard meets her, to be convinced that charges made against her character are true.

In a suspense-packed court scene, all evidence goes again girl, particularly as Coakley turns traitorous perjurer. But when the witness is trapped in a lie, he turns yellow and pleads with Richard to save him. Taking the floor, Richard demands that the case be dismissed inasmuch as all was inspired by villainous Wroxton, who, though claiming he was only seeking to protect family name, actually was motivated by desire for personal revenge. The finale has husband and wife reunited as he berates Wroxton and Winfield and begs for Ellen's forgiveness.

Showmanship calls for proper explanation of entertainment value. The tools are at hand in story content and personalities presented, with Taylor whose popularity is increasing by leaps and bounds, Loretta Young, Rathbone and Patsy Kelly. It can be sold either as a tense drama or a heart-touching romance, especially for adults.

Previewed in the Westwood Village Theatre. It was evident that the audience was visibly impressed by the class and finished manner in which the picture was produced. Quickly swept into the spirit of the romance between Taylor and Miss Young, it didn't hesitate audibly to express its opinion of the character presented by Rathbone. McCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Green Pastures

(Warner)

Comedy Drama

An explosion of commendatory adjectives, none of which would be misused in relation to what has been accomplished in the picture, would be required adequately to describe "The Green Pastures." Viewed either from a commercial or entertainment standpoint, it is valuable screen merchandise taking high rank with the great pictures the industry has produced. No matter what its spiritual or earthly quality, nothing quite like it has been done before. The theme is different. By some it might be considered daringly and radically so. It broaches a subject—God in heaven and mankind on earth—that production heretofore has been content to let alone. Likewise its cast, practically all Negros, is different, but for one of two previous exceptions. The quality and quantity of entertainment it offers has no formula precedent.

In a recent HERALD issue (May 2) some little consideration was given to what kind of a picture "The Green Pastures" was going to be. Frankly the producers, despite the records established by the story as a stage play, were a little worried as to how the class and mass public might accept it as a motion picture, but not after watching the preview audience, listening to the laughter occasioned by the film's simple, honest, comedy, noting the manner in which its simple drama held the crowd to hushed silence and hearing the salvo of applause at the end.

The picture was produced in a modern atmosphere, De Lawd in a Prince Albert, Noah in a plug hat, other heavenly denizens similarly topically garbed. The story, broached from the viewpoint of primitive, illiterate Louisiana bayou Negro imagination, is that of De Lawd's joyful happiness when he contemplated the creation of the earth and the sorrow, tragedy and disappointment that was His when all but a few of the mankind he made in his own image and likeness turned out to be an unappreciative and sinful lot.

Here's what happens: In a rude little Negro church, Mr. Deshee is telling his pickaninny Sunday school class the story of De Lawd in heaven and events and incidents in the Old Testament. As he talks, the picture flashes to production action illustrating the stories. In heaven, De Lawd is a kindly human soul, the black angels are having a grand time floating around on the clouds, smoking ten cent cigars and enjoying fish fries. De Lawd creates the world in a spectacular production sequence watched over the back fence by the dark angels. He's pleased with Adam, but Eve turns out to be just the kind of a hotcha mamma that Gabriel feared she would. Cain kills Abel and De Lawd's troubles begin. As the population multiplies, it goes to pot. Searching all over the earth De Lawd comes upon Noah, a plug-hatted preacher, laughed at by his crap-shooting flock. The scenes in which De Lawd talks with Noah commanding him to build the Ark and take thereon two of every species constitute comedy that had the audience roaring. Their keynote is Noah's argument to take on two kegs of whiskey in case of snake bite. The Flood is pictured in vivid detail and then the world is a tough place again with the chosen people in bondage in Egypt.

De Lawd finds Moses and Aaron a pair of simple, honest, believing farmers and he endows them with a power of magic that amazes ribald Pharaoh, to effect the deliverance and the forty-year trek to the land of Canaan. A drama of toil, suffering and sacrifice, this sequence gripped the audience. Again, though it has every reason to keep De Lawd's commandments, the world sinks into the riotous iniquity of Babylonian sin. De Lawd is tired of it all. Up in heaven he debates with Gabriel, Moses, Isaac and several others. Even the charwomen who clean out his office are aware of his disgust with his noble experiment. But on earth, there is a militant disciple of De Lawd, Hezdrel. He prays and De Lawd listens to his prayer. Hazdrel is a two-gun man, bent upon rescuing the holy city of Jerusalem. De Lawd gives him the power of right and might to do so. Again they talk. Hezdrel argues that what the world needs is not a God of vengeance, but a God of mercy and charity. In heaven De Lawd witnesses the tragedy of Calvary (presented in illusion) to be convinced that Hezdrel is right.

Never a preachment or a sermon, "The Green Pastures" is amusing entertainment. By no stretch of the imagination can anyone, no matter how strict and rigid his religious scruples, consider it in any way profane or sacrilegious. Despite its theme and the subject matter of its production scope, the story is withal a fable. It is the living but primitive Negroes' conception of De Lawd, heaven and familiar incidents in the Bible. Predominently, from a strict entertainment viewpoint, the picture is comedy. As the preview audience vividly indicated that it understood and appreciated, it is reasonable to believe that audiences wherever and whenever the picture is presented will react in the same manner.

"The Green Pastures" does not afford any names to sell, that is, if De Lawd, Gabriel, Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel, Noah, Moses, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joshua and all the rest that have been advertised for thousands of years have suddenly lost their power to intrigue and interest. But to those who like to pitch in, to exert the best brains and showmanship ability possessed, to take something that is brand new and novel, the entertainment that is provided in this picture presents a unique opportunity for showmanship exploitation, if the preview audience reaction—and it knew that it was going to see "The Green Pastures"—can be accepted as a standard of the manner in which it will be received elsewhere.

Comedy Drama

A wholesome combination of domestic comedy drama and thrill action, this, number two in the American family series looms as desirable entertainment for audiences for which its trade name intends it. Well written, snugly combining drama, romance, comedy, suspense and surprise, it is acted in a homey, humorous way that gives realism and believability to these qualities as they appear on the screen.

The whole thing though its substantiating features encompass much that is pleasantly enjoyable, is built on one premise. Father Jones, upon Jack's graduation from high school, wants the boy to follow in his footsteps and become a druggist. The boy wants a more exciting career, preferring to become an aviator. Naturally things come to an empasse and the situation provokes fun in which Mother and Granny Jones and the rest of the brood participate in characteristic fashion. Obedient, yet rebellious, Jack, under the tutelage of Jim Courtney, sister Bonnie's boy friend, takes flying lessons. He embarks on a solo flight. His girl, Millicent, has stowed away, and when the plane gets in the air she grabs the stick to make it do all sorts of hair-raising contortions, much to the fright and amazement of the community.

The escapade results in Jack promising dad he'll never fly again. Satisfied that the boy is content to roll pills and jerk sodas, the old man goes off on a fishing trip. But dramatic complications arise threatening Jones' business welfare. A crowd of chain store operators are negotiating for the lease of the family drug store. The old man, who has that glorious small town citizen's faith and trust in the honesty of his fellow business men, cannot be reached. Large sums are dangled before the lease owner and it looks bad for the family fortunes until Jack hops into a plane and to the tune of much aerial excitement locates his dad and gets him back in time to renew the lease.

Fury

(MGM-Mankiewicz)

Melodrama

This picture is different, volatile, eruptive melodrama. In its class, in which several that are characteristically similar have proved box office attractions, such as "Scarface," "The Big House," "Fugitive from a Chain Gang" and "Black Fury," it is an exceedingly good picture. Basically, it is a grim story of a desperate man and the amazing lengths to which he went to exact vengeance on society. It is absolutely without comedy relief. It has only a modicum of romance, a love interest which in its human interest character is powerful in the manner in which it is made one of the picture's ingredients. The entertainment the show provides is that which is expected of stark melodrama.

A young man is on his way to meet the girl he plans to marry. As he passes through a town there is a kidnaping. He is picked up by officers and jailed as a suspect. Citizens of the community go berserk. Bent on lynching, the spirit of mob violence overcoming the power of reason, it storms, fires and dynamites the jail as motion picture cameras record its fury. The suspected kidnaper believed killed in the fire and explosions, the mob's blood lust is sated.

But the man has escaped. Discarding his high ideals, his hopes for happiness in marriage, he hides out and summons his brothers to him. A cruel, ferocious thing, the urge for revenge eating his soul, he forces them to get possession of the films that were made and demand that all whose identities can be ascertained be arrested and tried for his murder. As court proceedings are radioed, the evidence of the camera is bringing about certain conviction of the leading mob members. Adamant to the pleas of his brothers that he reveal himself and thus bar the enactment of the crime of murder himself, he is found by his sweetheart. She is the one who softens his ironlike will to lead him into court to show that a citizenship run amok is barbarism.

The picture is played to the tune of a series of driving wallops that hit right into the heart and mind. In being grim, it makes no concessions to anything, other than in the heart-touching meeting between the boy and girl. It is also played with convincing realism. Its presentation may possibly become the matter of controversy. But in this case, the weight of argument is against those who might be inclined to object. It deals with a social problem that in many sections of the country is continually recurrent and thereby is a subject of topical interest. Though the first purpose of the picture is to be melodramatically entertaining, its moral is a terrific indictment of the injustice and inhumanity of mob rule.

As such it places in the hands of exhibitors something much different from the ordinary stock in trade methods of selling. As it is graphically different, it demands the application of the different ways of bringing it to public attention. The story itself automatically provides those mediums for the ones who care to search them out. For formula selling, the picture provides Spencer Tracy with undoubtedly the best role he ever has had. He plays it with an artistry, grim and cruel as it may be, that is certain to leave a memorable impress. Besides Tracy, and Sylvia Sidney as the girl, names worthy of consideration in publicity for the work they do in the picture are Walter Abel, Bruce Cabot, Edward Ellis, Walter Brennan, Frank Albertson, George Walcott, Howard Hickman and Edwin Maxwell.

Comedy

Though the title suggests something along the line of youthful romance, the production is a laugh-laden domestic comedy. Distinctly of the situation variety, dialogue and action being pointed to permit Hugh Herbert to check in with another hilarious whimsical characterization, all that happens concerns the Gillingwater family, their friends and a menace of whom Horatio had heard much but never saw until he got into a jam with him. The picture moves fast, and as laughs crop up continually it looks to be that brand of amusement for all family audiences. The short running time denoting that not much attention was devoted to unnecessary build-ups, the picture plunges into its fun immediately.

Horatio is a henpecked husband, a garden variety of spineless human worm who leads a fearful existence under the domination of his shrewish wife, Evalina, and his flea-bitten nickel-nursing boss, Jonathan Ramp. As younger daughter Alice is Evalina's right bower in putting Horatio on the grease, love sick daughter Lois, dad's pal, is concerned only with how she can see swain Jerry Wayne, whose only entry into the menage is via the backdoor sneak route when mother is out.

Sent by Ramp to pick up some bonds, Horatio is the victim of a bank robbery engineered by Mugsy O'Banion. That evening, in dutch at the office and at home, he imbibes freely from a bottle provided by Jerry, and with his pal Jake Buckley goes to a lodge meeting. Mugsy, trailed by cops, also drops in on the brothers and is recognized by Horatio. There is a melee, in which the stolen bonds are surreptitiously slipped into his pocket. At home, he arranges a quick weeding for Lois and Jerry before the return of Evalina and Alice, who have been to the movies. Arrested on Ramp's orders, Horatio is moved to jail and placed in the same cell with Mugsy. Evalina, experiencing a change of heart, anticipates dire happenings for her good man. Taking some things to jail for him, she recognizes Mugsy as her old ideal flame about whom she had raved so much to Horatio. With that, Horatio gives Mugsy a thorough going-over, not only for the temporary trouble he has caused but for all that he has had to endure for years at home.

The finale has Horatio elevated into partnership with Ramp through Jerry's demands; a reconcilation with Evalina to the marriage, and Horatio's return home to be the master of the house.

Though not what should be considered ordinarily as strong in cast names and possessed of a title that doesn't even hint as to the picture's character, the show is salable entertainment, to be presented to audiences with the assurance that it should prove enjoyable.

Previewed in Warner's Hollywood Theatre. The audience, which patronizes previews here on the assumption that they will be this company's more pretentious features, didn't seem to feel disappointed in the amusement presented.

Raggen—Det Ar Jag Det

(Scandinavian Talking Pictures)

Swedish Comedy

As the film is not equipped with English titles or other interpretative devices, the American appeal of this Swedish production is exclusively to audiences linguistically qualified to appreciate it. The setting is a Swedish metropolis, with one substantial sequence laid in Paris. In this one English is spoken at intervals because plot development so dictates.

The story is told principally in dialogue, although several incidents involve considerable action of unmistakable import. Not all of these are above reproach in the matter of taste. The purpose of the picture is altogether humorous. Photography is of a high order. Sequences are long and, unless by dialogue, not closely integrated.

Raggen, around whom the action centers, is one of five daughters of a professional gentleman very busy with his books. Although attractive and object of many masculine attentions, she adopts a stoutly feministic attitude toward romance and seeks to persuade her sisters and her fellow workers in a business office to share her views. Nevertheless, she accepts seriously the attentions of a handsome young suitor whose romantic plans for her, it turns out, do not include matrimony. In despair, she is confronted by one of her sisters and they fly to Paris to forget the incident in a holiday. Here they meet a young man who pays ardent court to her, both parties speaking English in the belief that only so can they understand each other. In an emotional interlude Raggen believes herself again disillusioned and the girls return home, followed by the young man, who has understood what they have been saying in Swedish in his presence and, really loving her, arrives and makes his intentions clear in time for the happy ending.

Reviewed at the Fifth Avenue Playhouse, New York, where a substantial audience, comprehending the dialogue, gave audible indication of humorous appreciation at several points in the course of the picture, seemed slightly stunned at one or two incidents.

Religious Educational

Preliminary captions announce this feature as the first screen presentation of life and procedure within the Convent of the Good Shepherd. Produced by French Pathe, it is supplied with dubbed-in English dialogue and narration. Save for a fragmentary introduction which depicts the application of a young woman for admittance, no attempt is made to blend a fiction element into the strictly formal and factual content matter.

In explicit phraseology the narrator sketches the aims and purposes of the order and the pictorial sequences depict the physical departmentation of the institution as the narrator defines the status of the three groups composing the membership. The daily routine is minutely detailed and ritualistic ceremonies are performed in chronological sequence.

Photography is of standard quality. Construction is logically planned and executed. A quietly dramatic climax is arrived at naturally by strict adherence to ritual and successive utterances of the Lord's Prayer in six or more languages by Sisters of the Good Shepherd representing as many nationalities are combined in a high degree of technical effectiveness.

Reviewed at the Fifty-fifth Street Playhouse, where a matinee audience preponderantly feminine accorded the picture respectful and manifestly appreciative attention.

Drift Fence

(Paramount)

Western Melodrama

The hard riding, crack shooting, cattle rustling and tenderfoot comedy common to Zane Grey stories is the prime content matter of this well made, orderly presentation. There is also a rodeo sequence with the usual features. Setting, scenery, action and romance are typical of the subject matter.

Larry Crabbe, Tom Keene and Katherine DeMille have the principal roles. Benny Baker carries the burden of the comedy. Stanley Andrews enacts the heavy character understandingly.

The building of a drift fence around the Traft ranch is interpreted by Slinger Dunn and his sister, Molly, who operate a smaller ranch nearby, as a step toward the decimation of their herds. In this stand they are supported by Clay Jackson, another small ranch owner, who, unknown to the Dunns, is leader of the rustlers whose depredations have made the fence necessary. Jim Travis, a Texas ranger, comes to the Traft ranch impersonating Jim Traft, a tenderfoot who has inherited the place and persuaded him to take charge. Slinger and Molly regard him as their enemy. There is a bit of harmless shooting as the fence is built, but Travis falls in love with Molly and she with him, although she will not admit it. When Slinger learns Jackson's true nature he joins Travis and his possee in an attack on the rustlers, after which Molly and Travis become engaged.

Reveiwed at Loew's Ziegfeld, where the picture was coupled with "The Amateur Gentleman" and cordially received by a matinee audience.

Trouble for Two

(MGM - Lighton)

Comedy Melodrama

Though this is a bizarre combination of comedy, odd love interest, melodrama and mystery and the cast includes some pretty good names, it is the kind of picture necessitating intensive selling to assure popularity. In the comedy and romantice phases it is light and gay, made so mainly by the characterizations offered by Robert Montgomery and Frank Morgan. The drama and mystery move in a macabre atmosphere. The yarn is a mythical prince-princess affair, which has for its general motivation an effort on the part of the girl to ascertain whether or not the boy is possessed of all the courage he boasts. It covers a period of a generation in its narration.

Originally located in a story book Balkan country, childish Florizel and Brenda are pledged to a diplomatic marriage uniting two small states. The opening sequences, featuring David Holt and Virginia Weidler, are full of comedy as the little girl puts the boy to many courage-testing trials. Each boastingly believes the other a fraidy cat. Years pass and the adult Florizel has no appetite for marriage with the vexatious Brenda whom he has not seen since childhood.

A sore trial to his father, the King, the ruler sends him along with Colonel Geraldine on a vacation to London for wild oats-sowing purposes. En route, with Geraldine in a dither because of the antics of Florizel, the comedy is continued. It ceases abruptly and the picture turns dramatic when Florizel is called to the aid of alluring but mysterious Miss Vandeleur. In London, as Miss Vandeleur (Brenda) recognizes Florizel, he unburdens his troubles to her. Miss Vandeleur pursuades the prince to join a suicide club presided over by Reginald Owen, which has for its purposes the providing of easy ways out for folks tired of life. By lot, the prince is designated as the first to be slain and the girl the one to see that he meets his end. But as Florizel demonstrates his courage, Brenda reneges. Owen is not so easily satisfied. As audiences are made aware that he is an exiled enemy of the prince's country, he determines to kill Florizel personally. Several ruses failing, the pair meet in a sword duel which results disastrously for Owen. Following this, Florizel, under the insistence of Geraldine, returns to his native country for marriage to Brenda. He is pleased and not a little surprised when the girl he knew as Miss Vandeleur is presented as Princess Brenda.

Previewed in Westwood Village Theatre. The audience, which demonstrated that it was ahead of the story all the time and knew pretty well just what was going to happen and how, didn't seem to be either interested or impressed.

Love in Exile

(Capitol-GFD, London)

Romantic Comedy

A formula well-tried in musical comedy is the basis of this British production. It is not a musical but a romantic story of a Ruritanian king, turned off his throne because, among other reasons, he is devoted to a beautiful countess. He regains the crown after adventures, in which the comedy note is emphasized, as a more or less penniless exile in sumptuous hotels in Monte Carlo and like places. Variety of setting is a feature, an important piece of the action is played on a yacht, and in the first and last scenes there are brave splashes of uniform.

Clive Brook as King Regis VI supplies a star value and a typically mannered performance. Helen Vinson, the countess, is another name, but chiefly for exploitation is the romantic angle of the exiled king, maintained without his knowledge by the woman who loves him, and an effective last scene in which the restored monarch forcibly carries his countess to the palace balcony on which he is due to receive the plaudits of his again obedient subjects.

From Gene Markey's novel, "His Majesty's Pyjamas," the story opens with Regis signing his abdication. Formally the charge against him is that he has engaged in a dishonorable intrigue with the Countess Xandra; actually, their relations are innocent and have been misrepresented by political malcontents associated with and financed by one Weston, a concession hunter, and his partner "Doc" Tate.

Regis takes refuge, with a faithful aide-de-camp and his valet, Paul, in Monte Carlo. Money is short and Paul pretends that he finances things by selling jewelry. Actually, he is getting his funds from Xandra, who has gone to Holland in order that the prospect of the king's restoration shall not be damaged by the association of their names.

Weston finds that the new regime is more difficult to get on with than the old and approaches Regis through Xandra with an offer to assist his return. They all go aboard Weston's yacht, to await news of the revolt which the latter is supposed to have stimulated, but Regis discovers that Weston is double crossing him. With the aid of Tate, who forsakes Weston, Regis flies to the capital ahead of his enemies and dramatically secures control of the Palace. When Xandra arrives, he forces her to share his triumph and publicly announces that she is to be queen.

Incidental scenes in which the king is seen being pursued by gold-diggers—an American variety of the species who descends to his bedroom balcony on a rope of sheets, and a Continental specimen of even fiercer calibre—offer chances for comedy exploitation, but it looks chiefly an attraction for the Brook fans and for the lovers of Ruritania.

Trade shown at the Piccadilly Theatre night. It was obviously felt to be slow in places and some of the dialogue was thought not too bright, but the finale was well received.

The Last Outlaw

(RKO Radio - Sisk)

Outdoor Drama

Here's a show with surprises for audiences and exhibitors. It holds a lot of entertainment for any kind of theatregoer. It has a potential showmanship quality which, intelligently applied, should be instrumental in creating considerable more interest with all kinds of patrons than is usually the case with outdoor action attractions. Basically a western, the picture actual is an engaging and forceful human interest drama. As such its field should not be limited to western followers.

Intelligently prepared and directed, acted in an atmosphere of convincing realism, the picture, while retaining plenty thrill action, is anything but formula. This departure is attained in the manner in which human interest drama is developed, the way in which just the right amount of heroic love interest is worked in, and the way in which comedy, some of which boldly kids the musical trend in recent westerns, is incorporated. Dominating all other phases, however, are the situations in which an ex-convict outlaw strives to conceal his identity from his daughter until the finale. In these, as in all the other occasions when he is on the screen, Harry Carey gives a heart-moving performance.

Released from jail, Payton returns to the locale where he was convicted of crime to meet deputy sheriff Yates, the old two-gun frontier officer who originally arrested him. He holds no bitterness and the action becomes sincerely convincing when Payton discovers that the girl, Sally, whom Yates is caring for, is his daughter. While this is going on, the cocky and modern idea worshiping sheriff, Billings, is making a play for Sally and also trying to show up Yates as an outdated oldtimer. Simultaneously there is an atmosphere of romantic conflict involving Billings, Sally and cowboy Wilson.

A gang of tough Chicago mobsters land in town and loot the same bank which years before Payton had taken apart. They escape Billings' scientific traps and the citizens demand action. To save his own reputation Billings accuses Payton of the crime. Yates, however, flushes the bandits and they make a getaway, using Sally as a shield. Payton, Wilson and Yates take up the trail into the bad lands which the oldtimers know like a book. The gang is cornered, and in a thrill action climax, Payton saves Sally. As Billings' sheriff methods are discounted, Yates is re-elected sheriff and the romantic fadeout gives Sally two happinesses—knowledge of who her father is and romance with Wilson.

A long step forward in the making of modern westerns, this picture should be properly introduced with a campaign sufficiently strong and intelligent to convince any kind of patron, those who are not ordinarily interested in westerns as well as the thrill action fans, that it is worthy of their time and attention. The materials in personalities, acting performances, story content and production values are at hand.

Says India and Japan Like Their Own Films

Although American films are still the most popular in the Far East, native product in some instances is offering increasingly strong competition to pictures from the United States, said J. B. Albeck, Columbia's sales representative in the Far East, upon his arrival in New York this week for conferences with J. H. Seidelman, foreign manager. Mr. Albeck plans to remain in New York for two weeks. He will stop off at Hollywood on his return.

Especially in India and Japan the native films are gaining in popularity with audiences, Mr. Albeck said. Japanese producers turned out 150 features last season and will make more than that total next season, he pointed out. They have entirely discontinued production of silent films. In India, English product and native Indian films offer serious competition to the films from this country. There has been considerable building in Japan during the past year, he said, and a good season is in prospect for next year, as is true of India. But business in general is weak in China, Mr. Albeck indicated, by reason of widespread unsettled conditions.

DRAFTING OF TRADE PROVISIONS IS NEXT

MPTOA Committee Hopes to Start Writing Clauses Next Week on New Practices

Adjustment of sales policies and a start toward self-government for the motion picture industry will be brought nearer next week when the trade practice committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, headed by Ed Kuykendall, president, expects to arrange additional conferences with the large distributors and enter the clause-drafting stage of its move to lighten the burden complained of by exhibitors.

Generally, it was reported on Wednesday by distributor sources, the companies are in agreement that the 10-point program sponsored by the MPTOA is desirable, and most of the distributors concede that specific provisions should be adopted. The harder task is ahead, that of deciding on the procedure by which the desired reforms should be put into effect.

All six of the companies interviewed so far—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO, Universal, Columbia and Republic—favor no less than an unconditional 10 per cent product cancellation, and Republic has committed itself to an unrestricted 20 per cent elimination in cases where the company's complete program was bought.

On the MPTOA's proposal to abolish score charges, the companies' attitudes differ, but while some rejection was expressed, others indicated acceptance, and eventually a solution of this problem will be found, it was said in organized distributor circles.

Most of the companies interviewed so far have pledged their cooperation in the setting up of local conciliation boards to adjust trade disputes amicably. The operation of these boards in the expected manner will go a long way toward a solution of at least half of the practices cited by the MPTOA on its list of proposed reforms, Mr. Kuykendall believes.

Discussions General

To date, the discussions have been along general lines, and where agreement was obtained, it was only "in principle," it was said. A second round of conferences with the distribution heads will reveal more clearly the extent to which they are willing to go in working out the precise details.

This is expected to be apparent in the drafting of a cancellation clause that the distributors will not consider unreasonable and will be fair to the exhibitors at the same time. This is said to be the only point on which the distributors are willing to open their contracts to revision. So far no attitude has been revealed on the MPTOA's proposal for "creation of a standard form of exhibition contract reduced to essentials in language and text."

Some difference of opinion among the distributors and between them and the exhibitors is anticipated on the only plank which will require their concerted action, that of establishing the conciliation tribunals, when generalities are reduced to concrete discussions of the boards' expenses, personnel, conduct of hearings and general procedure.

Meetings Deferred

The five-man exhibitor committee adjourned late last week and the members returned to their respective cities, subject to the call of Mr. Kuykendall. Before leaving for his home in Columbus, Miss., the MPTOA head voiced anticipation that the distributors would grant a "better than 10 per cent cancellation privilege."

Planned meetings with George J. Schaefer, vice-president of United Artists, and John D. Clark, general sales manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, were deferred because of their absence from the city, and the committee will contact them upon resuming its conferences. A brief discussion was held with Gaumont British executives, but because of the company's sales convention at the time a more comprehensive conference may be held later.

After attending the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia at Virginia Beach, Va., on Monday and Tuesday, Mr. Kuykendall planned to return to New York before the end of the week, when he will reassemble his committee. Intervening distributors' sales conventions will probably retard the final conferences a few days.

The exhibitor group repeated its request for an audience with Warner Brothers, which alone has held aloof from the discussions, and while no definite commitment was received, Mr. Kuykendall was optimistic that the company would join the move.

With respect to the complaint of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City which has been rebuffed in its request to name three delegates to the exhibitor committee, it was pointed out that the MPTOA had received similar requests from 11 local exhibitor associations and that all had been denied in the interests of expediting the discussions.

If the New York or some other unit had been permitted to participate, the same privilege would have to be extended to all local groups, it was explained, and the resultant unwieldy committee would create an impossible situation and little would be accomplished.

Meanwhile, pointing the need for improved exhibitor-distributor relations, the board of governors of the Independent Theatre Owners of Philadelphia late last week adopted a resolution condemning the clearance and zoning setup in that city. The arrangement was described as discriminatory and in need of legal action to show that a conspiracy existed between distributors and affiliated theatres against the independent exhibitors.

Paramount's proposed competition with the poster renters also was condemned on the ground that it would open the way to similar moves by other distributors, "which will impose additional hardships on independent theatre owners," according to the resolution.

Sentiment in favor of joining Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors was voiced, and the board called for a large delegation to attend the association's convention in Cleveland next week. A general meeting to further these matters was set for June 11.

Hearst Press Says Soviets Sway Newsfilm

Editorial guns of William Randolph Hearst's New York American, recently trained upon Mae West for her production of "Klondike Annie," were pointed screenward again on Friday with American newsreels the target and their relations with Amkino the specified provocation. A half-page loaded with upper case and bold face type fired the charge that "Moscow has now reached the stage of brazen defiance of the Litvinoff-Roosevelt Treaty where it orders Communist propaganda in American newsreels."

Prefatory to naming Fox Movietone News, Paramount News and Universal Newsreel as alleged "cat's-paws of the Soviets," the editorial asserted, "These orders are part of the agreement that every motion picture corporation must sign when it buys Russian matter either directly from Amkino, the American distributing company for the state-controlled pictures made in Russia, or from the Russian government itself. Our American picture-producing companies must agree to the humiliating condition that the sound-strip speaker, in showing these Russian shots, shall not say anything derogatory to Russia, Communism or the five year plan."

Vladimir Verlinsky, president of Amkino, dismissed the incident with this flat assertion: "We definitely state that Amkino has never signed any agreement with any American newsreel company with reference to what they might or might not say in connection with Russian material."

Truman Talley, general manager of Fox Movietone News, dispatched a telegram of protest to Publisher Hearst in California declaring the editorial allegation wholly without foundation in fact.

Charles E. Ford, managing director of Universal Newsreel, branded the editorial statement as "untrue" in a letter dispatched to the managing editor of the New York American.

From another source close to the subject came the opinion that the writer of the editorial had "simply overshot his mark" and the assertion that no agreement for presentation of scenes obtained from Amkino exists, signed or implied, for the manifest reason, if none other, that the nature of the material filmed in Russia and made available here is so controlled at the source as to make such an agreement pointless. The barring of American camera men, long a known factor in the matter, was cited as additional Soviet safeguard against dissemination of screen material of a kind that could be considered by the Russian government as unfavorable to Russia.

The American editorial writer's specific notations of newsreel items includes direct quotation of the captional copy preceding each. No criticism of this copy is offered in any instance. Editorial complaint is made that the narrator did not say certain things. Example: "I am forbidden by the Russian

THE KEYSTONE OF YOUR FUTURE

NEWSREEL FILMING NEW EMPIRE IN THE MAKING

John Dored Stays on at Ethiopia to Record History Repeating Itself

History is about to repeat itself in Ethiopia. They did not have cameras when the Roman army laid aside its swords for implements of the field. They have today. That's why we might conclude that the newsreel assignment in Ethiopia has just begun. I was the first cameraman to arrive in Addis Ababa before the trouble started. I was the only man grinding away when climactic action occurred, and will continue to stay on the ground as Il Duce pours into the Black Country some 1,000,000 Italians to live and perpetuate his race.

Fertile Field for Camera

Ethiopia, for many months to come, probably will be one of the world's most interesting places for newsreel cameras. The Italian army is now the army of occupation. Tomorrow, judging from all indications, it will be representative of the citizenship of a new Ethiopia. Where else in the world since the history of the motion picture have cameras had the opportunity of watching a nation in the state of eclipse; of studying the birth and evolution of such a phase of civilization?

My wife is as enthusiastic about this new job as I am. She worked with me almost hand in hand during the Italo-Ethiopian campaign. Many a night when Italian lookouts reported a "mystery plane" hovering about it was only the Paramount ship piloted by my wife. She was the one messenger I could trust with film "both ways." She would bring cans of celluloid with her on her flight to me and take back for export negatives which I had just obtained.

I guess she's about the only woman with a cameraman for a husband who has had a taste of war outside of the kitchenette. She's the daughter of a Norwegian diplomat. I met her while I was covering the Nobile disaster. And she loves action.

We're both tough and lucky and we're about as immune to malaria and other complaints of the tropics as we are to bullets. We have lived almost as happily and successfully in Addis as we have in London or New York.

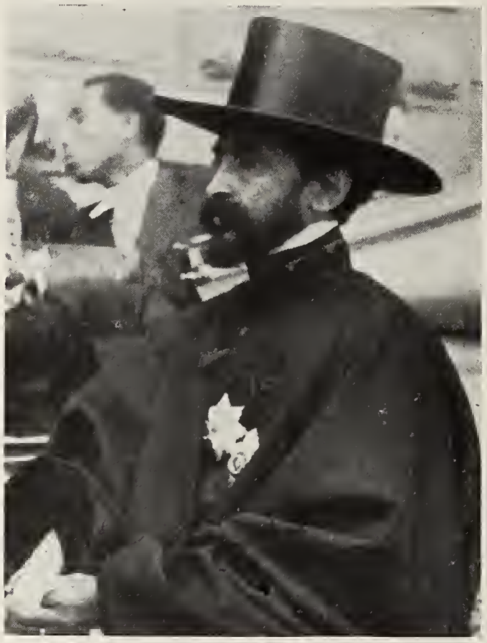
It was she who sold me on the idea of staying to see the Italians start raising a new Ethiopia. Near the end of the fracas, my editor in New York, A. J. Richards, felt the same way, even though all the other newsreels were calling their crews home. As an immediate result, I photographed the only motion pictures of the burning and pillaging of Addis Ababa. I got 2,400 feet of the pillage—even views of human pyres and Italians chasing brigands after entering the city.

Gets Film Out on Time

I did not let my wife join me in the pillaging stories; there were too many natives with long knives. She, however, didn't stay "home," as we called the British Legation during the last few days. She was out with a camera shooting stills for the Associated Press.

There were some pretty tough scenes and situations. A guard which I had strung around me had to keep up a constant fusillade against attacking natives, who were crazed and bewildered. Everything came off as I had planned, except that I didn't have to use the camel train which I had concealed up in the mountain. The railroad was not dynamited and I got my film out on time, but not quick enough to make the first flight of the Hindenburg Zeppelin.

A King Autographs For a Newsreeler



"Haile Selassie I—September 25, 1929" (the year 1929 in Ethiopia corresponds to our year 1936), was inscribed personally, in Amharic, by the Emperor, on the photo reproduced above, which he gave to John Dored, Paramount Newsreel cameraman, when Mr. Dored presented Selassie with a copy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD containing an account of the newsreels' coverage of the Ethiopian War. Mr. Dored sent the picture the other day, in the transatlantic mail, to his Paramount Newsreel boss in New York, A. J. Richard.

It was humorous how the camel market tumbled after the newspaper boys and newsreel crews departed. Those camels which during the war were worth their weight in silver today can be had for the asking. In fact there are some natives who will give you as many camels as you can afford to feed.

The Emperor gave me one of the last pictures he had taken while he retained his rights to the crown. He autographed it in Amharic after I had shown him a copy of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD containing a story which I wrote at the beginning of the war.

It was interesting to me, being a technical man, the way Haile enjoyed reading the HERALD. Of course, he's somewhat of a technician. In his old palace he had a regular sound room with reproducing apparatus and projection machine.

Dored's Ethiopian Pillage Story Arrives in New York

Approximately 5,000 feet of film showing the fall of Ethiopia and the burning and pillaging of Addis Ababa arrived in New York on the S.S. Normandie early this week, consigned to the home office of Paramount News.

Al Richard, Paramount newsreel editor, had cabled orders to his office in London before the Normandie sailed for English film cutters to wade through the maze of footage, most of which was obtained by John Dored, and piece together a clip suitable for incorporation in the American reel.

Thus when the Normandie docked there was a complete synopsis of the Ethiopian highlights. This story was titled and had a complete sound track, as well, and showed buildings and shacks flaming high. It revealed bands of natives running madly through the streets, armed with scythes, clubs and rifles.

MGM Barcelona Status Restored

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER

in Barcelona

MGM pictures are again to the fore in Barcelona theatres, as well as in the rank and file of cines del barrio throughout the metropolis. Two first-run houses are featuring them. The Femina, on the Paseo de Gracia, always devoted to MGM premiere showings, and the very centrally situated Urquinaona, which started its post-Easter programming with "Los Manos de Orloff" (Mad Love).

After the successful run of "Broadway Melody of 1936" at the Femina, Spain and Catalunya arose to the occasion, when "Rebelión Abordo" (Mutiny on the Bounty) was given its initial showing in this city before a capacity audience following a premiere at the Capitol, at Madrid, three evenings previously.

The Metro publicity forces had the ground well prepared for the opening here as well as in Madrid. A feature of the propaganda was the opening of a "Rebelión Abordo" exhibit at the focal centre of the city. This, occupying an entire street-level store, was devoted to stills of the then forthcoming picture and, besides, many authentic relics in the form of models, maps and pictures of British and French bucaneer and exploration craft of the period of the picture, while a branch box-office installed at the scene of the exhibit was a factor in the heavy advance sale for the opening week of the engagement at the Femina.

COLUMBIA PICTURES NETS $958,578; UNIVERSAL FILM FILES TO REFINANCE

Twentieth Century-Fox Theatre Receipts and Film Rentals Are Reported Running Well Ahead of Last Year's Figures

The corporate affairs of the large companies these days do not alone involve product construction and sales conventions for the new season. Several managements this week also directed attention to their financial and capital stock structures, as follows:

Columbia Pictures Corporation computed net earnings for nine months at $958,578, compared with $1,572,720 for the previous similar period.

Universal moved toward a simplification of its corporate setup by registering for 1,622,566 of new common and 80,000 preferred shares.

Twentieth Century-Fox unofficially reported to financial editors that theatre receipts and film rentals are running well ahead of 1935.

Radio Corporation declared an 87½-cent initial dividend on new preferred.

The net earnings of Columbia Pictures Corporation were for the nine months ended March 28, 1936, the $958,578 profit giving effect to all charges and provisions for federal income and other taxes, and was equivalent to approximately $3.13 a share on 280,413 shares of common stock outstanding after deducting preferred dividends. This compares with earnings for the corresponding period ended March 30, 1935, after all charges and provisions for federal income and other taxes, of $1,572,720, which was equal to approximately $5.47 earned on a similar number of common shares as were outstanding on March 28, 1936, after deducting preferred dividends on old preferred stock outstanding at that time.

The Columbia balance sheet as of March 28th shows current assets of $9,692,440, of which approximately $1,814,000 is represented by cash, including a time deposit of $500,000. The total current liabilities amount to $1,694,664 and working capital equaled $7,997,775.

In line with the company's policy of effecting changes in the method of evaluating the inventories whenever conditions indicate such a necessity, the inventory of released productions at cost, less amortization, has been increased as of March 28, 1936 by approximately $60,000, resulting in a similar increase in operating profits for the nine months ended on that date.

"Release of two important productions, one in April, and the other late in May, presages a larger volume of business in the fourth quarter," according to A. Schneider, treasurer. The domestic gross income of Columbia Pictures for the month of April, the first month of the last quarter of the company's fiscal year which ends June 27, was approximately 14 per cent greater than income received during January, the first month of the third quarter. The first of the two features is "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town;" the second, "The King Steps Out," is scheduled for release May 28 at Radio City Music Hall.

Columbia's consolidated income account for the nine months ended March 28, 1936, compares with the nine months ended March 30, 1935, as follows:

	9 Mos. End. Mar. 28,'36	9 Mos. End. Mar. 30,'35

Radio Corporation Declares 87½ Cents Initial Dividend on New Preferred—Columbia Nine Months' Earnings Compared

The new J. Cheever Cowdin-Standard Capital-Charles Rogers-Cochrane interests in Universal this week took initial steps toward an ultimate simplification of the corporate structure of Universal Corporation, recently organized to acquire certain holdings of Carl Laemmle and associates in Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and Big "U" Film Exchange, Inc., when it filed three registration statements with the Securities and Exchange Commission under Securities Act of 1933, covering the following:

1,622,466 shares of $1 par common stock.

$4,000,000 five per cent convertible debentures.

Warrants to purchase 222,566 shares of common stock.

Voting trust certificates for 1,622,566 shares of common stock.

Scrip certificates for fractional shares of common and preferred stock.

Of the 1,622,566 shares of common stock (for which voting trust certificates will be issued), 130,000 shares are to be sold to Hammons and Company, Inc., underwriters, for $8 per share; 211,569 shares are to be sold directly by Universal at $8 per share; 266,666 2/3 shares are to be reserved for conversion of the debentures; 533,333 1/3 shares are to be reserved for conversion of the preferred stock; 222,566 shares are to be issued upon exercise of warrants, and 258,431 shares are already outstanding.

Total Assets $6,043,527

Total assets of Universal Corporation as of April 2, 1936, were listed at $6,043,527. Cash amounted to $280,566.

On November 1, 1935, Universal Productions, Inc., according to the registration statement, made an agreement with Standard Capital Company, headed by J. Cheever Cowdin and Charles R. Rogers, under which Mr. Cowdin and Mr. Rogers loaned Universal $750,000. On February 4, 1936, an unpaid balance of $670,000 was merged with further loans to Universal of $300,000. Universal has agreed to repay the loans at the rate of $21,000 weekly on principal and six per cent interest monthly.

On January 24, 1936, Universal Productions, Inc., entered into an agreement with Exhibitors Reliance Corporation under which E. R. C. agreed to loan $300,000 to Universal.

Universal pointed out that it contemplates creating a profit-sharing plan or options for common stock in due course for the benefit of its officers and employes. It further states that it is the intention of the management to simplify the corporate structure of company.

211,569 To Be Sold Direct

The company stated that the offering price of the common will be filed in an amendment. Of the 211,569 shares to be sold direct, Universal states that subscriptions already have been received for 56,700 shares from the following: Paul G. Brown, 13,100 shares; Antoinette K. Brown, 2,500 shares; J. Cheever Cowdin, 6,500 shares; D. M. Sheaffer, 12,600 shares; Douglas R. Warfield, 5,000 shares; William K. Dick, 5,000 shares; George G. Barber, 2,000 shares, and William Koenig, 10,000 shares.

Charles R. Rogers, director, and Standard Capital Company hold the warrants for the 222,566 shares of common stock. These warrants, entitling each to purchase 111,283 shares

WASHINGTON PRESS LAUDS SIDNEY LUST

Sidney Lust, one of the industry's oldest and best known exhibitors with theatres in Washington and Baltimore, was the recipient of editorial honors from the Washington Times recently, following the staging of a Father and Son Banquet under the sponsorship of the Temple Brotherhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation.

The editorial follows:

"In these days when so many of our citizens are taking an interest in work among boys' clubs it is well to direct attention to a dinner which was held last week under the auspices of the Brotherhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation.

"The dinner was a 'father and son' affair, but it took on a delightful and helpful atmosphere when Mr. Sidney B. Lust, chairman of the committee in charge, created the idea of 'father for a night.'

"Under this arrangement the adults, in addition to taking their own youngsters to the dinner, also took under their wings a youngster from one of the orphanages or foster homes of the city.

"And these youngsters were the hit of the dinner.

"They were given an opportunity to enjoy a great show, a great dinner, and to have some real companionship with real men.

"Mr. Lust and his hard-working colleagues on the committee deserve credit for a fine affair with a real humanitarian purpose."

of common stock at $10 each, were received as part consideration for the assignment of an option dated November 1, 1935, entitling Mr. Rogers and Standard Capital to purchase shares of stock in Universal Pictures Co., Inc., and Big "U" Film Exchange, Inc.

The 258,431 common shares already outstanding are held by the following: R. H. Cochrane, 26,473 shares or 10 per cent; William Freiday, 3,500 shares; Charles R. Rogers, 25,000 shares; Standard Capital Company, 25,000 shares; G. C. F. Corp., Ltd., 134,375 shares, 52 per cent, and Julia F. Cochrane, 44,083 shares, 17 per cent.

Debentures to Three Purchasers

The $4,000,000 five per cent debentures, said the registration certificate, were sold privately on April 1, 1936 to three purchasers who have no intention at this time to sell their holdings, but they may be offered if conditions arise making an offering necessary or desirable. The G. C. F. Corp., Ltd., according to the registration statement, owns $1,000,000 of the debentures.

Of the 80,000 shares of preferred stock, the company stated that 40,000 shares will be offered in exchange for the $4,000,000 debentures. The remaining 40,000 shares will be offered publicly by underwriters, and at prices, to be disclosed by an amendment.

Proceeds from common shares sale will be added to the general funds of the company. It is expected that the greater portion will be advanced to subsidiaries for production of pictures, improvements to property and equipment, or to satisfy their indebtedness. Application of the proceeds to be received from the sale of the preferred stock will be disclosed in an amendment.

The preferred stock is convertible into common on or after January 1, 1937, at the rate of $15 per share prior to January 1, 1939; $17.50 on or after January 1, 1939 and prior to January 1, 1941; $20 a share on or after January 1, 1941, and prior to January 1, 1943; $22.50 a share on or after January 1, 1943 and prior to January 1, 1945, and $25 a share on or after January 1, 1945.

Under a voting trust agreement dated March 31, 1936, all present outstanding common stock and all common stock to be outstanding upon completion of the proposed financing will be represented by voting trust certificates. The voting trustees are George N. Armsby, New York; Paul G. Brown, Philadelphia; J. Cheever Cowdin, New York; Garrettson Dulin, Los Angeles; Dr. A. H. Giannini, Los Angeles; J. Arthur Rank, England, and Charles R. Rogers, Los Angeles.

Twentieth Century - Fox Rentals Gain

The outlook for Twentieth Century-Fox was described in the financial columns of the New York Herald-Tribune, as follows:

"Theatre receipts and film rentals are ahead of last year, according to an official of Twentieth Century-Fox, who said, however, that in regard to his own company he felt the improvement over last year was not strictly comparable. When the two companies merged last year Fox brought in two producers, Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl F. Zanuck, who had risen rapidly in their own organization of Twentieth Century Pictures. Through their efforts and better production methods generally the new firm has been able to get a larger share of the business through a better product, in the opinion of this official. The company's foreign business, a sizable division, is also ahead of last year, despite the fact that foreign attendance is about the same. It was also stated that the company is holding about the same pace it did in the first quarter, when earnings were about double those for the first period of 1935," concluded the newspaper.

RCA Dividend Declared

David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, announced that the initial dividend on the outstanding shares of the corporation's new $3.50 cumulative convertible first preferred stock was declared by the board of directors.

The dividend is 87½ cents a share, covering the period from April 1, 1936, to June 30, 1936. It is payable on July 1, 1936, to holders of record at the close of business on June 8, 1936.

Mr. Sarnoff also announced that more than 95 per cent of the "B" preferred stock of the corporation has been deposited for exchange under its plan of recapitalization.

In order to give holders of the remaining unexchanged "B" preferred stock an opportunity to receive the dividend on the new first preferred stock just declared, the board of directors has extended the period for exchange of "B" preferred stock by fixing June 30, 1936 as the date to and including which this exchange may be made.

Follows Kennedy's Plan

The dividend on the first preferred stock issued after June 8 and prior to July 1, 1936, in exchange for "B" preferred stock will be paid as after July 1.

The action of directors of Radio in declaring the initial dividend was in line with the expressed intention of the plan of recapitalization proposed by Joseph P. Kennedy, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, now studying the corporate problems of Paramount, who, on assignment by RCA, investigated Radio's problems early this year. At the time the plan was presented to stockholders, David Sarnoff, R. C. A. president, stated that upon acceptance the corporation would be in a position to pay new preferred dividends.

Marc Lachmann has arrived in Hollywood to join Universal where he will develop special exploitation on the bigger pictures from the studio.

Few Industry Fires, Convention Is Told

The film industry made an amazing record in 1935 in freedom from fires, Robert S. Moulton of Boston, chairman of the Fire Record Committee, reported to the National Fire Protection Association convention in Atlantic City last week.

"The Records show only two," he said, "with ridiculously low loss, one being only $18. Of course, there were a few theatre fires during idle periods, but not in any sense due to carelessness, or to film projection.

"We have had complete cooperation from the industry and it has adopted every recommendation we have made. In the studios they have gone beyond anything ever believed possible. In filming pictures everything about the studios—scenery and even the women's costumes—are soaked in fire-resistant fluids, with the result we have not had a conflagration or loss of life there.

"The record of fire loss in the industry has been low for several years and is steadily dropping."

Nebraska Action Is Delayed Until June 1

The trial of the action of Independent Theatres of Lincoln, Neb., against major companies, charging collusion and conspiracy, has been definitely set to start June 1, after having been originally scheduled for this week. The federal court there ordered the delay until the criminal case docket is cleared. Damages of $1,353,000 are asked by the plaintiff from J. H. Cooper, Lincoln Theatres Corporation, Robert Livingston, Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Radio, Warners, Paramount and United Artists.

Chances of an out of court settlement are said to be slight, unless an attempt is made before the case goes to trial. The charge is based on the alleged control of 90 per cent of the films in the city by the defendants, who control only half the theatres. The plaintiffs have declared frequently they want the suit tried.

New Butterfield House

Construction is underway on the new Eastown Theatre at Grand Rapids, Mich., which will be operated by the B. and J. Theatres, Inc., the new company which was formed prior to the late Col. W. S. The company will operate the Royal and Our theatres as well as other neighborhood houses in Grand Rapids.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

IF GOVERNOR Alf (for Alfred) Landon of the sunflower state of Kansas, or Colonel F. (for Frank) Knox of the Chicago Daily News, or whomever the lightning should strike at the forthcoming Republican party (dog fight) in Cleveland in June, should happen to nose out F. D. (for Franklin Delano) Roosevelt in the November battle of ballots, Mister Roosevelt will not have to look far or long for a job.—There's the movies!

Screen-conscious citizens of the Hollywood lots, having come under the smiling charm of the squire of Hyde Park have been gushing to the newspaper boys about what a wonderful matinee idol F. D. R. would make.

For instance, John W. Considine, Jr., a matriculation of Stanford University, Yale University, Oxford University and Heidelberg in Germany, speaking not as an accomplished student, but, rather as a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer producer, the other day confided to reporters in New York that his greatest thrill in a long time was meeting President Roosevelt at the White House. Possibly for future production reference, Mr. Considine had intended, he said, to "memorize" the chief executive's office. (The producer, explained the newspapers, possesses a "photographic memory.")

"I was ushered in," Mr. Considine related, "spent half an hour talking to the President, and don't know to this day one feature about that office.

"All I could see—was him. He's got the most terrific personality I've encountered. Gabel and Bob Montgomery (both stars of Mr. Considine's home lot) are second-raters in charm compared to Mr. Roosevelt."

That's not cricket for Mr. Considine to say that about his colleagues Gabel and Montgomery. Anyway, he added that "Roosevelt would be tremendous in pictures!"

Samuel Goldwyn invested $800,000 in bringing "The Children's Hour" to the screen. After considerable difficulty with the Hays organization, the change of title and plot identity to "These Three," and surmounting a multitude of obstacles, the picture was ready to be filmed. That much is known. But not generally known is Leonard Lyons' account of what occurred at that point.

Miriam Hopkins and Merle Oberon had decided to quit the cast for fear that the children in the story would steal their starring thunder. Miss Oberon relented, but Mr. Goldwyn—though he tried to be gentle and calm—could not placate the blonde Hopkins. "Don't worry," an assistant assured him. "I'll talk to her alone and adjust everything." Goldwyn, who is near-sighted, stepped through a dividing partition and then—satisfied that he was out of Miss Hopkins' range of hearing—exploded. "His pentup emotions poured in a long, censorable diatribe," Mr. Lyons reported, "as Goldwyn pointed in the direction of the partition behind which sat Miriam"—all the while Sam believing she was out of hearing.

The assistants in the room with him reddened at his outburst. "Mr. Goldwyn, Mr. Goldwyn," someone finally blurted, "that's not a wooden partition. It's a curtain!"

Thirty stories under our desk in the RKO Building at Rockefeller Center, far down in the subterranean depths from which arises the towering city of Rockefeller, there is a hideout of Uncle Sam's, where he has stored a heterogenous collection of a king's ransom in jewels, more watch works than one can find anywhere else in the world, thousands of cases of wines and whiskies, linens, fine laces and treasures.

The hideout is the Rockefeller Center Bonded Warehouse, a United States Customs service, under federal lock. It's in a rare location, considering that government warehouses for merchandise are usually located along river fronts and back of the piers where the liners dock.

In the Rockefeller Center place they'll accept for storage pretty nearly anything, except Russian dog skins and pickled cherries.

Millions of Russian dog skins have been offered for storage. The first shipment actually got into the building. A truck with sealed doors backed up to the unloading platform two stories under the street. The seals were broken and the doors were unlocked. That's when the dog skins began to bark, their natural aroma permeating loudly and long.

Pickled cherries were barred, too, after a truckload was being unpacked and a series of staccato reports started. Somebody thought it was machine gun fire, and a hurry call was sent to the control room for the guards. They arrived to find that the racket was only the barrels of cherries exploding—and that truck was sent away, too.

Louis Sobol brought back to Broadway from Hollywood the memories of a stay that was socially glorious. He also returned with Miss Sheila Barret's story about the two hoboes who were sitting around their field fire watching a steak cook. Evidently, one was feeling as dubious as the other about his net share of the spoils.

"You're sure," inquired one hobo, "that dare steak is from a cow."

"Sure," replied the second. "The guy wot guv it to me says it guv the best milk."

"That's swell," echoed the first, "because if it was steak from a hoss I don't t'ink I could eat it. My stomache's too gentle."

Came a silence. "Come to think of it," chirped the second hobo, "wot the guy told me was that it delivered the best milk."

A-Mike Vogel, genial but explosively vociferous chairman of our Managers' Round Table Club, swears to the veracity of this story. Seems that the British-born Ronald Colman had shaved off his mustache for "Clive of India," and United Artists' posters and billboards posed Mr. Colman accordingly. Came the day when Herman Cohen played the picture at his Warfield theatre in San Francisco, benefiting considerably by the extensive billboard campaign which he had plastered all over town. United Artists, however, objected strenuously, because Mr. Cohen painted a mustache on Colman's upper lip on every poster sheet supplied him by the distributor. They stormed his office and demanded an explanation. "If I couldn't recognize him without a mustache," apologized Mr. Cohen, "how'd you expect the public would?"

In all of America evidently there is not a coat to suit the taste of Screen Actor Victor McLaglen in Hollywood, nor a tailor to make one. Mr. McLaglen, son of the Bishop of Clermont, in South Africa, has just had delivered to him a sport coat made in London on his cabled instructions, then flown to Germany for shipment on the Hindenburg Zeppelin to Lakehurst, New Jersey. United States Customs inspectors got $25 in duties on Mr. McLaglen's coat, and only $50 on all of the other freight brought to these shores by the Zeppelin.

And now that M. B. Shanberg, midwest theatre executive in Kansas City, has fully recovered from a severe attack of over-enthusiasticism, the story may be told. The tale, a sad one, indeed, drifts back from Louisville and the recent Kentucky Derby.

The hero, Herbert M. Woolf, is a brother midwester, likewise engaged in exhibition. The luckless victim was Mr. Shanberg. The villain—well, they're still looking for him.

Mr. Shanberg went to Louisville with a definite Brevity complex about the Derby betting. He sent in a life-size wager on the Widener favorite—could see no other horse in the race.

Mr. Woolf, who apparently knows his horses somewhat better, was not so certain.

"Protect yourself with some tickets on Bold Venture, Shan," advised Mr. Woolf. "That Bold Venture is a running fool. He has a great boy on him, Ira Hanford. If anyone beats Brevity, Bold Venture will be the one."

Mr. Shanberg thought it over and decided the advice wasn't bad. He was more certain after he had seen Bold Venture beat Brevity to the wire.

Happy in the box of Warren Wright, Chicago millionaire, after the race, Shanberg held up some tickets in his hand and waved them at Mr. Woolf, who was several box seats away.

"I bet $10 across the line on Bold Venture because you told me to, Herb," the exultant winner called. "Look at those box car figures he paid—$43, $11.80, and $6.60. Just $277 profit. That's protection for Brevity, all right."

It was fine protection, indeed. But Mr. Shanberg spoke too soon. Evidently the villain saw the Kansas Citian's gesture of victory, because when Shanberg arrived at the payoff window he discovered his pocket had been picked—the winning pasteboards were gone.

The public's general impression of dance directors worries LeRoy Prinz, Paramount's director of dancing and dancers. "The public thinks that a dancing master is a flighty individual with a handkerchief in his sleeve and a set of taps on his shoes," he said, adding: "I'd rather you called me 'Butch.'"

"Butch" Prinz will give an account of his he-manishness to anyone who will listen, commencing with his running away from a Missouri home at 15, shipping on freighters to Europe, thence traveling to Algiers as a member of the French Foreign Legion, where he was flogged for being a really bad boy. He was thrown in prison by Machado, and was taken for a ride by Al Capone's late Chicago enemies, when he served as night club impresario and entrepreneur of midnight merriment for Chicago's repressed gang chief. Last year "Butch" engaged in a duel in Hollywood with a German who was subsequently recalled to Berlin by Herr Hitler. Nor is that all, for Mr. Prinz boasts of surviving 14 airplane crashes while flying for the French in the World War. He spent one year in American hospitals recovering from air wrecks, flew ammunition into Mexico for the rebels, and for years has been warding off over-enthusiastic mothers who think their offspring should be in the movies.

One of the smallest sums ever to be deposited in trust in court, 15 cents, was placed the other day when North Carolina Theatres, Inc., planked a nickle and a dime on the desk of the court clerk at High Point, N. C., with their answer to a suit brought by A. D. Green in which he is seeking to collect damages for being forcibly ejected from the Rialto theatre. The 15 cents is the price of admission paid.

SHOW OF SHOWMANSHIP

LONDON'S DENHAM STUDIOS NOW ACTIVE

Seven of 15 Stages Are Ready; Schenck and Kent Deny Sale or Purchase, But Seek Producer

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

London Films' studio in Denham became active this week, after a delay caused by fire which damaged the roof of the first completed floor. First of the major features to be made there will be the Robert T. Kane all-Technicolor "Wings of the Morning." A few miles away, at Iver, the Pinewood studios wait only the finishing touches also to go into commission. On July 5th Herbert Wilcox Productions definitely transfers its activities there.

Seven big stages are ready for equipment, of the fifteen planned at Denham. Dressing room accommodation is nearly completed. The power house is fully functioning and the workshops are supplying all the furniture and apparatus needed by the studio. Iver, with a stage reserved by British National Films, will have three more available on a service basis.

Both these studios will continue to progress towards complete equipment for the greater part of 1936. In less than full working order they will offer rather more than double the floor space available at Elstree until the big new Amalgamated plant gets going there.

New Standards Committee

The British Standards Institution, which recently was called in to adjudicate on the question of 16 mm. standardization, giving a ruling in favor of principles of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, has now been asked to supervise the whole of the standards used in the industry, and is setting up a permanent committee for that purpose.

The Rumor Market

During the recent visit of Sidney R. Kent and Joseph M. Schenck, rumors associating them with various deals, and with the names of several of the biggest production and exhibition units here, were so numerous that the contradictions, inevitably forthcoming, might have been read into the original stories.

Persistently, the intention has been credited to the 20th Century-Fox chiefs to put through a deal of some sort with Gaumont-British. Explicit denials came from them to the first story, in a London trade paper, that with the assistance of A. C. Blumenthal they were seeking to get G-B by purchase of the Ostrer holdings in the controlling company, Metropolis and Bradford Trust. A later development, depending in this case on cabled back New York stories, was the statement that they were planning to sell the 20th Century-Fox holdings in G-B to an unnamed "British group." Once again there were denials.

Seek Contact for Six Films

The one definite fact known about the plans of Messrs. Schenck and Kent is that which they themselves announced at the press reception on their arrival. That is that they wish to establish contact with a British producer capable of making six films a year of a quality comparable to that to be expected in the four already scheduled from Robert T. Kane's organization, New World. Briefly, it seems that 20th-Fox, like United Artists, will be freed of the quota incubus and a British unit be given a chance to show that it is worthy of a world release.

That assumes that the deal comes off. On this point, it is obvious that everything depends on the status and financial strength of the "British group." Nothing has been officially released as to the identity of the persons who are talking with Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck, but it can be taken as a definite fact that they have had many conferences with what is known as "the Portal group," and that there is a very great likelihood of an agreement being arrived at which will cover the British production needs of 20th-Fox, and perhaps other things.

Heads Syndicate

Lord Portal came into the film news as head of the syndicate which bought the Universal holding, later transferring it to General Film Distributors. It is obvious that with his associates, who include the millionaire J. A. Rank, he would have no difficulty in completing a production plan on the scale desired by 20th-Fox. Equally a certainty is that the films would be made at the just completed Pinewood studios, erected by the Rank-Rule-Boot interests. Uncertain is whether this production deal is to be extended further in the direction of a transfer of 20th Century-Fox holdings in G-B to the Portal group—associates of C. M. Woolf of General Distributors, who has been correctly or incorrectly credited with a wish to control G-B for a long time. Surmise on this point is that at this moment just surmise. The current facts are the 20th-Fox denials, underlined by more denials from Mark Ostrer of G-B.

Meanwhile, said Sidney Kent at the 20th-Fox London convention, the company is back on a dividend paying basis owing to the work of Mr. Schenck and Darryl Zanuck and in 18 months expects to be ahead of the single company in the business which is at present doing a bigger world trade at the present moment. And, he added, it expected to have nine British pictures in the year, costing between £50,000 ($250,000) and £100,000 each.

W. H. Beaudine is directing Nervo and Knox in "It's in the Bag," for Warner-First National at Teddington. Swanda Wanda, French film star, is christened Cora Beaucaire for her British debut in this film.

LONDON PARAMOUNT'S BOOKINGS CAUSE STIR

The use of the Paramount in London's Tottenham Court Road section as a pre-release house is causing controversy along Wardour Street. Situated a few hundred yards from the Dominion, operated by Gaumont British as a second pre-release theatre, the Paramount has been doing big business with bookings putting it substantially on the same basis as the West End houses—Tivoli, Empire, Leicester Square, Pavilion, etc.

Exhibitors, who have a long-standing grievance against the West End run in any case, are alarmed at the possibility of the area—never conclusively defined—being definitely extended. With a lead from GB, which has the power to withhold its circuit bookings from features playing pre-release at the Paramount, there will be an effort to force that theatre back to general release date.

20th-Fox-British Arrangement Told

Terms of the Twentieth Century-Fox deal with British National for production of four pictures annually were revealed as without time limitation, and cancellable by either party after three pictures have been completed, by S. R. Kent, president, on his arrival in New York Tuesday after nearly six weeks in Europe. Said Mr. Kent: "We will cooperate with British National on casting and we have the veto power on stories. A minimum of $250,000 will be spent on some of the pictures and the others will cost around $400,000."

Reports that Lord Portal had been negotiating for the Twentieth Century-Fox 49 per cent interest in Gaumont British were dismissed by Mr. Kent as annually recurrent rumors, and a similar comment disposed of reports pertaining to acquisition of the Roxy theatre in New York. Walter J. Hutchinson, head of the company's foreign division, returned with the president.

Mr. Kent, Joseph M. Schenck, John D. Clark and other home office executives were to leave New York on Thursday to attend the company's sales convention in Chicago. Darryl Zanuck, Sol Wurtzel, William Goetz, William Dover, Irving Berlin and Irving Caesar were to leave Hollywood on Friday by chartered plane for the same destination.

Erpi Victor in $3,000,000 Suit Of Bernard Gogel

Federal Judge John C. Knox this week handed down a decision in the United States district court for the southern district of New York granting the motion of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, and Electrical Research Products, Inc., to dismiss the complaint of Bernard Gogel, who, as assignee of the Standard Sound Recording Corporation, brought suit against the three telephone companies for $3,000,000 damages for their alleged violation of the Sherman and the Clayton anti-trust acts.

"This action is one of 18 so-called 'treble damage' suits brought by various makers of talking picture equipment or users thereof who have sought monetary redress from the Western Electric Company and its associates on the ground that this group was engaging in a monopoly in restraint of trade in the sale and lease of talking motion picture equipment," said a statement from Erpi, which added that Judge Knox, in his opinion granting the motion, ruled:

"Allegations Fall Short"

"Assuming for the purpose of the instant motion that the acts of defendants, as alleged by plaintiff, were violative of both the Sherman and Clayton acts, the complaint, in my opinion, fails to set forth a cause of action. * * * The plaintiff sues not in a public but a private capacity; consequently he must show affirmatively and in what manner the defendants' acts have injured his assignor. So far as I am able to discern * * * his allegations fall short of showing a causal connection to the wrongs in which defendants engaged.

"If, as must be granted, plaintiff's assignor was engaged in the business of leasing sound recording equipment, it does not follow necessarily that the defendants are responsible for its inability to continue therein. A variety of circumstances quite unconnected with defendants may have been productive of such disasters as came about. The mere averment of his own conclusions that he was 'prevented and foreclosed from carrying on the business due to the actions and conspiracies complained of herein' falls short of a 'plain and concise statement of the facts' as required by the Civil Practice Act. * * * The pleading under attack is singularly free of revelation as to what the assignor was doing as well as the manner in which its operations were curtailed and frustrated by the defendants.

"No Reasonable Relationship"

"$3,000,000, the sum alleged as the plaintiff's damages, is a sizable amount. From all that is declared, there is no reasonable relationship between the damages demanded and the action of defendants. Conceivably the damages asked might be out of all proportion to the injuries sustained .

"For the reasons specified I shall grant the instant motion with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint in such a manner as will adequately state the manner in which he has suffered injury and with such particularity as to inform defendants of the facts against which they must defend."

KENNEDY IS BRINGING PARAMOUNT REPORT

Results of Survey by John J. Ford on Theatre Operations Expected at Same Time

The management and the bankers of Paramount Pictures Corporation will be informed in a few days—probably at a specially-called directors' meeting—of Joseph P. Kennedy's recommendations on the corporation's studio and production problems in Hollywood, for Mr. Kennedy left California on Tuesday for the home office on Broadway after a study of the situation.

Due at about the same time will be the report on theatre operations, from John J. Ford, named by Mr. Kennedy to investigate that situation, and from which is expected to come a determination of the company's future policies in exhibition.

It had been expected that Mr. Kennedy would be back from Hollywood with his report by Tuesday and ready to present it to the company's regular board meeting on Thursday. The final report, therefore, in all probability will be made next week before a special meeting and likely will be presented to the annual meeting of Paramount stockholders on June 16th.

Theatre Survey Completed

The final report would incorporate the observations and recommendations of Paramount theatre operations resulting from the survey recently completed by John J. Ford, head of the Maine and New Hampshire circuit, in which Paramount, through its subsidiary, Olympia Theatres, is interested. Mr. Ford was drafted by Mr. Kennedy for the theatre survey and his report, which will not be completed for another week, at least, will discuss the company's decentralized theatre operations and, specifically, the partnership agreements expiring in the near future. These include the Lucas and Jenkins, Wilby-Kincey and Hoblitzelle deals, all of which expire July 1st. Mr. Ford's report is expected to have a direct bearing on the extension of these partnerships and may influence any changes in the terms of the agreements which might be made under renewals.

Harvey Dow Gibson, president of Manufacturers' Trust Company, was elected to the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., last week to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Percy H. Johnston, chairman of the board of Chemical Bank and Trust Company. Mr. Johnston was serving a three-year term expiring in June, 1938.

"Substantially Interested"

Manufacturers' Trust Company was one of a group of 13 banks which, in 1932, refinanced Paramount to the extent of an $11,600,000 credit. Unfinished negatives were pledged by Paramount as security for the new credit under an arrangement attacked later by the bankruptcy trustees of the company who contended it constituted a pledging of the company's assets so as to result in giving the banks a preferential position over other Paramount creditors. The trustees' suit was withdrawn, however, under a settlement provision in the Paramount reorganization plan which allowed the banks' claims against the company in full and with interest.

An official statement from Paramount announcing Mr. Gibson's election to the board said that Manufacturers' Trust Company was "substantially interested in the company today."

The Paramount board meeting also elected Stanton Griffis to the company's executive committee to fill the vacancy created by the recent death of Gerald Brooks. Mr. Griffis is associated with the investment firm of Hemphill, Noyes and was elected to the board several months ago to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Frank A. Vanderlip.

Republic Plans 52 Features And Four Serials

Republic Pictures will have 52 features and four serials next season, the company's sales forces meeting in Chicago June 5-6 will be told by J. J. Millstein, general sales manager. The feature group will be broken down into seven divisions.

The first group will be two Anniversary Specials. "Two Years Before the Mast" and "The President's Mystery Story."

The second group will comprise six Jubilee Specials—"Army Girl," "Portia on Trial," "Happy Go Lucky," "Follow in Your Heart," "Join the Marines" and "Heart in Bondage."

In the third division will be 24 Gilt Edge Pacemakers.

Four Epics, done in natural colors, are down for the outdoor action group in the fourth classification.

The Gene Autry westerns are divided into two groups, one consisting of two specials and the other six musicals. This constitutes groups five and six.

The final batch of features embraces "Three Mesquiteers" westerns. Three characters will be featured.

No stars are given for the four serials.

Home office officials are scheduled to leave for Chicago next Tuesday for preliminary arrangements and conferences.

Grover Parsons, San Francisco branch manager for MGM for the past 17 years, has resigned to join Republic as western division sales head.

Potter Made a Director

Henry Potter has been made a director by Samuel Goldwyn, having been awarded a contract after about a year of "apprenticeship" on the Goldwyn lot. Mr. Potter was formerly a Broadway stage director.

'HOSTILE ATMOSPHERE' IN GERMANY HELD THREAT TO MUSIC CONGRESS

Mills Says "Chances Are 100 to One" That Performing Rights Societies Will Meet Elsewhere Than in Berlin

Composers Society Chairman Says Germany's Policy "Stifles Free Flow of Cultural, Creative Material"

Opposition of the United States, England, France, Italy and Austria to the holding of the annual congress of the Confederation of Performing Rights Societies of the World in Berlin, on the ground of the existence of "a hostile atmosphere," has forced postponement of the meeting from June to September, and the chances are "100 to one" that it will not be in Berlin, E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, disclosed this week.

Many matters of first-rank importance to the performing rights agencies and, inferentially, to the users of music, including the motion picture industry, are scheduled on the agenda.

The original plan was to convene the congress prior to the meeting in Brussels, Belgium, September 7th of the International Copyright Union, in order to draft recommendations and possible amendments to be presented to the Union on behalf of the performing rights societies of the world. If the congress is not called off entirely, as seems likely, the two meetings will be convened about the same time.

Mr. Mills was emphatic that, as the ASCAP delegate, he would not attend any meeting in Berlin, or under the auspices of any country "which has adopted a policy stifling the free flow of cultural, creative material."

Sees Propaganda Danger

While declaring that "the German Government has a perfect right to do what it is doing," without interference in its affairs by outsiders, "because it is apparently the will of the German people," Mr. Mills assailed the Aryan laws "which measure creative work by religion rather than merit."

He intimated that if the conferences were held in Berlin, they would be exposed to Nazi propaganda, and added that "we don't have to subject ourselves to their ideas which hold that no literary or artistic work is any good unless it is by a German."

"The seven lively arts should not be submitted to harassment by the German government," he said. "We believe that the works of such composers as Sigmund Romberg, Irving Berlin and Oscar Hammerstein should not be condemned because of their religion. The Nazis have burned books written by Jews, condemned plays and motion pictures in which Jews have had any part, and forbid the performance of music composed by Jews."

Points to Tense Feelings

Because of the tense feeling in Europe between some of the nations, he pointed out, the possible meeting places are limited but the congress will be convened on some neutral ground. Rome is out of the question because of the Anglo-Italian hostility, he said, but Geneva, Locarno, Brussels, Stockholm and Copenhagen are some of the alternatives.

"SAMPLING CINEMA" LATEST IN LONDON

A "sampling cinema" is the newest wrinkle in London.

In a small auditorium in a large London store short scenes from films scheduled for early release are shown. From these "samples," shoppers determine which of the films they prefer to attend.

It was recalled that the German restrictions were attacked by witnesses at the copyright hearings in Washington last month, and were denounced on the floor of the House by Congressman William I. Sirovich of New York, chairman of the House patents committee.

Duffy Bill Conferences

Meanwhile, members of Congress and representatives of ASCAP and other interests involved have been conferring with officials of the treaty division of the state department on amendments to the Duffy copyright bill which, by protecting interests of the United States said to be endangered, might pave the way for adherence to the international copyright convention.

Mr. Mills believed that the likelihood of passage of copyright legislation before adjournment of Congress is fainter than ever because the subcommittee which has been attempting to reconcile conflicting views has been unable to agree among itself.

He said that the subcommittee has been deadlocked by inability to agree on three major points: (1) proposed elimination of the present statutory licensing clause which limits a composer's revenue on phonograph records to two cents; (2) proposed licensing of places giving music performances by slot machines; (3) the statutory $250 minimum damage penalty, which exhibitors and broadcasters want eliminated, but which ASCAP wants to retain as "it discourages infringements and without which the authors and composers would find it difficult to protect their rights," said Mr. Mills.

Copyright Formula Awaited

E. P. Kilroe, attorney of Twentieth Century-Fox and chairman of the producers' copyright committee, this week said he would confer with Dr. Wallace McClure of the state department on amendments to the Berne copyright convention with a view to safeguarding the interests of the American motion picture industry, the largest user of copyrights in the world. The committee expects soon to be able to announce its formula by which adherence to the convention could be effected with the proper safeguards.

With respect to pending legislation, it was reported from Washington this week that if amendments to the Duffy bill can be worked out which adequately will protect the interests of American authors, composers and publishers, there is a possibility that other disputed points, including the highly publicized minmum damage provision, might be ironed out and a bill reported for action before adjournment.

At the same time, so far as can be learned, few Washington observers are optimistic over the chances of developing legislation which will be acceptable to a sufficient number of members to insure passage.

State department officials take the attitude that adherence of this country to the International Copyright Union will be highly desirable. They dismiss as unimportant, in view of the advantages which they say will accrue in other countries, the fact that European nations have raised barriers against American films, books or songs.

Expect Concessions

These officials appear to believe—although on what authority has not been disclosed—that the members of the International Copyright Union are so anxious for American support that they will make concessions. The arbitrary regulations of the union and its apparent unwillingness to make any concessions were cited as outstanding reasons why we should not join, when that matter came up during the House copyright hearings.

Whatever the attitude of the Union members, they cannot offhand make changes in the terms of the convention and any modifications desired would have to be approved at a general conference. The discussions now going on in the State Department are designed to develop the changes which the American delegation will seek to have adopted to pave the way for our adherence.

Officials of the department and members of Congress have so far declined to discuss the problem in detail. It is indicated, however, that opinion is divided as to the desirability of having our copyright law amended to make possible adherence to the convention if the Union, in turn, makes the changes which are being suggested, or whether it would not be best to hold up Congressional action until the Union's attitude toward those changes has been determined.

Although the supreme court decision of May 18 invalidating the Guffey coal act threatens to delay adjournment of Congress beyond June 6 if new legislation is to be enacted, leaders are still hopeful of getting away at an early date and, accordingly, will not countenance the consideration of controversial legislation which might interfere with their plans. As the copyright bill is held to be one of the most controversial pieces of legislation pending, even if the bill should be reported out, prospects for its enactment this session are dim.

24 FROM G-B FOR 1936-37; BERNERD SAYS "COMPANY WILL NOT BE SOLD"

General Manager from England Points to Extensive Borrowing of Hollywood Talent and Technicians for International Tone

Calls Gaumont Largest Employer in Amusement World with 15,000 on Payroll; Cullman Assures 20 Weeks' Bookings

The most suitable 24 features out of 52 to be produced in England in the coming season by the parent Gaumont-British Pictures Company will be brought to the American market by GB as its schedule for 1936-37, an increase of eight over the present season.

With that announcement, GB on Saturday concluded its annual sales convention, at New York's Warwick hotel, the second sales conference to be held by the large companies, following Metro's of one week ago.

The titles of the new group were detailed by Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager for distribution in England, who is now in the United States on a prolonged study of the market and the company's operations.

"Under the leadership of Arthur A. Lee, vice-president here, and George W. Weeks, sales manager, the progress has been so satisfactory that further expansion in this market is justified," Mr. Bernerd told the 125 GB home office and field sales representatives gathered at the convention, which opened on Friday morning.

The group of 24 will embrace only Class A pictures, he added, "and, therefore, have been budgeted accordingly," including the appearances of many Hollywood stars and the work of several Hollywood directors, writers and technicians. GB has been active of late borrowing Hollywood talent to inject an "international" appeal. MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox and Walter Wanger Productions figure prominently in the loans. To facilitate this interchange further, it was agreed in several instances to schedule production so that the respective peaks of the companies concerned will occur at different times.

GB is the largest employer in the entertainment world, said Mr. Bernerd, employing some 15,000 persons in the two-dozen varied enterprises controlled by the company. "All of them are financially stable," he added. The company has theatres in "nearly every city and good-sized town throughout the British Isles," and has studios and laboratories at Shepherd's Bush and Islington, in England; owns the Gaumont British newsreel and is active making educational films under the supervision of professors and scientists. "We get up a complete program of 16 mm films for the thousands of home projectors that are manufactured by us in a special factory," he said. "Gaumont also manufactures and sells theatre supplies, including theatre sound reproducers and recorders for studios, owns several vaudeville and legitimate theatres, operates a subsidiary for the manufacture of its own scenic effects, costumes and other production properties, and, with the advent of radio, entered that field by manufacturing sets. The company also is affiliated with a London radio station, manufactures phonographs and records, and also has an engineering organization, attending to the building of motion picture theatres and other amusement structures.

'KLEIG EYE' ENDED, SAYS JOHN ARNOLD

That bane of the existence of practically every motion picture star of days not so long ago, "kleig eye," has now been thoroughly eliminated from Hollywood studios, according to John Arnold, director of photography at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"During the old days," Mr. Arnold explains, "dust from carbon lamps and ultra-violet rays would mix and the actor or actress would feel as if their eyes had been sprayed with ground glass, causing severe inflammation and pain. But today the lights don't flicker. Our film is faster, demanding less light so we no longer need the blue light or ultra-violet ray. That is why 'kleig eye' has been eliminated."

Makes Television Sets

"We are interested in hotels," said Mr. Bernerd, "and have a large catering establishment. We run restaurants, and are interested in cafes in London and dance palaces in the principal cities of England."

GB's latest expansion is an intensive manufacture of television sets, and now it is preparing television programs.

Mr. Bernerd told the delegates that GB in England is arranging its procedure in order to assure prompt delivery.

"GB will never be sold," he declared, in answer to reports published variously in recent months concerning a reputed deal in London with Twentieth Century-Fox.

"We want too much and they haven't enough money to buy," he added, disclosing that GB as it is presently constituted has a capital of $75,000,000, with its 350 theatres, 250 cafes and numerous other properties. Too, "this should show our finances and security," he added.

Cables were read to the delegates by Mr. Bernerd from Mark Ostrer, Michael Balcon, Alfred Hitchcock, Jessie Matthews and Richard Donat, in London.

Roxy Guarantees 20 Weeks

Howard S. Cullman, trustee for the Roxy theatre in New York, considered to be GB's "ace" first-run outlet in America, told the conventioners that the theatre, having played 18 of the company's pictures for 23 weeks during the past two years—"not one film showing a loss"—has contracted to play GB's pictures throughout a large part of 1936-37, guaranteeing at least 20 weeks.

Nate J. Blumberg, RKO; John O'Connor, RKO; Ed Kuykendall, president of the MP TOA, and Paul Nathanson, son of Canada's N. L. Nathanson, were presented to the convention by Mr. Weeks. On the dais at the luncheon on Friday with the foregoing were Oscar Hanson, of Empire Films, in Canada; James Campbell, head of GB's music division in England; A. P. Waxman, advertising director in America, and C. M. White, assistant sales manager.

Executives who also were present at the convention included: Claude McGowan, comptroller; Charles Leach, secretary; S. Schwengeler, Al Selig, Charles Garrett, William Berry, R. McGrath, J. O'Connor, William Fitelson, B. Mayers, J. London and Peter Rosoff, all from the home office.

From Canada came, besides Oscar Hanson: A. W. Perry, Empire Films' general sales manager; William Marriott, publicity manager, and nine branch managers.

Hodkinson Assistant Sales Head

Mr. Weeks introduced 12 new members of the sales force, as follows: Tom Jennings, Boston; Robert Winnig, Des Moines; Donald Conley, Indianapolis; Ed Brichetto, Cincinnati; James Nash, Pittsburgh; Clive Waxman, Detroit; George Blumenthal, San Francisco; Amos Leonard and Jules Kasper, Buffalo; Walter Kofeldt, Los Angeles; George Davidson, Cleveland, and Reuben Rosenblatt, of Milwaukee.

Mr. Weeks also announced that Kenneth Hodkinson, manager of the San Francisco exchange, has been elevated to the new post of assistant sales executive at the home office, working for himself and Mr. White.

Mr. Hodkinson was for nine years associated with United Artists as sales executive, later serving UA as western division manager. He was general manager for Paramount for two years and has headed a theatre circuit of his own.

GB conventioners were guests of Howard Cullman at the Roxy theatre on Friday evening, and on Saturday attended the annual GB banquet, held at the Paradise on Broadway.

Trailer on New Product

A trailer, running several thousand feet, presenting sequences from the new season's pictures which are either completed or are in work, was shown to the delegates. At the suggestion of Mr. Waxman, the studios in London have been supplying the New York office with scenes shot from day to day.

First indication that Mr. Hanson's Empire Films in Canada hereafter will distribute GB pictures in Canada, taking the product away from Regal Films, came at the convention.

Six additional promotions were announced by Mr. Weeks at the convention, as follows: Arthur Greenblatt, New York branch head, now manager of the New York, Philadelphia and Washington offices; Irving Gumberg, salesman in New York, elevated to head the office; Scott Chesnutt, manager of Atlanta, now is southern district manager in addition to handling sales at the exchange; John

FIELD FORCE AT NEW YORK CONVENTION GETS SET TO HANDLE MORE G-B PICTURES

Scully, manager of the Boston office, in charge of New England sales; Carl Goe, former Albany salesman, named manager of the branch, and Jack Erickson, former salesman at San Francisco office, has succeeded Mr. Hodkinson as manager there.

Ray Halperin is a new salesman at the New York exchange. Reg Wilson, home office representative, has been delegated to cover the Midwest. Marcel Mekelberg, Albany manager, has been transferred to Boston in a similar capacity.

Speakers on Saturday morning included James Campbell, in charge of GB music, who told the conventioners that the company had signed a number of well known writers. He added that he would make periodic trips to this country from England to aid in the exploitation of important musicals.

William Fitelson, counsel for the company, talked on legal angles in signing contracts. William Berry, head of the non-theatrical department, discussed the progress he is making.

29 Stars, 11 Directors Scheduled

Some 29 stars will appear in the 24 1936-37 productions, Mr. Bernerd explained, as follows:

Richard Arlen
George Arliss
Nils Asther
Noah Beery
Constance Bennett
Clive Brook
Mary Carlisle
Constance Cummings
Cedric Hardwicke
Will Hay
Oscar Homolka
Jack Hulbert
Edmund Lowe
Barry Mackay
Gina Malo
Jessie Matthews
Victor McLaglen
John Mills
Douglass Montgomery
Lilli Palmer
Nova Pilbeam
Sylvia Sidney
Richard Tauber
Hazel Terry
Desmond Tester
Sybil Thorndyke
Ernest Truex
Helen Vinson
Roland Young

The 11 directors who will produce the American releases include:

Geoffrey Barkas
William Beaudine
Albert de Courville
Sonnie Hale
Alfred Hitchcock
Herbert Mason
Charles Reisner
Milton Rosmer
Robert Stevenson
Raoul Walsh
Alfred Werker

In the group of 24 pictures, seven already have been completed, as follows:

Everything Is Thunder, starring Constance Bennett; based on Jocelyn Lee Hardy's novel; Milton Rosmer directed, with Douglass Montgomery and Oscar Homolka.

Doomed Cargo, co-starring Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings, from an original by Arnold Ridley and Bernard Merivale; Albert de Courville directed.

Two of Us, starring Jack Hulbert and Gina Malo, adapted from "Youth at the Helm," by Paul Vulpius; co-directed by Jack Hulbert and Robert Stevenson; music by Sigler, Goodhart and Hoffman.

His Majesty's Pajamas, a Capitol Film production, directed by Alfred Werker, from the original by Gene Markey, with Clive Brook, Helen Vinson and Mary Carlisle.

The Marriage of Corbal, by Rafael Sabatini, with Nils Asther, Noah Beery, Hugh Sinclair and Hazel Terry; a Capitol Film production, directed by Karl Grune.

Where There's a Will, co-starring Will Hay and Gina Malo; directed by William Beaudine.

Nine Days a Queen (The Story of Lady Jane Grey), with Cedric Hardwicke, John Mills, Nova Pilbeam, Sybil Thorndyke and Desmond Tester; Robert Stevenson directed.

Productions now being filmed include:

Great Barrier, directed by Geoffrey Barkas, with Richard Arlen, Barry Mackay and Lilli Palmer, with exteriors being filmed in British Columbia, by George Busby.

Everybody Dance, directed by Charles (Chuck) Reisner; music by Gordon and Revel; Ralph Spence collaborated on the script with Leslie Arliss.

Untitled musical romance, starring Richard Tauber, to be produced by Capitol Films.

Soldiers Three, by Kipling, directed by Raoul Walsh, starring Victor McLaglen, with exteriors filmed in India.

Others that will complete the full schedule include:

Paris Love Song, starring Jessie Matthews, directed by Sonnie Hale; music by Gordon and Revel.

Untitled song-and-dance story starring Jessie Matthews.

Strangers on a Honeymoon, by Edgar Wallace, co-starring Constance Cummings and Hugh Sinclair; directed by Albert de Courville.

King Solomon's Mines, by H. Rider Haggard, to star Roland Young.

The Nelson Touch, starring George Arliss, based on Neil Grant's play.

Untitled George Arliss production.

The Hawk, by Francois de Croisset, to star Constance Bennett.

Hidden Power, co-starring Sylvia Sidney and Richard Donat, to be directed by Alfred Hitchcock, from Joseph Conrad's "The Secret Agent."

Untitled production to be directed by Alfred Hitchcock.

River of Unrest.

The Threat.

The Dark Invader, German spy story.

Standardizing Data On Sound Track Use

The first step towards the standardization of the various new types of sound tracks, developed by studios with new recording methods during the past year, has been taken by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Preliminary standards for dimension, position on film, and nomenclature for various classes of single and push-pull sound track as drawn up by the council's sound recording committee are being sent to all studio sound departments, sound equipment manufacturers and the New York Society of Motion Picture Engineers committee.

The council committee is headed by E. R. Hansen of Twentieth Century-Fox, and the SMPE committee is headed by Porter Evans of Warners. Standardization of sound track methods, it was pointed out, will result in great economy to the industry, due to the fact that all organizations will be guided by whatever preliminary standards may be finally adopted, with the subsequent use of the sound tracks on any equipment without modification.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 25.—(A) Name the important requirements in a circuit carrying alternating current. (B) What is an electrical filter. Describe its method of operation. (C) What test should be made before starting to paint or recoat an old screen?

Answer to Question No. 18

Question No. 18 was: (A) Why should there be two doors to a projection room entrance, with space between? (B) How may induction coils be tested in the projection room? (C) Describe two methods for testing the adjustment of lateral film guides in the sound head.

Examination shows the following to have made either correct or at least acceptable answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. H. Danielson; B. DeVietti; G. E. Doe; J. R. Prater; H. Edwards; W. C. Brown; M. and J. Devoy; R. A. Hooker; W. Limmroth; A. L. Cooper; W. H. Edmonds; C. G. Jones, L. P. Storick and F. W. Gumbel; C. Champney; P. and L. Felt; F. Bochert; E. Toedte; C. L. Loft; H. B. Olover; D. L. Maxwell; G. Sargent and S. G. Sanders; W. H. Remick and D. L. Slinger; B. B. Hornstein and J. R. Jacobs; D. N. Richards and R. T. Tomlinson; E. Baxter; H. Winkle and R. R. Robins; B. L. Jennings; K. L. Knight and L. Henderson; W. V. Cramer, J. N. Logan and S. Morgan; V. Sanders and J. Jensen; H. J. Billingsworth; T. G. Gregerson; M. Y. Joy; J. Jones and B. R. Shepherd; L. B. Smith and H. Nnow; O. Hunt and W. Morrison.

Section A is answered by C. L. Loft as follows: "Entrance to projection rooms should be convenient. If it leads into the auditorium there should be two fireproof doors, with the space between forming a small hallway. In case of fire such hallway would be a protective factor."

D. Danielson answers somewhat better by saying: "The reasons for two doors with space between when the entrance leads directly into the auditorium is that there is less likelihood of smoke being visible to the audience in case of fire; also such space would act as a sort of muffler to sound, preventing it reaching the auditorium. Such hall way might be used for storage of clothing, carbons, etc."

Very good, but I think B. DeVietti puts it best. He says: "With such an arrangement of doors the projectionist may leave the room in case of fire, after doing what he may to reduce the damage, or one may enter to aid him in case a fire occurs without a tell-tale whisp (or billow perhaps.—F. H. R.) of smoke escaping into the auditorium to panic the audience. Moreover, with but one door noise escapes into the auditorium every time a one-door entrance is opened to permit entrance or exit would be avoided, and such noise may be very annoying, especially to any portion of the audience seated near the projection room entrance. If due to constructional design a hallway entrance is impractical, then some other means of entrance and exit should be provided so that at least some of the advantages of the two-door entrance may be retained."

Another very excellent reply is by P. and L. Felt.

(B) H. R. Smith gave an excellent answer, but it is somewhat too complicated for ease in understanding. I therefore have selected that of Mr. DeVietti, which reads:

"Inductances can be tested in the projection room by the following methods: To test for a short circuit: AC connected to the inductance being tested with an ac milliammeter in the line will quickly denote whether the coil is shortened internally or not because of the fact that high impedance (ohmic resistance, inductance, capacitance) is offered to the flow of ac by any inductive winding; therefore, the reading of the milliammeter should tell the projectionist whether the coil is shorted or not.

"To check for open circuit: The only resistance offered to the flow of dc through an inductive winding is when the switch is opened and closed; at this precise moment, the field is building up or collapsing on the windings; but once the field is built up and the current is maintained at a fixed value no resistance other than the ohmic resistance of the wire will impede its flow through the coil windings; consequently, continuity of the circuit will be manifest by a reading on the meter. No reading, of course, will indicate an open circuit.

"All inductive windings have a certain frequency response at which they will function at maximum efficiency. Entering into this matter is the size and length of the wire, insulation, type of core, etc.

"Caution must, therefore, be observed in testing and checking anv inductive winding in the speech circuit—especially those having a core—not to use high current because of the danger of changing the magnetic properties of the core which in turn may have the effect of altering the frequency response of the coil and undoubtedly cause distortion in the sound."

(C) H. B. Smith answers:

"1. With a high impedance headset connected across the amplifier output, or the monitor input, adjust the lateral guide rollers until no frame line or sprocket hole noise is heard in the headset.

"2. Place a piece of blank undeveloped film in the sound gate and focus the exciting light upon it for about 30 seconds, then turn the drive until about six inches of the film has been pulled down and repeat the exposure. Each exposure will leave a dark line where the exciting light struck the film. This is done several times and will show if the film is laterally out of adjustment. After the guide rollers have been adjusted it is necessary to repeat the process again.

"I prefer the headset method as it is possible to quickly adjust the lateral rollers, even while the show is on, and the headset will show any extraneous noise even if the level is so low that it does not appear in the auditorium from the back stage speakers."

Notice: Should any one care to take issue on or with any of the answers at any time, if the point of objection seem justified I will be very willing to devote space in the "School" to argument. Bear that in mind, please.

JACK MILLER RESIGNS AS CHICAGO EXHIBITOR HEAD

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

Jack Miller has resigned as head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association. His resignation takes effect July 1, of this year and ends a twelve year term as head of this organization.

According to present reports the group will not disband and a successor to Miller will be announced prior to July 1st. Mr. Miller, who started in the theatre business as business manager of the operators' union here from 1908 to 1915 and then went into the exhibition side of the business, says that he is giving up his post due to other business connections which demand his constant care and attention. He has a number of outside activities which of late have required so much of his time that he feels it necessary to withdraw as head of the exhibitor association. He will continue to operate his local circuit of theatres.

Mr. Miller's resignation followed the exodus of the Essaness Circuit from the MPTO group last week. The local chain of theatres which are independent of any producer connection felt that it was to their advantage to belong to the strong independent group, Allied Theatres of Illinois, which is headed by Aaron Saperstein. This organization they felt was more suitable to their needs and thus the change. This leaves two circuits in the Exhibitors Association — Balaban & Katz and Warner Theatres. These two groups are closely connected with major production companies and their problems are different from those of the other members of the association.

The joining of Essaness with Allied makes this independent group one of the strongest organizations of its type in the country.

Many are those who point to the fact that Balaban & Katz, which long has ruled in the exhibition ranks here, will be unable to dictate Chicago film policies as easily as in years past.

Predominant among the problems now being considered in theatre circles here are the matters of double-features, an extra week of clearance between "C" week and the first week of release and the new operators' union contract which comes up for settlement this fall.

Rebuffed on Extra Clearance

B & K last fall sought to put through the extra week of clearance and was met with rebuke as the distributors had already made too many agreements which prohibited this concession to the big circuit. The distributors did, it is understood, agree to give B & K the clearance this coming season when the new agreements would be made. Indie exhibitors on the other hand are strongly opposing this extra week of clearance and will fight the issue to the last ditch. They feel that such a grant would jeopardize many of their theatres and they are strongly opposed to the plan. Essaness have most of their houses in "C" week and with them on the Allied, or indie side, the situation becomes more dramatic.

The matter of dual bills came up several weeks ago and according to B & K officials it was planned to adopt them before the summer months. However, these plans have been altered and it looks as if the dual policy will not be started until fall, if then. United opposition to the double-feature policy by the independents is reported to be the main cause for this change in plans.

Independents Strengthened

As to the operators union contract the addition of Essaness to the Allied and independent group will give that organization much more strength and, although no trouble in making up the new agreement is predicted, the indies are in a better position to get what they want than they have been in years past.

At the present time theatre problems are in a somewhat dormant state but fireworks are expected to start when the new selling season opens and the various issues involved are forced into the open.

Because some theatre managers have had men who were checking their theatres arrested or thrown into jail as "suspicious characters," the Ross Federal Service obtained special permission from Police Commissioner Allman last week to have their checkers accompanied and protected by policemen when checking theatres where they are obstructed in fulfilling their duties.

In order to expedite matters the commissioner issued an order to all stations to assist the Ross Federal men at all times. As a result of this one local theatre manager was given a surprise the other night when he tried to oust a checker from the car in which he was seated and get him away from in front of the theatre. The first attempt at ousting the checker resulted in a scuffle, with the checker having his pipe knocked out of his mouth and being mussed up a bit. When he was unable to get the checker out of the car, the theatre manager, according to the checker, pulled a gun on him. This got action. The checker ran for the police and when he showed the special permit card from the police commissioner and the order issued for his protection, the manager was the one on-the-spot. Told by the police that if he molested the checker again he would be jailed, the theatre manager let the matter rest and is now trying to figure out some way to keep from being on-the-spot himself.

Henri Elman, president of Capitol Films Exchange, is back from New York where he completed negotiations for the distribution in this territory of Chesterfield-Invincible Pictures for the coming season. He also will distribute the Burroughs-Tarzan features, 16 of which are planned for release this season. Several features from this company have already been completed and are now set for showing. Alliance Pictures, which will make eight Hoot Gibson starring films, have also arranged with Ellman for distributing this product in this territory. New foreign product to be distributed through the Capitol exchange includes a number of Italian pictures which are brought here by Count Mazzovinie, president of the Nuovo Mundo Film company. "Re Burlone" is the first of the Italian pictures to be shown here and will have its midwest premiere at the Sonotone theatre on May 30th.

The Better Films council of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs held their annual convention and luncheon at the Sherman Hotel Wednesday of last week. Mrs. Charles R. Holton, retiring vice-president, presided.

Speaking to the large group of women present were Dr. Irvin E. Deer, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Mr. A. P. Hollis of the DeVry company, J. MacDonald Bryan of Tritonia Corporation, W. F. Crouch of QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS and Miss Emma Abplanalp of the Chicago Film Board of Trade.

The speeches concerned different phases of motion picture work relative to the Better Films Council. Prizes were awarded members who had done meritorious work the past year.

The convention started last Monday and lasted three days. On Tuesday night the clubwomen were guests of the United Artists theatre for a preview showing of Grace Moore's newest musical, "The King Steps Out." This picture was shown through the courtesy of B. & K. and Phil Dunas, manager of the Columbia exchange here.

Chadron, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

As we remember it now we mentioned it once before, but in case you failed to read it we will mention it again. About ten days ago we started out to go to Wyoming and Idaho to call on the boys but we had to drive something like five hundred miles to get around several mudholes that entirely blocked the way. We finally got to Powder River, Wyoming, and found the altitude so high we were advised to not go any further. The elevation was forty-seven hundred feet and we were so dizzy that we were afraid people might think we were drunk, when we hadn't had a drop of anything but Wyoming water. To go to western Wyoming and Idaho we had to climb seven thousand feet to get over the divide so we turned around and came back.

Along the highway west of Casper we saw a band of twelve antelope feeding about four hundred yards from the road; in fact one can see plenty of them almost any place out there and we would suggest that if you are going out there don't take your rifle with you with the thought of shooting one, for it will be expensive.

When we were state game warden of this state some years back a fellow shot an antelope in the south western part of the state and he had his choice of paying $250 fine or going to jail for a year. He paid the $250. It took us nearly a year to get him, but we got him. Since then shooting antelope has not been considered a very profitable sport.

This town of Chadron is a pretty good one and the census taker found something like seven thousand folks who are entertained by Mr. Clein of the Pace theatre. The Pace is one of a chain of theatres operated by the Black Hills Amusement Company and is one of the outstanding theatres of the middle west.

We can remember when Chadron was one of the principal gathering places for cowboys and those who would deal from the bottom of the deck, and when the six-shooter was the supreme law, and those who were not quick enough on the trigger were out of luck, and that's why it was they had to enlarge their cemetery, but it is different today. Chadron is as quiet and orderly as Broadway, and maybe more so, and all one has to do is to behave himself and attend to his own business and he is a welcome visitor. Chadron was at one time on the border of the frontier, but there is no "frontier" now, unless it is Manhattan.

Gordon, Nebraska

Gordon is the principal stopping place on highway No. 20 to the Yellowstone National park between Valentine and Chadron. Here we met our old friends Clint and Bessie Robbins, who are operating a theatre for the Black Hills Amusement Company.

This will be interesting news to the theatre boys of Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska, for they used to play the principal towns in these states with the Clint and Bessie Robbins Stock company and are probably better known than any company that has traveled this territory since Lydia E. Pinkham was old enough to have a boy friend. We remember visiting Clint and Bess once at their summer home on the lake at Newaygo, Michigan, and we can still remember Bess' huckleberry pies. By gosh, she can bake a huckleberry pie better than the chef at the Waldorf-Astoria and her tea buscuits were so light they had to be covered with a pan to keep them from floating up and sticking on the ceiling. Clint is all right, too, and the Black Hills Amusement company is to be congratulated for securing the services of these folks to operat their theatre; they couldn't have done better, for they know the show business from Hoboken to Hell-ena and back.

Since Haile Selassie seems to be about two-thirds out of a job he might come over here and enter politics and maybe one or the other of the national conventions would decide to enter him in the race as a dark horse.

Every once in a while we get a letter that makes us feel pretty doggone good. We have just received such a letter from Mrs. C. G. Lawing, who operates a theatre down at Brownsville, Tenn.

Among other nice things she said was this: "It's awfully hard to find the right words to let you know just how much I enjoy and appreciate your colyum, and I can't remember when I ever missed reading it one week. I also do feel that you are a good friend," etc., etc. Then she goes on and invites us to come down to Tennessee and see what a wonderful country and what nice people they have down there. If Mrs. Lawing is a sample of the folks down there—and no doubt she is—Tennessee must be a delightful place to live.

You have no doubt heard the expression that there are more ways than one to skin a cat, and we hope that is true, and we hope also that when the two old Toms get into a political discussion on our garage at midnight that there can be several other ways discovered.

We don't know nearly as much about it as the casting directors do, we will admit that right now without any argument, but this much we do know and that is that if they will cast Eddie Quillan in more pictures and give him more prominent parts it will meet with the approval of a lot of folks we have met in our travels. This also goes for Charlie Ruggles and Edward Everett Horton as well. Then too, Joseph Cawthorn seems to be a favorite with the theatre-going public. He's a whiz in comedy parts.

Then again we went and saw Al Jolson in "The Singing Kid," a very good picture, but it failed to draw as some of his former pictures did, and this inclines us to wonder if the public is losing interest in musical shows. We don't know. Who does?

If we had the money it costs the producers to defend themselves in law suits brought for this, that and the other thing, we'd feel that the depression was pretty well over, as far as we are concerned. It seems that when some people want a little easy money they sue the producers for something. There are several kinds of rackets in this country, legal and otherwise.

A fellow said to us the other day, "Say, Colonel, from the way things are going it looks like some of our courts, especially in the cities, have ceased to be courts of justice and have developed into collecting agencies." We dislike to believe that, but if it is true then the moral would be, "If you want some easy money bring a suit against some one, or some company, who by labor and economy have saved some." We are not a Biblical student but as we recall it the Bible said, "From him who hath shall be taken, and from him who hath not shall be taken even that which he hath." This may not be a verbatim quotation but it illustrates our point, so we will let it go at that.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

Chesterfield

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE: Chick Chandler, Shirley Grey—Pretty good picture but did not draw at the box office. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

FIGHTING MARSHAL, THE: SHOT GUN PASS: ONE WAY TRAIL: FIGHTING FOOL, THE: DARING DANGER: Tim McCoy—All Tim McCoy re-issues and with exception of "The Fighting Marshal," sound has been O. K. If you need westerns, you'll make no mistake on these.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett, Joan Perry—A new face in westerns is always welcome. This has usual amount of action and does not go overboard on singing like so many recent westerns.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family trade.

JUSTICE OF THE RANGE: Tim McCoy—A real, honest-to-goodness business getter. O. K.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LAWLESS RIDERS: Ken Maynard, Geneva Mitchell—Times must be changing. Westerns used to be the mortgage raisers, but no more in our situation. There is still a good outlet for good outdoor pictures, but I think the cheapness and repetition of the old plots of cattle rustlers, hero, villain or bandits that goes with all westerns, as I have stated before, is not accepted any more. The public, I think, is getting educated away from them or that is the experience that we are having. They seem to be in a rut and can't get out of it on this type picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Harry Richman, Rochelle Hudson—Good picture, the title brought them in to better than average business by 40 per cent. I played it March 20; would have done even better if they had released it earlier while the song was more popular.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

First National

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Haviland—Better than "Mutiny," but didn't do nearly as well at the box office. Well worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson. Ruby Keeler—Played it as a revival, but did no extra business. Jolson no box office attraction.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GB Pictures

CHU CHIN CHOW: George Robey, Fritz Kortner, Anna May Wong—Here is a picture that is wonderful. The British can make a great picture when they are given the type of story to work on that they like. No company could have made this picture well except one company, and that is Gaumont British. We did a very good business on this picture and everybody enjoyed it. It was the famous story of "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." A great fairy story brought to life, and it was a real treat to have a picture that was done in a true foreign style and all of the real talking and no poor English used. It was perfect English and well pronounced. Play this picture and you will do business on it as everybody knows of this famous Arabian Nights fairy tale. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 7-8.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

MAN WHO KNEW TOO MUCH, THE: Leslie Banks, Edna Best, Peter Lorre—Drew a little extra business, but not much comment either way.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—Very slow and sad. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 15-16.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—Not a bad story, though rather improbable and rather difficult to follow. But we failed to get good sound. It seems quite variable in quality and from considerable of it we could not get clear tones. Our present opinion is that those films are not up to Hollywood standards. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 7-8.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery--Good. All cast admirably portrayed. Beery as the drunken Uncle Sid exceedingly funny. Eric Linden too communistic. Played this on a Friday-Saturday and business fair. Small towns better double feature this. Running time, 96 minutes. Played May 15-16.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—Very good, but really did not satisfy our patrons. Really think these stories of thirty years ago are hard for our young folks to appreciate. And aren't our audiences now made up principally of people from 10 to 30 years of age? Running time, 98 minutes. Played May 10-11.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Aline MacMahon—The comments on this were nearly all favorable, and personally thought this was an exceptional picture, but the box office take was the poorest in months. Played May 9.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

AH, WILDERNES!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Eric Linden—Here is a picture of unusual merit. One that an exhibitor can take pride in showing. The work of the big cast was perfect, which means that the direction was also perfect. The weather was cool after a hot spell, but the best we could do on this fine picture was a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—Good picture but no draw at the box office. Played April 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—A dandy, clever mystery murder picture that did make film rental, I don't know why.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tillbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—And weren't these characters riffraff? We hate to see Harlow and Tracy in such low characterizations. Both of them are sterling players and can do so much with better roles. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 13-14.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RIFF RAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Rough and rowdy, but it kept them interested. The remarks of Spencer Tracy about her hair could easily have been omitted as it did not add to the merits of the play. We did a fair average on this and as a whole it satisfied.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Didn't draw as well as we expected, but I consider it good entertainment, though not better than a high-class program picture. Played May 15-16.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Charm and beauty is "Rose Marie." Perfect cast, fine direction and scenic beauty, the haunting melody of the "Indian Love Call," and the wild rhythm of the tom tom dance all add up into a top rank picture of the year. The cinema edition shades the stage show a long way due to the fact that the picture was taken out of doors into some of the grandest locations that they could have picked. Miss MacDonald gets better in every picture. She is getting that subtle touch of expression that puts the comedy over.--A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—The music in this is wonderful and was enjoyed by all. Did exceptional business on this. Played May 2:—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Good picture and good business, but not nearly as good as "Naughty Marietta." Running time, 113 minutes. Played April 19-20.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH (Re-issue): Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—One grand show, but as we played a return engagement on this one and the small town that we have it does not pay to play any picture the second time no matter how good it may be. Well it is over and we will know better next time. Play it if you didn't show it yet. It's a swell show. Running time, 10 reels. Played May 8-9.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—This is a wonderful production, but no good at the box office. It seems the average movie patron just don't care for this type of picture. Running time, 126 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia--Good program picture that did better than average. Played April 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—This is a homely little picture with outdoor settings, and good story. It is a little too talky, but in a fox hunting country it would go big, I think, and even though we lack the foxes, the picture pleased, and except that it is a little slow tempoed, it is good entertainment. Dog lovers will like it and Bugle Ann certainly does her stuff as does the cast.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—A swell story and well played. We like Tracy here very much and Loy is always the tops around here. This was an interesting detective story with plenty of thrills. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 8-9.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—As long as you can draw a crowd and please them with an ancient and decrepit story like this, there'll always be picture theatres. Running time, 89 minutes. Played April 29-30.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—Good program picture. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Only a good program picture. There's altogether too much fighting back and forth. That was one of the reasons it did not go over so good. Business only fair on this. Running time, 83 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CASE AGAINST MRS. AMES, THE: Madeleine Carroll, George Brent—Why do they make such tiresome pictures? Bunk detective story. Seen them for the past 20 years. Fifty thousand dollars invested here in my theatre and am forced to play such bunk pictures as this one. Running time, 10 reels.—George W. Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon —This one is a men killer for small town. Good show, but all the patrons go some place else. I am glad it's all over. Running time, 13 reels. Played May 3-4.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DESIRE: Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper — Very, very good, but no drawing power with us. Dietrich has almost passed out of the picture here on account of the many poor stories she has been given. Give her a series of good ones like this and she'll come back. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 17-18.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DESIRE: Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper—A new Dietrich and a new Cooper in one of the finest comedy dramas to play this theatre. Those who came enjoyed it. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 17-19.—G. McChesney, Strand Theatre, Freehold, N. J. Small town patronage.

F MAN: Jack Haley, Adrienne Marden—Such tripe! Where did Paramount get the idea that they could make a feature out of such a story? And Haley cannot get over in feature length stories such as this. Never had so many adverse criticisms in months. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 15-16.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen—For small situation like mine this picture would be better set on week-end. It is a fair picture and will get by, but never make picture history for the ones who produced it or for the box office. During the run of this picture, the usual stories of Mae West were current, but even this failed to bring 'em in.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd—The poorest Lloyd picture to date and our patrons stated so. A few smart wise cracks but that's about all. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May 15-16.—G. McChesney, Strand Theatre, Freehold, N. J. Small town patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda—Very wonderful. Haven't had a picture in months which gave any more general satisfaction than this one did. The comedy antics of these two stars were grand. Played May 6-7.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Pretty good Zane Grey western. Nothing outstanding. It seems these Zane Greys have lost most of their drawing power on account of the stories not being good enough. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Republic

LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED, THE: Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell—Good with the average, but no special. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 5-6.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

RED RIVER VALLEY; Gcne Autry, Frances Grant —Up to the usual average of this star which have been coming through very good. This combined with "Stars Over Broadway" more than satisfied and gave us an above average Sunday and Monday.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—A very good picture, favorable comments by patrons. Average business as it did not have much drawing power, but pleased them after they got in.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

FARMER IN THE DELL, THE: Fred Stone, Jean Parker—Only fair. Most of our patrons did not care for this. Some told me they thought it was terrible. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FARMER IN THE DELL, THE: Fred Stone, Jean Parker—Very good picture; not much drawing power. Fred Stone could possibly become a second Bill Rogers if they give him a better supporting cast and a chance to get off a little dry humor such as Will was famous for. This picture drew good comments.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Pretty good program picture that only done fair at the box office. Ginger alone don't mean much at the box office. It takes Fred Astaire to make it draw. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Good program picture which did better than average business by 20 per cent. Many said it was not as good as they expected after seeing "Top Hat"; not much dancing in it.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie, Helen Broderick—This is a very good comedy and was enjoyed by all. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—A very good comedy that got plenty of laughs and good comments. Business only average. Raymond and Barrie good, Broderick very good, but none of these are box office.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable —Didn't make film rental on this college musical, but should be idea for a college town.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—Fair western. Nothing to it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played May 1-2.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Average Wheeler and Woolsey picture which pleased and did better than average business.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—Good program picture that done well at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—It got by but that is all; too slow moving; no drawing power and business below average.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town business.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—May the Lord have mercy on our souls, RKO, for such a picture. Thank goodness we double billed it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—This comedy team still good box office, and this picture is fair entertainment. The same could have been even lots better than it is if the story had been brought out with more incidents; it lacks enough comedy situations. We almost broke house record of past six months.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—A very "nutty" picture which got plenty of laughs, but did not do average business at box office. —Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town business.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—A great show from every angle even if the story was laid in foreign countries. Plenty of laughs, which so many musicals lack. Horton and Broderick did a lot to put it over. Did not do as much business as it should have.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix, Leila Hyams—A very good western. Dix turns in a good performance, also Andy Clyde. Leila Hyams goes to town in this and if they must sing in talkies let Leila do it; her singing is more natural and human. Business fair three days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—Cut along the same lines in a different setting, Chan always solves the mystery with his proverbs. The setting helped the picture and it did slightly more than the last one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson—Fox have made a good picture in this, thanks to the work of Jean Hersholt and Dorothy Peterson. Of course, the ballyhoo that has been rife with this multiple blessed event helped draw. It dragged a little towards the end; there was a little too much footage on the Quints. We noted some restlessness in the audience during that sequence, but as they were the reason for the picture, I suppose the footage was necessary. Slim Summerville carried the comedy.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—Gilded youth; much ado about nothing; the only saving grace to the whole picture was the work of "Granny," Florence Roberts. Trite stuff, with gilded youth coming the usual cropper auto accident and all the usual heroics.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin, Anita Louise—Film and time wasted from producer to theatre janitor. Very poor as far as the box office. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 10-11. —J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson—This one is old, but it did good business.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, Jack Oakie—This is a great show. Good for Sunday and the entire cast does well to support Baxter and Oakie. Let the people know you got a swell entertainment. Played May 10-11.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Jack Holt—One of the best Shirley has made so far. This did not do quite as well at the box office as her previous ones. Little Shirley does not draw quite as good as she used to. Running time, 73 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO, THE: Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett—Good show for any house. Colman is a perfect actor. Business very poor. Getting very warm and they most like to stay out for a spring tonic. Running time, seven reels. Played May 5-6.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MY MARRIAGE: Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor, Paul Kelly—Not worth running; a poor title for one thing that beat the picture before it started. No business at all to speak of and one that should have been left in the can. My patrons cannot see this Paul Kelly at all; they ask what has he that he is continually used. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Ralph Bellamy, Claire Trevor—Very nice program picture. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Paul Kelly, Claire Trevor—This picture has its moments, but they are few and far between. Slow and draggy. Cohan may have wowed 'em on Broadway, but something happened when Fox got hold of it. Fox's musical hits don't very often hit and this is one of them. My public must be getting hep to Fox's Musicals, for the two days it was the lowest gross since the depression. The story is trite and some parts of it are stupid. The phone girl's patter is the only bright spot in the picture. She was good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—All the Will Rogers fans turned out for this one. Both the crowd and the manager were satisfied.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Very good. Made a little money. Running time, 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—No more of these for me. Foreign mysteries. Nothing to it. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 8-10.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—One of the few pictures that didn't register a single complaint. The portrayals by Bartholomew, Dolcres Costello Barrymore, C. Aubrey Smith and Guy Kibbee were outstanding. A production that will please the entire family. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 10-12.—G. McChesney, Strand Theatre, Freehold, N. J. Small town patronage.

SANDERS OF THE RIVER: Paul Robeson, Leslie Banks—Played this as a revival, but fails to get a click out of our box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THESE THREE: Merle Oberon, Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Personally, in every way, I think this the finest picture that I've seen or expect to see in many a day. However, it will not appeal to those who prefer the Pollyanna type of picture. Running time, 93 minutes. Played May 10-11.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart—I don't know where the local Universal office dug up the print, but it was in good condition. Several of the players, Phil Baker especially, are better known now than when picture was released, thanks to radio, and it had a little extra draw for us.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Warner Bros.

COLLEEN: Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie, Dick Powell—Not up to the usual Warner musical standing. Some good tunes which would have sold the picture via the radio if the restrictions were lifted. As a comedy team, Herbert and Blondell fail to make them laugh any more. General comment, 50-50. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 3-5.—G. McChesney, Strand Theatre, Freehold, N. J. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—A very interesting drama. Bette Davis' work in this is outstanding. Franchot Tone is a close second. John Eldredge, even with the small footage he had in this, is worthy of special mention. We gave this unusual publicity, but the business on this was below average. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Very good, but a little too much talk and a trifle over the heads of the average audience. Just fair business on this one. Played April 25.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Jane Froman—A good musical. While the plot has a familiar ring there is enough originality in it to entertain. This was doubled with Gene Autry in "Red River Valley," combined with good show weather gave us a good Sunday business. James Melton was very pleasing in this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Miscellaneous

OUTLAW RULE: Reb Russell—Played to biggest Friday and Saturday in months. Reb Russell played our town with a circus the previous Monday and sold himself so well that all we had to do was hang out the paper. This was a repeat booking for us and advertised as such. Try it if he plays in or near your town.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

SINBAD THE SAILOR: Comicolor Cartoons—A very good colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

"PATCH MAH BRITCHES": Barney Google—Very good colored cartoon.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPEED MAD: New World of Sport Series—In cleaning out the old files, Columbia has managed to take a group of old auto racing thrill shots and cleverly combined them into a swell short. The crack-ups had the women screaming, but they like it. Running time, 10 minutes.—G. McChesney, Strand Theatre, Freehold, N. J. Small town patronage.

THREE LITTLE BEERS: 3 Stooges— HOI POLLOI: 3 Stooges—Low slapstick comedy, but they get the laughs.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

"TECHED IN TH' HAID": "PATCH MAH BRITCHES": Barney Google—Columbia could make this an outstanding series of cartoons if they followed the newspaper comic strip pattern. The color, music and characters are all O. K.; all it needs is a few good laughs.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Educational

BRAIN BUSTERS, THE: Vince Barnett—Lots of laughs and trouble on a traveling tour. Vince almost got stuck without gas, coasting into a gas station. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS DAYS: Paul Terry-Toons—Very good. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

E-FLAT MAN: Buster Keaton—Not as good as many of his previous ones Running time, 19 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FLICKER FEVER: Frolics of Youth—A good two-reel comedy with good imitations and songs.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GIV'IM AIR: Joe Cook—They will need air on this one. The audience went down for the third time and no life belts. Don't worry, if they didn't wait for the feature they would have taken the air. Not a laugh in the two reels.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GOLD BRICKS: Bert Lahr—They must have a funny sense of humor on the West Coast. We had him in a couple of pictures and then we saw him no more and his appearance in this comedy was too soon. I give up. The comedy producers don't know what it is all about when it comes to getting laughs into what are called comedies.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HILLBILLY LOVE: Song and Comedy Hits—An excellent Saturday night single reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

IT NEVER RAINS: Frolics of Youth Series—Here's one slow and sad. Running time, 20 minutes.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

MANHATTAN TAPESTRY: Treasure Chest—Scenic. O. K. in color. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

MIXED POLICIES: Clara Barry—Very good comedy. Clara Barry sure put it over. Running time, two reels. Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town business.

WESTERN TRAIL, THE: Paul Terry-Toons—A fine black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WOLF IN CHEAP CLOTHING, A: Paul Terry-Toons—A good black and white cartoon. The story of the wolf and the five little sheep.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—Can't say anything about this. Running time, 10 minutes.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—Very exciting color cartoon. Something different every moment and the music is just swell. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patrange.

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—Mainly an ad for Absorbine and Listerine. We apologized for showing it. Running time, 10 minutes.—George F Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

FOUR STAR BOARDER: Charley Chase—Very good comedy—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

HISTORIC MEXICO CITY: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Color excellent. Dialogue also good. These shorts will "dress up" any show. They "balance" any feature. Running time, 10 minutes.—Ken Higgins. Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

HONEYLAND: Harman-Ising—One of the best color pictures we have had from Metro.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HONEYLAND: Harman-Ising—Very fine color cartoon. The coloring in this is No. 1. Running time. eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT MONEY: Todd-Kelly—A good Todd and Kelly two-reeler. Good laughs from start to finish. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IMPORTANT NEWS: M-G-M Miniatures—A very clever single reel about a country newspaper.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

INFERNAL TRIANGLE: Charley Chase—If you can laugh at this, save the print and I'll eat it.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

LITTLE SINGER: Our Gang—Has more laughs in the last half reel than most comedies have in a full two.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

OLD PLANTATION, THE—Harman-Ising—These Happy Harmonies cartoons cannot be beat. Their clever technique and tuneful rhythm are a good blend. Color very good.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PINCH SINGER: Our Gang—One of the funniest of the Our Gang Comedies. Running time, 20 minutes.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

RAINBOW CANYON: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Good. The scenes in this were great. Running time. nine minutes.—P. G. Held. New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel and Hardy—Not a bit of sense to it. Maybe that is why the audience laughed so much.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

TWO HEARTS IN WAX TIME: Musical Revue—A color musical review not quite up to the usual standard, but there is one girl that got no notice that had a very good voice; one of the best that we have heard for some time.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Inc. General patronage.

Paramount

ADVENTURES OF POPEYE, THE: Good cartoon and all is well. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimbali, S. D. Small town patronage.

CLEAN SHAVEN MAN, A: Popeye the Sailor—Another okay cartoon. Good for laughs.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IT'S EASY TO REMEMBER: Screen Songs—Just fair.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JUDGE FOR A DAY: Betty Boop Cartoons—A funny cartoon with a good moral lesson.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE STRANGER: Color Classics—This Disney fellow better watch his step. These Color Classics make as big a hit here as the Symphonies. "Little Stranger" is an excellent cartoon and the best of this series so far. Running time, 8 minutes.—G. McChesney, Strand Theatre, Freehold, N. J. Small town patronage.

NO OTHER ONE: Screen Songs—Good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SIRENS OF SYNCOPATION: Headliners—No. 1 band act. The setting in this is excellent. Running time, nine reels.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SOCIETY NOTES: Headliners—Poor. No good. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

RKO Radio

EDGAR HAMLET: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—A funny Kennedy comedy. Wonder why so many exhibitors pan this series. Our folks like Kennedy a lot and always respond to his clever comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GASOLOONS: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Not as good as past ones. Kennedy is slipping. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

GENTLEMEN'S SPORTS: Sports with Bill Corum—Not so good. Only a filler. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR, NO. 2.: O. K. Will please.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MISMANAGED: Paula Stone—Paula Stone is going to be a future Eleanor Powell. This little two-reeler good and I can't say that about some of RKO's productions. Running time, 18 minutes.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MISMANAGED: Radio Musical Comedies—Pretty good musical. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW: Cartoon in color— O. K. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

PARROTVILLE POST OFFICE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Only fair. R.K.O.'s short subjects are not so good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PATHE TOPIC, No. 2: A very good reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PICKLED PEPPERS: Blonde and Red Head Series—No good. Silly and time waster. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

RADIO BARRED: Radio Flash Comedies—TOO MANY SURPRISES: Smart Set— WEDTIME STORY, A: Headliner Series—RETURNED ENGAGEMENT, A: Smart Set—None of these are very good comedies; they will get by and that is about all. RKO does not seem to have any good two-reel comedies.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

MOROCCO MIRAGE: Magic Carpet Series—Fair. Poor photography. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

United Artists

ELMER THE ELEPHANT: Silly Symphonies—A great Silly Symphony. A riot for the kids from three years on and the grown ups ate it up. Give it preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MICKEY'S GRAND OPERA: Mickey Mouse—One of the best of the Mickey Mouse cartoons. Running time, 8 minutes.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

BARNYARD FIVE: Oswald Cartoons—One of the best of the black and white cartoons. The old duck has a blessed event and it is a riot. Audience is an uproar. Give this preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre. Anamosa. Iowa. General patronage.

GUS VAN'S MUSIC SHOPPE: Mentone Musical Comedies—Fair after it gets going. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theate, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

UNIVERSAL NEWS: Still tops with me. Too bad John Q. Doph is going into features.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Vitaphone

SLIDE, NELLIE, SLIDE: Big V. Comedies—Something different and they liked it. Running time, 19 minutes.—George F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

WASH YOUR STEP: Broadway Brevities—An excellent musical with Hal LeRoy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

FLOWERS AT WORK: (University of Chicago)—A reel one should not miss showing how pollen is transported from one flower to another by bees and insects. Showing how the flower attracts the bees and one of the greatest features about this short is that it actually shows the flowers growing as a time camera is used in this work. Truly a masterpiece in the science of the motion picture. An education in itself. The camera can work for science just as well as the many other things which contribute their part. Movies will take their place as educational functions as well as entertainment.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

LES ENVELOPPES FLORALES: A picture done all in colors showing the workings of the flowers and showing the beautiful types in bloom. The talking was in French, but it was enjoyed by all, both French and English patrons. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

SEED DISPERSAL: (University of Chicago)—Very, very wonderful showing how seeds are transported from one flower to the ground and other places to take root. A picture that every school child should see. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

Serial

Regal

LOST CITY, THE: William Boyd, Claudia Dell—No doubt the dizziest plot ever filmed, but our patrons eat it up and keep coming back for more. If your crowd likes action pictures, you can't miss.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

FROM READERS

BLAMES PUBLICATION OF THEATRE RECEIPTS

To the Editor of the Herald:

It is my understanding that the columns of your magazine are open to independent theatres owners in which to express views pertaining to the general welfare and best interests of their business. For your consideration, therefore, I beg to submit the following very annoying and troublesome condition and situation with which I am confronted in the operation of my theatre. The following is a letter I received from the local representative of the Department of Commerce:

"The several enumerators that have called on you seem to have been unable to get a schedule from you. Knowing you as I do I feel that you have some reason and we have had several letters from Washington recently regarding the obtaining of these amusement schedules and we have obtained same for every theatre in the tenth district with the exception of yours, and as I wish to do a thorough job in Muncie and will also make fifty cents more, I will appreciate your filling out this schedule and as I feel that you may have some personal local reasons for your refusal I am enclosing addressed envelope direct to Washington which requires no postage, for your convenience. If you will send this in direct it will be very much appreciated by me."

Going back to my introduction into the theatre business, one of the first instructions I received, the first and most important and serious obligation that I assumed and the strictest lesson to be learned was, that under no consideration or circumstance whatever was I to divulge or make any insinuation as to the amount of business done, good or bad, on any day, and especially on holidays. The reason for this as any real showman will understand has its double purpose. If business was bad you didn't want to shout it from the house tops, and if good you didn't want to invite competition. It might be old fashioned logic, but I believe it still holds good if put into practice.

It has been my experience any number of times after some holiday when I had had a good day, for friends and neighboring business men to say: "Well Bennett, you certainly had a big day yesterday. How much did you take in?" What do you suppose would have been their answer had I asked them this same question?

Without exaggeration, numerous agencies representing everything, city, county, state, federal and all the insurance companies, and a dozen or more different departments, Democratic and Republican, not only take up my time making the most personal inquiries, but actually demand to know exactly how much money I take in, and itemized list of expenditures. Any number of these men who call on me are not entitled to receive the information they ask and demand, as they are not reliable or representative citizens, and in most instances I refuse to fill out their so-called confidential statements and reports. These men are with these bureaus for only a short time. To my certain knowledge four who have been in my office in recent weeks have now severed their connections with government projects and gone into different lines of work here in the city. The obligation of secrecy upon which so much stress is laid, would lay very lightly on the shoulders of any of these men, I am sure, thus allowing my affairs to become common knowledge and food for local conversation. Two of the numerous men asking this information of me are relatives and friends of my chain opposition.

In my opinion this condition may to some extent have been brought about by the weekly publication of theatre grosses in general throughout the country, the reaction from which certainly cannot but be harmful to the theatre owners and exhibitors. We will not go into this as you are thoroughly familiar with what it is all about.

Believing it to be within my just rights as an American citizen to take this stand, we will greatly appreciate your publication of this letter and your remarks on same, and may we hear from other exhibitors on the subject?—A. E. Bennett, Manager, Liberty Theatre, Muncie, Ind.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

WALTER HUSTON OBSERVES

Among other things to be noted on the recent Quigley Awards trip to the coast was the interest displayed by prominent stars in theatre exploitation. Quite a few of the topliners appeared eager to know how the boys were doing it in the field and queried the visiting theatremen at length on this score.

The importance of these boxoffice endeavors is spotlighted further in an article from last Sunday's New York Times which has to do with the experience of stage and screen star Walter Huston, recently returned from a long road tour in "Dodsworth."

Interviewed by Douglas Churchill, the star, among other things, stressed the value of the motion picture style of exploitation in reviving interest in road tours of legitimate plays and the following quoted from what Mr. Huston discovered in this direction is a strong indication of how the wind doth blow:

"But probably the most salient single force in reviving the stage is in motion-picture exploitation, Huston believes. Many of the theatres in which he appeared were picture houses used by the road company for a single night. The managers filled the lobby with pictures from some of his films; they resurrected old mats for publication in the local newspapers and they ballyhooed him in true Hollywood fashion. His advance man always made arrangements with the local radio station for ten days' advertising, for which Huston paid with a broadcast from one scene from the play early in the evening of the performance. Ticket sales jumped $500 to $600 after every broadcast."

How Mr. Huston has profited by these exploitations is to be recommended for further observation by Hollywood generally. The star's experiences might also be studied without loss by exhibitors who underestimate the dollars and cents potentialities of consistent advertising and exploitation in selling their own product at the boxoffice.

ALMOST FOR THE ASKING

One pertinent thought this pen directs at those who see no good reason for making vacations possible for their managers—that theatremen given a few weeks to get away from the grind come back with a whole lot more on the ball than the fellow who has to stand by 52 weeks in the year. The manager turned loose for a spell to visit his folks, go fishin' or what have you, returns a new man brimming with that old pepperino, clear-eyed and invigorated, all set to round up a lot of extra grosses he might otherwise have missed.

Don't let us kid ourselves, friends, on how much the theatre depends upon the manager who delivers. The high-powered, high-stepping lad will in every case outscore the man who cannot for one reason or another stay up on his toes. That, in the last analysis, is often the difference between red and black on a date, between a small net and a fat profit.

But the smartest of showmen cannot keep at it week in and week out and still deliver unless he has a fair chance to grab himself a well-deserved breather.

The wise exhibitor really takes advantage of the vacation period to rest his willing worker and in so doing insures the ready flow of ideas that brings the folks to the ticket window. The exhibitor who demands 52 manager-weeks for a year's work is through his shortsightedness tossing aside the extra grosses he might as well have almost for the asking.

PRESS BOOKS GET BETTER

Quite pleasing it is to note that for quite some time there has been little of the usual complaints against the press book. Used to be that the boys unloaded many direct hits at this home office target but of late the barrage is noticeable by its lack of intensity.

Which is all to the good and for which there is reason. More and more the makers of the press books are getting that boxoffice slant—are beginning to view the problems of advertising in the field eye to eye with the men who must depend so much upon this material from the home offices.

The new reaction is conveyed not only by the members themselves but is borne out by many of the campaigns submitted to this department wherein the press book is duly credited for numerous stunts put over by theatremen more than hard-boiled on the ideas they select for boxoffice exploitations.

The job of putting out one or more books a week and doing a satisfactory job that will please everyone is a lot of miles from being the world's easiest task. That the home office laddies are now taking bows instead of beatings for their endeavors is good enough news to be included in the next letter to the folks back home.

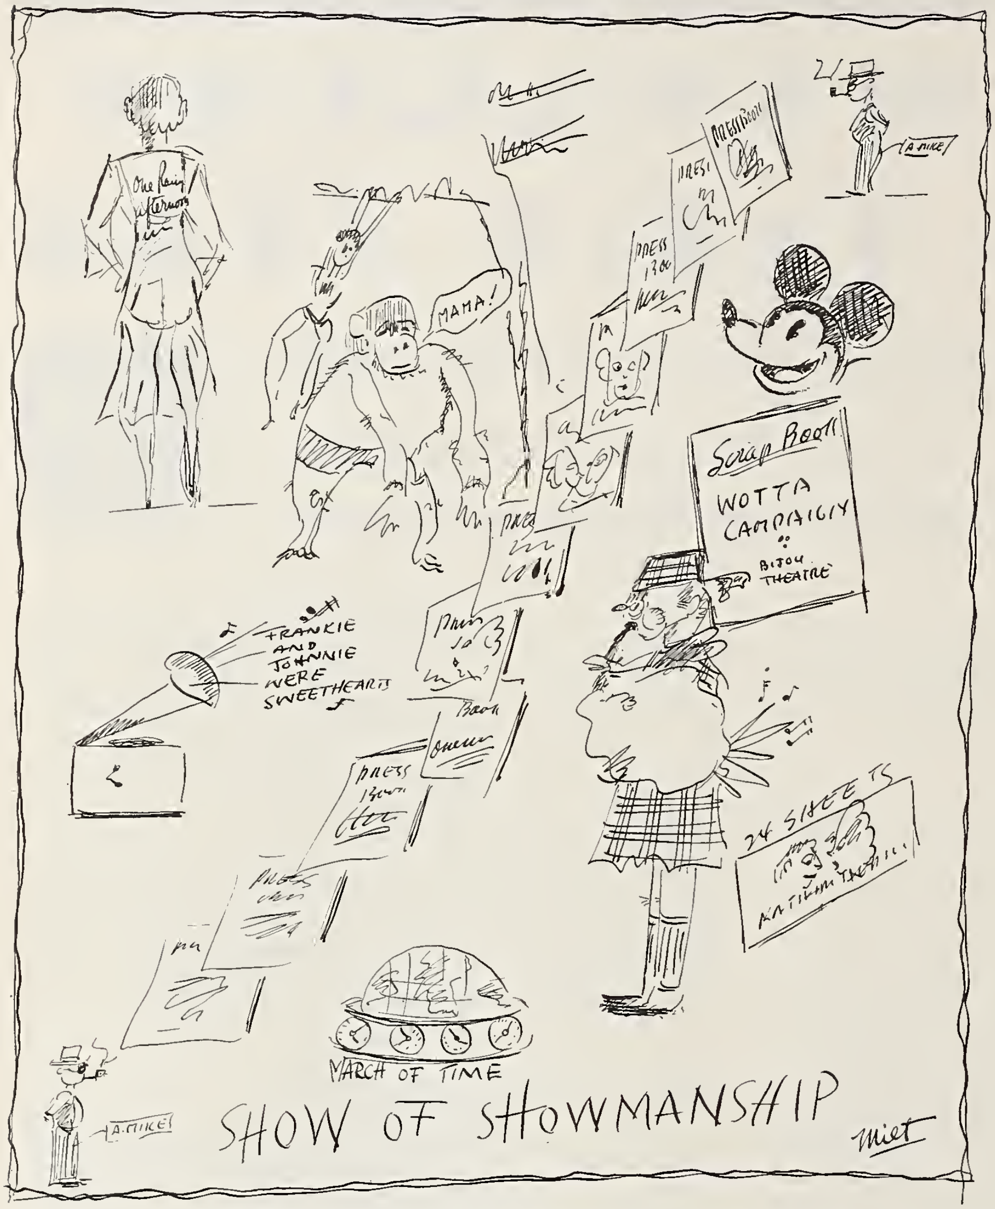
SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!



WITH MILT ROSENFELD AT THE SHOW

Albertson Uses Teaser Window for "Times"

One of the highlights of Jack Albertson's "Modern Times" campaign at the Indiana Theatre, Indiana Harbor, Ind., was a five-day teaser window display in leading hat store. First day window contained nothing but three steps covered with black velvet; second day a pair of Chaplin shoes was added, next day a cane, following day the Derby and last, one day ahead of opening picture and playdate copy was added.

Tieup was made with main bus transportation company whereby posters were placed on all their coaches, buses covering nearby towns. For his lobby display, Chaplin impersonator was on duty week ahead in lobby, at no time did the stooge talk. Mechanical display was put in barber shop with mechanical wheel revolving, for street bally Albertson planted man in front of theatre four days ahead, man eating all his meals there with copy that he was waiting for the picture to open. And for his kids, ad was run in paper offering free admission to all coming dressed as Chaplin, cash prizes given.

Impersonation Contests Sells "Fleet" for Binstock

With outstanding radio shop cooperating, Paul Binstock, Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, for "Follow the Fleet" put on an impersonation contest offering musical instruments as prizes to winners. Merchant's ad contained copy on the contest and lobby was devoted to display of the prizes.

Through cooperation of two public schools in his neighborhood, Binstock arranged for an essay contest with English teachers acting as judges. Store contributed prizes and distributed heralds. Photos of Astaire were given patrons on opening day, entire cost paid for by merchant's ad on reverse side, dance heralds were placed in all dance halls and dancing schools, and outstanding window display was planted in large shoe shop which had six windows fronting on street.

For his street bally, Paul promoted two boys from Junior Naval Reserve with chest banners to march through main streets, reserves and school bands paraded throughout community opening day and entire staff wore imprinted gob hats during engagement.

Cycle Train Tied To "Frankie" Date

The popularity of the snow trains last winter has been taken up with the advent of spring weather by the New Haven railroad which already has in operation a series of "Cycle trains" leaving New York each Sunday for a day way up in the woods where the folks can pedal around in safety. Train carried bikes in specially mounted baggage car and for those without the wheels, rentals are provided.

First picture tieup made on the new idea is Republic's, credited to Harold Berg, with a "Frankie and Johnnie" day supposedly sponsored by stars Chester Morris and Helen Morgan wherein prizes for the most original gay-nineties costumes were given to members of the bicycling party. Railroad struck off a lot of broadsides with these illustrated by a cycle scene from the picture and carrying the date at the Globe Theatre for the metropolitan engagement of the attraction.

Prizes were promoted from Macy's which also publicized the stunt over their station WOR and at the store. Street bally on Broadway had an old-time bannered horse-drawn bus with driver and passengers in costume of the time of the picture.

Local Girl Picture Welcomed by Weiss

Al Weiss, Loew's Oriental, Brooklyn, N. Y., got a raft of free publicity for "Robin Hood of El Dorado," cashing in on the fact that Ann Loring, featured in the picture, was a local girl who had clicked through M-G-M's screen test contests. Night parade was staged with six ballyhoo men dressed as Mexicans carrying signs and lighted torches. Afternoon parade consisted of Junior Naval Militia, fife and drum corps, bannered trucks and all the trimmings.

Entire lobby, interior and exterior was decorated with welcome valances, burgees, displays, etc. Fan photos of the star were distributed in five and ten with each purchase, and merchants entered into the "welcome" spirit, using streamers in their windows. Parents of Miss Loring were guested at the theatre, photo and stories running in papers, principal of school from which star graduated cooperated by permitting display and distribution of heralds. All advertising copy carried the "local girl makes good" line and a lucky number imprinted bag contest was planted with cooperating merchant.

Carl Fishman, publicist, worked with Weiss in putting over the campaign.

MIDNIGHT JUNE 6 IS MAY DEADLINE

Midnight of Saturday, June 6, is the deadline date for entries in the Quigley May Awards. So, please, have those campaigns at headquarters by that time.

The May judges are as follows: Jack Cohn, Columbia Pictures; John Hicks, Paramount International, and P. D. Cochrane, Universal Pictures.

Many, Many Thanks—

The second annual "Show of Showmanship" has come and gone, but the manner in which this event was received will long be remembered. The total of visitors was far above the attendance of last year what with the exhibitors, managers, publicists, home office heads, advertising executives and others affiliated with the industry who attended in great numbers—many more than once. They studied the Quigley Awards entries, the representative campaigns on display, the exhibits of the producing companies and from all quarters, it is pleasing to note, came the opinion that the 1936 Show was "bigger and better".

The splendid cooperation from every source remains highly gratifying and the thanks of this department are indeed in order to all those who so enthusiastically participated. To Columbia, Educational, March of Time, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Loew's Theatres, Paramount, Republic, Radio, RKO Theatres, Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal, United Artists, Gaumont British, Warner Pictures and Warner Theatres, therefore—an extra bow.

And another to headmen Charles Casanave and Harry Samwick, of National Screen Accessories, to Duke Wellington and Paul Reynolds for the general planning and execution of the entire arrangement, and another thank-you to Messrs. Jackson and Lorraine, of the Jackson Mat Co., and also Morris Liberman for standing by so ably.

Creasey's Co-op Ad

To sell "Modern Times" at the Capitol in Kamloops, B. C., Harry Creasey promoted a co-op ad, each merchant's ad contained in side outline of a Chaplin derby. Clear down center of page, Harry carried theatre ad with cut of Chaplin head, cane and shoes.

Drug Association Ties In on "Pasteur"

Sid Blumenstock, advertising manager Warner's Theatres, Atlantic City, under supervision of Herb Copelan, tied up local drug store association for special window and counter displays on "Pasteur." Sid also promoted medical and other scientific material for lobby display week ahead, which created much interest.

An essay contest was arranged at local high school, cash and theatre tickets going to winners. On opening night members of science and French departments of schools were guests of the theatre, stunt breaking newspapers. Spot announcements were used daily over radio station and all hotels were covered with cards and heralds plugging the picture.

TIEUPS READY FOR FLAG DAY

June 14 marks another annual celebration of Flag Day. Tieups may be made with schools, patriotic shorts booked, lobbies dressed for the occasion. The U. S. Flag Association of Washington, D. C., has booklets available devoted to all matters pertaining to flag display and flag etiquette for this occasion.

Refrigerator Dealer Ties In On "If You Could Only Cook"

E. Luedtke, Orpheum Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., for "If You Could Only Cook" arranged a tieup with local refrigerator dealer whereby free passes were given to ladies submitting best recipes. Accompanying photo shows attractive window display with card announcing that details of the contest were available inside the store. Various scene stills were planted around the window and it is reported the merchant received an excellent mailing list and some good prospects.

Harry G. Boisel, assistant manager aided on the promotion.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Safety Campaign Helps "Modern Times"

Louis Fishkin, assisted by Harry Kriegsman, Commodore Theatre, Brooklyn, for "Modern Times" secured cooperation of police department on a safety campaign, department loaned unusual displays for lobby. Large boards with 24-sheet cutouts of Goddard and Chaplin were stationed about town, copy reading: "In these modern times, it is better to drive slowly," etc., etc.

Louie also tied up the New York Museum for a modern times exhibit consisting of streamlined train, early model locomotive, old fashioned and new telephones, etc., etc. Another lobby display consisted of a collection of Chaplin stills from his oldest up to present picture. Newspaper rave notices were planted on lobby easel.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Judge Valin Aids Whitaker on "Doctor"

E. E. Whitaker, city manager Fox Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. secured plenty of newspaper space for his "Country Doctor" campaign by running box in newspaper asking readers opinions on whether the Quins should continue to be brought up away from their parents; whether they should be educated and trained "en bloc" or separately, etc., etc. Suggestions were mailed to Quins Editor of the Atlanta Georgian and later forwarded to Judge Valin of Ontario. Tickets were awarded those submitting best suggestions.

Special lobby was constructed simulating the Quins' room with crib, toys and five cutouts of the Dionnes planted in and around display.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Vacant Store Windows Sell "Country Doctor"

An excellent flash was secured by Jack Markle, Coolidge Corner Theatre, Brookline, Mass., for "Country Doctor" (see photo) for which he utilized window panes of empty loft above theatre, each pane containing a letter from title of picture, extended clear across front of building.

Tying up with bowling alleys, Jack planted signs selling picture and offered tickets to bowlers with the best high single and best three string total scores for week.

For "Modern Times," Chaplin masks were distributed to kids, staff wore mustaches and derbies during run and trailer showing New York opening was used.

Jack grabbed a little extra publicity for both himself and the theatre by organizing the Coolidge Theatre bowling team for men and later started a women's five. With the beginning of the baseball season, Markle is sponsoring a team and has signed some of the best players in his locality. All of which crashed the papers with editorials.

Impersonation Contest Held by Adams

An impersonation contest for children, staged in the lobby of the Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass. was the highlight of Bill Adams' "Modern Times" campaign. Cash prizes were awarded and despite a heavy downpour, Bill reports the kids turned out en masse. Papers were generous with stories and photos on the stunt. Accompanying photo shows some of the contestants.

Adams further secured a co-op page, each ad containing a piece of a jigsaw puzzle of scene still, to those correctly assembling it, tickets were awarded. Names of winners were later run in paper with story. Chaplin masks and canes were distributed to kids, standees were planted in various windows throughout city and 6 sheet pasted to lobby floor week ahead.

Botwick Plants Display

Latin Influence Counted In Tampa Theatre Setup

Many Spanish Pictures Shown in Ybor City and West Tampa Houses

by SCOTT LESLIE
Tampa Correspondent

Interpreters who translated the English titles in the silent picture days for the information of the Spanish-speaking patrons at theatres in the Latin communities of Tampa inaugurated talking pictures of a sort before the screen became audible, says Scott Leslie, who, in this article that continues the Showmen's Travelogue series, discusses the influence of the "Latin Cities" upon the general theatre situation in the Florida cigar-manufacturing center.

Next stop in the Travelogue, now current in Managers' Round Table, will be Salt Lake City.

When Fernando De Soto sailed into Tampa Bay about 400 years ago, in 1539 to be exact, he was probably welcomed at the dock, if any, by the then population of Tampa, consisting principally of pelicans, alligators and Indians, with the latter getting an eye-full from the scrub palmettos.

Of course the boats of De Soto did not draw much water and so he had no difficulty in negotiating the channel, but, should he steam into Tampa harbor today he could make port in an ocean liner, for Tampa is now the greatest seaport on the West Coast, with a deep water channel to the blue waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

Tampa is mighty proud of the fact that De Soto found it, and plans are now being made for an exposition in 1939 to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the landing of De Soto.

Really Tampa is not an old city. The fact is that the "city" of Tampa was not organized until 1887, but she has done wonders in those 49 years, for the population of Tampa today exceeds a hundred thousand, inside the city limits, and better than fifty thousand in the suburbs, all of which is known as the "drawing area" in show business.

Probably Tampa is best known for its cigars. That is the greatest single industry and one that has carried the name to all sections of the country. More clear Havana cigars are made here than in any other city in the world, and through the fact that most all such cigars are made by the Spanish hand made system, it has brought to Tampa a great Latin population, for it is the Spanish, Italian and Cuban people who make up the bulk of those connected with the cigar industry.

Tampa Includes Latin Cities

Within the limits of Tampa are two Latin cities. One is called Ybor City, and was named for the founder of the cigar industry here. The other is just plain West Tampa. In these two sections many of the old Spanish customs prevail. There are many coffee shops, Spanish restaurants and clubs. One hears Spanish and Italian spoken everywhere, though all of the younger generation speaks English. The theatres in these sections play many Spanish pictures. Some of these films are brought here from Cuba and Spain. Some are prints of films made in this country for Latin-American trade.

Not more than a decade ago, when the silent films held the silver screen and titles were used to tell the story, the theatres in these Latin sections employed interpreters to translate the English titles. So, you see, the Latin sections of Tampa had "talkers" before the screen started talking.

About the first thing the tourists ask about, when they arrive in Tampa, is how to go about getting a "Spanish dinner," so let's start our tour of Tampa by visiting these Latin towns.

When Ybor founded the cigar industry and started the city to be known as Ybor City, he built a little narrow gauge dinky line to transport the people the three miles from Tampa proper, and a small steam engine furnished the motive power. West Tampa was founded later across the Hillsborough river west of Tampa. Both cities grew and today they are a part of Tampa, the city having grown up all around them. It is here the tourist comes for his Spanish dinner and his Cuban coffee. This "Cuban" style coffee, by the way, is of course just the regular coffee bean, but it is roasted so black that a chocolate drop is pale beside it. When brewed it is so strong that one could not drink it straight. So, when you order a "cuppa coffee" the waiter brings to your table two steaming pots. In one is the coffee, in the other milk. The waiter pours a little of the coffee in your cup, and if you know your coffee you will stop him when the cup is about one-quarter full. Then the cup is filled with hot milk. That is "Cuban" coffee.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

SHIP AHOY. Barrios Circuit, operating the Cecilia Theatre in Panama, constructed this 30-foot three-master sailing vessel which was planted atop marquee to sell "Captain Blood".

The Latin people go in for Clubs in a big way. The Italians have beautiful club houses in both Ybor and West Tampa. In each of these clubs are large modern theatres. The West Tampa theatre is used only for dramatic shows, but the one in Ybor City is leased by Butler Gore, who operates it under the moniker of "Broadway," named for the main street of the town.

The Broadway has been most successful under Gore's management. Price is a consideration everywhere, and Gore has the lowest prices in Tampa. Three days each week the scale is five cents and fifteen cents, the other four days the top price drops to a dime. At these prices Gore gives a full program of feature and shorts, and to top it off he usually has a contest of some kind in full swing.

The Spaniards have two clubs in the two cities known as "Centro Espanol." In the Ybor house the theatre is called the Casino, in West Tampa it is known as the Royal. Both of these houses are operated by a company as Casino Enterprises. This company also has another house in Ybor, the Ritz. This company does quite a little ballyhoo advertising, and of course carries advertising in the Spanish papers. They also go in strong for Bank Night and contest stunts.

There is another Spanish club, the Centro Asturiano, with a large theatre, and it is in this theatre that all of the plays presented by the WPA are staged. The WPA has two companies, one in which the language is Spanish and the other English. Their plays have been well attended and seem to be well liked. The Cuban club also have a large theatre in their building. Companies are brought in here from Cuba from time to time and local companies hold the boards now and then.

Sparks Controls Local Theatres

Well, now that we have visited the Latin sections, let's go over and see the big town. We don't have to ride the dummy line now, but grab one of the fast little "one man" cars, and the fare is only a nickel. Tampa is mighty proud of the fact that the electric company has never jacked up the fare, and it is one of the very few cities where the fare is only five cents and universal transfers are issued. Then the school fare is but half that, with the kids going to school and returning home for a single jitney.

There is plenty of transportation in Tampa, for besides the street cars there are bus lines to all suburbs. The bus fare is a dime for a single ride, but weekly tickets are issued at a dollar a week. With one of these tickets a man can not only go to his work each day, but journey to the business section for his amusement. Then there are a flock of "dime cabs" that pick you up and carry you anywhere in the city for a dime. There are so many of these dime cabs that they get in your hair, but it furnishes cheap transportation and of course that is a great help to show business, especially so as the parking problem is more than a problem here, as it is in most cities.

In Tampa proper both the "down-town" and neighborhood sections, the Sparks company control all of the houses but one small shop, the Orpheum, on upper Franklin street. The District Manager, Jesse Clark, is an old timer in the show game and one of the best liked men in town.

Jesse knows the value of cooperation and he is always ready to play ball with the civic organizations and all bodies. He, and many of his managers, belong to the Chamber of Commerce and other societies. He knows the value of getting good managers for the different houses and then giving them a free rein to go ahead and put things over.

The Sparks circuit, the big boss and the local managers all deserve great praise for the way the theatres are operated and cared for. All the theatres are perfection in cleanliness, sound and projection. The Tampa is the ace house here. It cost a million and a quarter, and is worth it. This house is air-conditioned, as are some of the others, and has everything to be had for the comfort and convenience of its patrons. This house gets the pick of the pictures and plays them all at a set price, 35 cents top to six P. M., and 40 cents on to closing. A single feature with several short subjects and organ concerts make up the programs.

The Victory comes next, operating on the same scale and with selected pictures. This house also sticks to the single feature and shorts, but vaudeville acts are brought in occasionally as this house has a full sized stage and can and does play some road attractions.

All the other downtown houses are operated on a double feature basis. Some first runs are shown at these houses but usually there is a second run in addition. Prices at the downtown houses go as high as 35 cents at night and 25 cents is the lowest price, but out in the neighborhoods the prices never top 20 cents.

Managers Given Exploitation Latitude

The managers of the different houses are allowed to go pretty much on their own in the way of ballyhoo and special exploitation stunts, but the newspaper advertising is all prepared by an advertising manager. Good sized space is used daily by the circuit, hardly ever less than quarter page. Artistic designs are used, giving each house a display. In this advertising many pieces of the mats furnished by the producers are worked in. The advertising is always attractive.

The local newspapers are very friendly and all have amusement pages on which there are syndicated columns and stories. All films that are shown three days or more are reviewed by the paper's own writers. Special tie-ups with the papers are worked from time to time and quite often with merchants. The theatres get along well with the broadcasting stations too. The organist of the Tampa puts on a 15-minute program each noon over Tampa station WDAE. Then each Monday night there is a "Radio Discovery" program given at the Tampa and this is broadcast over WDAE. This amateur hour has been conducted by the station and the theatre for over a year now.

The circuit also maintains a special art department. Beautiful and elaborate lobby displays are built here for each picture. Parts of these displays are given to the second-run houses for their use when the films play the subsequent runs. The managers of the different houses also work out special lobbies and ballyhoo and then quite often they hit on a special merchant tie-up which they put over for the benefit of their house. Sound trucks are used for ballyhoo. The Tampa has one that is on duty daily, covering all sections of the city once or twice each week.

Theatre Attendance Called Stable

As a show town one could not class Tampa as a wow, still the attendance is pretty stable. The fans are wise to the pictures and one of the sure-fire kind will find a line up at the box office for the opening. The winter business is helped a lot by the tourists who come to spend the winter in the climate that made Florida famous. Still the home folks keep the cash register ringing even in the "heated term," and the Victory is the only house that is darkened during the hot months.

Of course the show business has plenty of competition. Here we have two broadcasting stations, one with the NBC program and the other the CBS. This free entertainment keeps a host of people away from the theatres. During the winter there is dog racing, band concerts and all kinds of special entertainment to attract the crowds. Many night clubs, cocktail rooms, with dancing, and the regular ballrooms have their regulars who might be dropping in for a whirl of screen entertainment but for these.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

MOTHER'S DAY. This attractive floral display was promoted by John Tucker, Park Theatre, Roselle Park, N. J. Center of the effective flash contained large card with Mother's Day poetry.

Slot Machines Tough Competition

Slot machines, which were legalized at the last session of the legislature, are getting a great play. Bolita, a kind of numbers game, is a great favorite here, as is the playing of Cuba, the Cuban lottery. Of course it is "agin' the law" to gamble on these games, but nobody seems able to stop it and the yearly take is estimated to run into the millions. All these nickel, dime and quarter catchers put a certain nick into theatre grosses.

Tampa has quite a large negro population and there are now two theatres that cater exclusively to this trade. There was a time when four theatres were devoted to negroes, but the depression took a wallop at unskilled labor first, so two houses are sufficient, and quite often more so, to provide entertainment for the colored folks.

To sum up the amusement situation in Tampa, your orator can remember away back 25 years ago when Tampa had less than one-third the present population, there were 22 theatres. Today there are but 14 houses playing pictures.

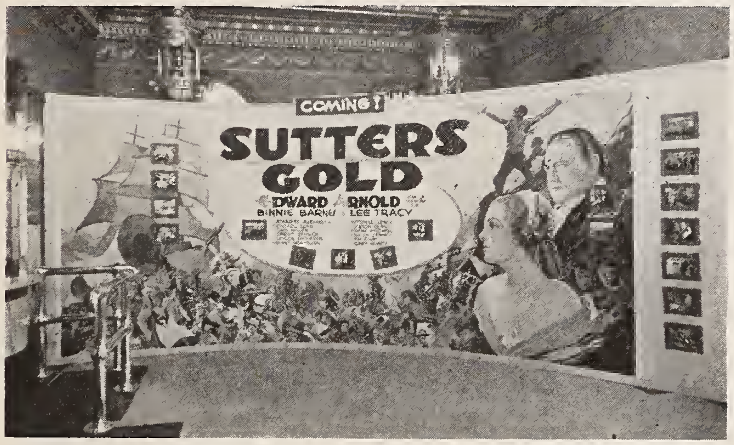
Let's analyze the thing. A quarter of a century ago was the hey-day of the Nickelodeon and of the 22 theatres mentioned, 20 of them were nickelodeons, or "store shows." These houses bought their shows, three reels of fillum and three one-sheet posters, all in one can, a complete change of program daily, seven days a week, at $21.00. The standard price for the fillum shows was five cents, but some of the houses charged a dime and these houses had to bolster up their show with two or more acts of vodvil.

The seating capacity of these store shows was around 200. So, to get down to figures we find that three of our largest houses today would comfortably seat as many people as could be packed into 20 of the store shows of yesteryear. That leaves us 11 houses to go, and as most all of our houses now seat around 1,000, we find that Tampa has more than twice as many seats per capita as she had back yonder.

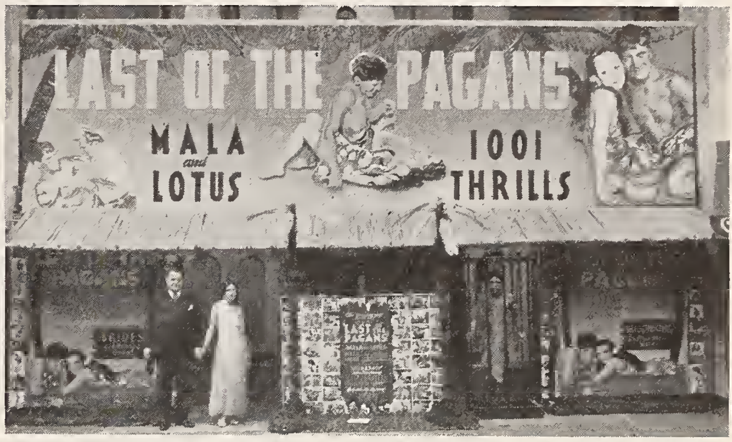
25 Years Ago and Today

Twenty-five years ago Tampa paid the jitney, or dime, flopped down on a "hardwood" seat, got 30 minutes of flicker and called it a day. Now he steps up to the box office, paying only 25 cents average, enters a glittering palace, walks on carpets that are as soft as a mattress, sinks into a comfortable upholstered seat, sees and hears the world's greatest artists do their stuff. Two full hours of entertainment, a thousand times the comfort and but five times the price of his jitney ticket of yesteryear. As far superior as the modern auto is over the ox cart. Yeah; and what has ——— got that Tampa hasn't? Still, you know how it is, we all look back lovingly to the time when, "Mutual Movies—Make Time Fly," if you get what we mean.

STUNTS, FRONTS AND OTHERWISE

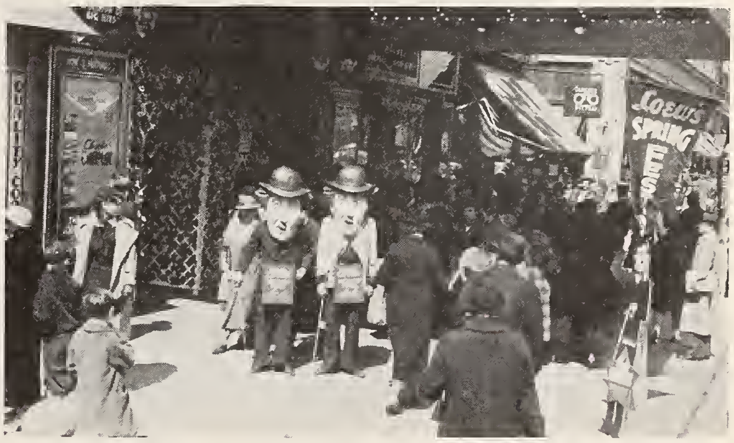


LOBBY ENLARGEMENT. Almost automatic in drawing attention was the giant board used for lobby display in advance of "Sutter's Gold" at the Lafayette, Buffalo. Manager George MacKenna and publicist Dick Walsh handled the campaign.

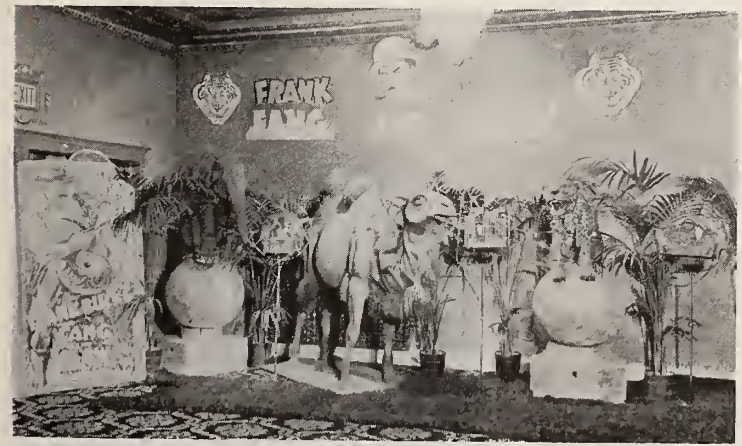


HAND HOLDER. That's Louie Charninsky, of the Capitol, Dallas, introducing to the camera the gal who did a lobby hula as buildup on "Last of the Pagans." Rest of the decorations and imprisoned "native" were in keeping.

STREET PARADE. Organized in Wilkes Barre, Pa., by Manager John J. Galvin for the date on "Rhodes" at the Penn, was the street parade led by the GB traveling advertising unit. Ford dealer cooperated with a fleet of bannered cars.



BIG HEAD BALLY. Standout in Al Lippe's compaign on "Modern Times" at Loew's State, Newark, N. J., was the two-man street bally of Chaplin impersonators wearing the giant star heads. Lippe did a bit of traffic-entangling with the stunt.



CAMEL AND CANARIES. Tour of the city by Julius Lamm netted a flock of stuffed animals for lobby flash on "Fang and Claw" date at the Uptown, Cleveland. Tiger, camel and elephant displays were divided by cages of singing birds.

STUNNING WINDOW. For the date on "Desire" at the New York Paramount, Manager Bob Weitman arranged for exclusive Fifth Avenue jeweler's window display on diamonds. Tied in neatly was enlargement of braceleted star in background.

THE APRIL "FIRSTS" CAMPAIGNS

Highlights of Four Entries Voted Quigley "First Mentions" by the April Awards Judging Group

That "local boy" angle was plenty hot in Fairmont, W. Va., when Manager R. E. Knight tied in his famous brother "Fuzzy," who appeared in "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" to the campaign on the date at the Warner Fairmont in that spot.

First shot in the barrage was letter from the mayor changing Main Street to the title of the picture for the duration of the date and allowed Knight to plant the new name along the chief artery. Then the drama class of the state normal school where "Fuzzy" attended got behind it solidly with contests for prizes of guest tickets and did a lot of house-to-house work as part of the class work in selling the all-color angles of the picture. Another similar tiein was parade to the theatre by the band of the high school from which "Fuzzy" graduated.

Newspaper coverage was very big with three contests featured, a coloring slant getting much space with a co-op idea also clicking. This last was started four days ahead with the paper breaking free two-column ads announcing that on the fifth day a co-op page would be run, readers asked to select from these ads merchandise to make up a costume for Sylvia Sydney to cost not over $50. Four hundred replies were received.

Two press book contests, the quilting and drawing ideas were also put across in different papers and in addition the daily running the serialization brought advance attention to this feature with frequent house ads. Reported by Knight as another "first time" in quite a few years was an editorial in the Fairmont Times urging readers to see the picture and there was much more than the usual publicity on the date.

The opening was a Hollywood premiere with everything that goes with it and top feature of the front exploitation was a hill billy band atop marquee and an especially effective display was made more so with pine trees on the sidewalk. Windows too played a prominent part in the campaign.

As to be expected, Knight made much of the local star slant, distributing over 700 autographed photos of his brother sent on from the Coast by Fuzzy. Inaugurated weeks ahead was a "Fuzzy Knight Juvenile Club," and members who attended for four consecutive weeks were given free star photos. For this purpose, membership cards were distributed and properly punched. Giant greetings post card addressed to Fuzzy in Hollywood and carried about town for signatures was also effective.

Madge Evans Reads Warners' Paper

"Are You Pixilated," Jones Asks on 'Deeds' Date

Three smart contests marked the campaign for "Mr. Deeds" put on by ad chief Dave Jones, at the Senate, Springfield, Ill., one especially bringing a lot of replies on the question—"Are you pixilated?" This was tied in with local daily and for $10 in cash and some tickets received a number of sweet story breaks and a flock of answers from readers.

The "What would you do with 20 million?" slant was also worked for a lot of returns, as was a radio jingle contest with entrants asked to send in a four-line jingle along the lines of those written by Deeds in the picture. Best were given tickets, read on the theatre's daily air program.

Another smart slant was a co-op page contest to find "Mr. Deeds" impersonated by Bill Parker, Columbia Picture representative, who went from store to store during the day. His identity was established when approached with: "You are Mr. Deeds, for whose capture this store offers a reward of $25 in merchandise." Person making the capture was required to carry copy of the co-op page to win.

Streamer across top of page read "Find Mr. Deeds and collect $25 in merchandise," with rest of page given over to ads of participating stores and rules. When Mr. Deeds was finally captured, the merchant concerned was given the money and in turn presented the winner with credit for the same amount, making the stunt easy to sell.

Bus lines and street cars were tied in to carry cards reading: "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town on a Weekly Pass" (see photo), a first time this was put over locally, according to Jones. Same slant was carried out with the Lincoln-Zephyr dealer.

"Exclusive Story" Campaign Helps Warner Soften Newspaper Resistance

For some time, the Bison Theatre, Shawnee, Okla., was not getting its share of newspaper cooperation and theatre publicity, says publicist Dick Warner, who credits his campaign on "Exclusive Story" for correcting this condition. One of the top features was a co-op page, the conception of which makes an interesting story. Warner had the house artist make the page topped with the line "the exclusive story of special bargains." Also spotted prominently were two shots of Tone and Madge Evans reading copies of the local paper—this of course arranged at the studios. Full-page cut was made up and proof shown to publisher who was sufficiently impressed to pay cost of the cut and help round up ads for insertions in morning and evening paper. And editorial on the date was also forthcoming.

Warner also gets out a monthly house program with a circulation of over 4,000 and paid for by merchants' ads. Issue on the picture was raised to 10 pages and carried shots of the stars posing with the program (see photo). Additional publicity break in local paper was a two-column ad stating that for anyone paying $25 to be donated to local charities, an exclusive preview of the picture would be given.

Further breaks were obtained with tiein of Sub-Deb Club, composed of top socialites who put on a Hollywood Impersonation Revue at the theatre.

Reported as highly successful, too, was tieup with bus company to promote business whereby bus line offered round trip local tickets and theatre admission for price of regular theatre ticket. Warner made a slight concession to transportation company to put this over and in return had all buses bannered and mention in newspaper advertising.

Tie Date On "Petticoat Fever" To Jack Benny Personal Date

That was a lot of work put in by Manager Ev Steinbuch and publicist Milt Harris, on a combination date for "Petticoat Fever" and personal of Jack Benny at Loew's State, Cleveland, in which the radio star helped to plug the picture in all his local activities. These included special reception at the terminal by newspapers, heads of coming Exposition committee, key to the city by mayor and police escort to City Hall.

Tiein with railroads and bus lines obtained posters in all stations and ticket offices in 150-mile radius to plug special week-end excursion and date was publicized further in local paper's popularity contest for letter carriers, bus drivers, policemen, etc.

Amusing was a novelty herald called a "Very Old Labrador Love Test." At the top was a red heart and to discover whether one's sweetheart was true, readers were requested to rub noses on the spot and if color did not change then everything was okey-dokey. Gag was tied into the picture cleverly.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

The NEW NATIONAL 13.6 mm x 22-inch Super High Intensity Projector Carbon for operation at arc currents of

140 to 190 Amperes

ABUNDANT LIGHT FOR THE LARGEST SCREEN
AMPLE POWER FOR THE LONGEST THROW

This new carbon makes available a much higher intensity of illumination on the screen than can be obtained from the regular 13.6 mm high intensity carbon operated at 130 amperes. It is adapted to steady operation over an unusually wide range of arc current—140 to 190 amperes. The exceptionally uniform field of brilliancy at the crater face assures excellent distribution of light intensity on the screen.

This picture shows how the Criterion Theatre, in Charlotte, N. C., achieved greater eye appeal and patron-drawing power by means of a Pittco Theatre Front. This is just one of the many theatres throughout the country which have discovered the wisdom of Pittco-modernization.

At your service... OUR WIDE STORE FRONT EXPERIENCE IN YOUR FIELD

ONE of the best assurances you can have that remodeling your theatre with a new Pittco Theatre Front will be successful and profitable, is the fact that we have had such wide experience in installing Pittco Fronts in the theatre field. Our experience has taught us the color schemes, the arrangement of theatre-front elements which are best able to suggest to your potential patrons a high class house offering good programs . . . and to attract their patronage.

This is the fourteenth in a series of advertisements directed to theatre operators and featuring photographs of actual Pittco Theatre Front installations. And these are only a few of the many theatre installations of Pittco Fronts we have made. We invite you to send the coupon below for our free booklet on Pittco Fronts and interior painting, which contains further information. And remember, our staff of store front experts will gladly discuss with you and your architect the best type of front to fit your needs and pocketbook.

PITTSBURGH TIME PAYMENT PLAN

Take 2 years to pay for your new Pittco Front! Merely make a 20% down payment, and then pay the balance in easy monthly installments at low F. H. A. rates.

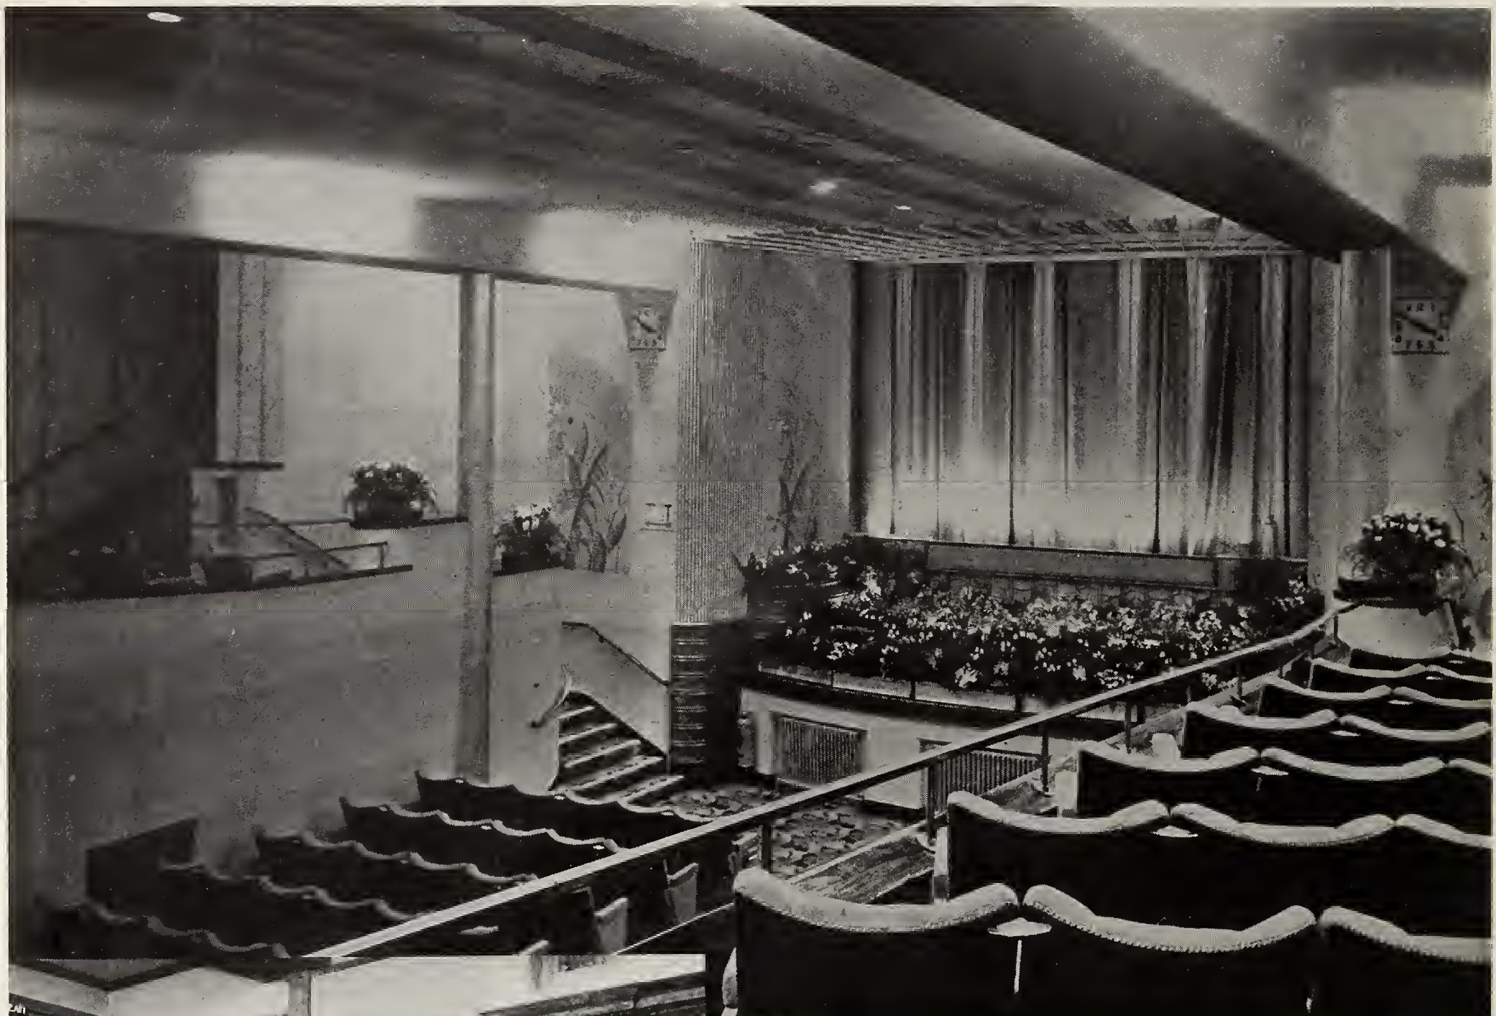
DOUBLE AUDITORIUMS SERVING TWO POLICIES



■ These are views of the two auditoriums of the former Cinema House, Oxford Circus, London, representing a scheme which, while not absolutely new, is of infrequent occurrence. The second auditorium, recently added in the remodeling of Cinema House, one of the oldest screen theatres in London, is located in basement area, with the original auditorium above. A similar arrangement is that of the Symphony-Thalia theatres in New York City. The latter, however, are really separate houses, served by different box offices and lobbies, while in the English scheme, both auditoriums are served by the same entrance and lobby. The basement auditorium (above), called Studio No. 2, is devoted to the presentation of newsreels. Stairs lead to it from the lobby, giving access to a deep well, wherein is the main seating section, and to galleries, which extend along the sides as well as the rear of the seating area below. The total capacity of Studio No. 2 is 408. Studio No. 1 (left), is treated with oak panelling in Georgian style. Presentation of special Continental attractions is the policy for this auditorium. It seats 750. The architects were Kemp & Tasker. D. J. James is the owner.

Independent Dealers Convening in Chicago

TO EXAMINE recent developments in equipment at first-hand, and to discuss a year's collection of issues concerning technical standards, trade practices and prices, members of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, their exhibitor guests and manufacturers are to convene June 5 at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago in the sixth annual convention of the association. The meeting will continue four days.

In addition to engineers and other manufacturers' representatives, a number of addresses on non-technical and general subjects are scheduled. Among these speakers will be J. B. Kleckner, president of Motiograph, Inc., who will talk on installment payment plans and credit problems; E. A. Williford of the National Carbon Company, S. N. Zinner, who will discuss sales financing; and N. D. Golden of the Motion Picture Division of the U. S. Department of Commerce.

The equipment exhibit this year will display the product of 35 manufacturers, requiring space in two lounges of the hotel. All but a few, however, will be located in the East Lounge. There space has been provided for the following manufacturers:

Golde Manufacturing Company, Chicago; Universal Electric Welding Company, Long Island City; Forest Manufacturing Company, Belleville, N. J.; General Register Corporation, New York; Da-Lite Screen Corporation, Chicago; Weber Machine Company, Rochester; International Seating Corporation, Union City, Ind.; Ideal Seating Company, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Edward H. Wolk, Chicago; Baldor Electric Company, St. Louis.

Also in the East Lounge will be the Continental Electric Company, St. Charles, Ill.; Le Roy Sound Equipment Corporation, Rochester; Operadio Manufacturing Company, St. Charles, Ill.; Century Electric Company, St. Louis; Wenzel Company, Chicago; Universal Stamping & Manufacturing Company, Chicago; G-M Laboratories, Chicago; Best Devices Company, Cleveland; Air Controls, Inc., Cleveland; Sam Kaplan Manufacturing Company, New York; Goldberg Brothers, Denver; Chicago Cinema Products Company, Chicago.

Others in the East Lounge will be Motiograph, Inc., Chicago; Brenkert Light Projection Company, Detroit; National Carbon Company, Cleveland; C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company, Long Island City; Telo-Radio Corporation, Newark; Peabody Seating Company, North Manchester, Ind.

Displays in the West Lounge will be those of the Neumade Products Company, New York; Lloyd Manufacturing Company, Menominee, Mich.; Imperial Electric Company, Akron; and Eastern Indicator Company, Newark.

PROGRAM

Friday, the opening day, will be devoted especially to examination of the new equipment, following an informal luncheon for member dealers and manufacturers' representatives.

The convention will be called to order by B. F. Shearer, president of the association, at 11 o'clock Friday, and a closed session will ensue until 1 o'clock. During this session a minute of silence will be observed in memory of Clem Rizzo and E. E. Oliver, former members and officers now deceased.

Friday evening will be devoted to an open forum in the Grand Ballroom of the hotel. This session will be addressed by N. D. Golden, A. Wienke, who will talk on a new model Motiograph projector; by Charles R. Schatten, whose topic is "The Silent Salesman"; O. F. Neu, "What the Manufacturer Expects from His Dealer Representative"; A. J. Levin, "Accounting for the Theatre Supply Dealer," and J. J. Finn, who will discuss the relationship of supply dealer and projectionist.

At 8 o'clock Saturday members and manufacturers will meet for individual conferences, with the regular business session opening at 10. At this session will be heard the addresses of E. A. Williford and S. M. Zinner.

At an open session Saturday afternoon, beginning at 1:30, Capt. John W. Gorby will give an address on standards and the value of a testing bureau. He will be followed by J. B. Kleckner, after whose talk the meeting will be closed for a business session.

On Saturday evening will be held the regular annual banquet and entertainment. It will take place in the Michigan Room of the hotel and will be informal.

The hours from 11 o'clock to 1 o'clock Sunday morning will be devoted to hearing reports of committees and new business. In the afternoon will occur the annual election of officers and report of directors. No evening sessions are scheduled.

The program for the final day, Monday, calls for a closed business session from 10 o'clock to noon. The hours immediately after luncheon have been set aside for further visits to the equipment exhibits, following which a final business session will be held, at which the 1937 convention city will be decided. The convention will adjourn at 6 o'clock.

Assisting the president in conduction of the convention will be J. E. Robin, executive secretary; and K. R. Douglass, vice president. Members of the various committees are given below.

Seek More Efficient Type of Exciter Lamp

RESEARCH BEING conducted by the incandescent lamp department of General Electric at Nela Park on exciter lamp design, is now being pointed toward the introduction of a more efficient type by fall, according to F. E. Carlson, research engineer of that department. In response to inquiry, he states:

"It is my hope that much of the research work we are doing on the application of incandescent lamps to the reproduction of sound from film, will be sufficiently far along to provide the basis for a technical paper at the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

"It seems to be generally true that since comparatively pure direct current is essential for the operation of the exciter lamp to reduce hum, reductions in current and wattage for such lamps make for economies and simplifications in the rectifier and filter systems required. We are therefore inquiring into ways and means for producing light sources which will be more effectively utilized by sound reproducer optical systems in order that wattage or current or both may be reduced without sacrificing photocell response or acceptable lamp life.

"Also, by means of rather elaborate test equipments which we have assembled, we are studying quite carefully the distribution of illumination in the scanning beam itself and the causes of uniformity in scanning-beam illumination, which is so common. Such conformity appears to be attributable to both the lamps and the optical systems employed."

Microphone of Dual Impedance Input Type

AN AMPLIFIER designed for application directly with either a high- or low-impedance input has been added to the line of microphones manufactured by the Amperite Corporation of New York. The dual impedance characteristic is accomplished by using a specially designed transformer and a shielded four-conductor microphone cable. The cable is terminated with a five-prong female plug.

This microphone is changed to low (200-ohm) or high impedance automatically by plugging in the proper female plug, and no dead windings are left in the microphone transformer. The type was developed for use where both low and high impedance inputs might be encountered. For only high impedance inputs, of course, the regular high-impedance type is used.

Central Attraction Board Unit Developed

AN ATTRACTION board unit, complete in itself but adaptable to the addition of side wings at any later time, and providing for suspension without side guys or overhead supporting elements, has been brought out by the Artkraft Sign Company of Lima, Ohio. A new addition to the line of "Zephyr" marquees and attraction boards, all characterized by unit construction, it is called the "Zephyr Special."

It is designed to carry the name of the theatre in neon and for two lines of attraction copy in silhouette changeable letters. It is decorated with a travelling striplight, a travelling lamp border starting from the building across the top becoming a "V" down the front and across the bottom toward the box office. It can be painted in any colors desired.

In hanging, anchorage at the top is provided by two through wall bolts with two wall plates. Four expansion bolts and shields are used for holding the lower part to the wall. In addition, if necessary, overhead attachment may be accomplished through the top border that runs to the building.

The lamping of the changeable letter section is provided for by outlets for twenty-seven 25-watt lamps, although 15-watt lamps may be used in darker locations. The travelling border and striplight call for 178 lamps of 6 watts.

Construction is of galvanized iron with enamelling throughout. The frame is designed to withstand 30 pounds of wind pressure without side guys or overhead guys.

Council Passes Severe Theatre Regulations

THE CITY COUNCIL of Wilmington, Del., has passed the new municipal building code recently proposed and containing drastic regulations for theatres reported in the March 7th issue. The new requirements have been vigorously protested by theatre interests.

One of the provisions of the code requires that the minimum width of a seat shall be 20 inches. A number of houses at present have seats measuring 17, 18 and 19 inches. Rows shall not be less than 32 inches apart, with not more than 14 seats to a row and not more than seven seats to a wall bank. Every aisle shall lead to an exit door, or to a cross-aisle—that is, an aisle running parallel with the seat rows and leading to an exit door.

The fireproof curtain shall have a rigid framework of steel, covered with asbestos cloth on both sides and shall in no case have a thickness of less than 4 inches. In regard to the projection room, the rewinding must be done in a separate room, and vaults for the storage of films shall not communicate with the projection room proper.

Emphasis on Screen Illumination Grows

THE VISUAL character and pictorial quality of the screen image is getting an increased measure of organized attention. It was one of the principal topics at the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Chicago last month, it represents one of the newer activities of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which ordinarily concerns itself with production, and it is being concentrated upon in the current researches and standardization work of the Projection Practice Committee.

It has also become the concern of the recently organized Motion Picture Screen Manufacturers' Association, which, while dealing also with trade practices and matters of the market, is seeking to establish classifications and technical refinements with respect to the screen itself.

All of these efforts, whatever the differences in procedure, represent recognition of poor visual conditions in the average theatre, and they look toward the development of standards for screen types, projection light intensity and quality, seating area dimensions in relation to image dimensions and other factors, some of which bear upon the form of the auditorium itself.

In discussing the screen as a lighting problem before the SMPE and its spring convention, M. Luckiesh and F. K. Moss of the General Electric Company, Nela Park, referred to the task of determining standards as a visual one, to be undertaken as essentially a problem of light, involving both the screen and environmental light levels, rather than as one of localized lighting, which, they said, has been the case.

At the last meeting of the screen manufacturers, held in New York May 18, attention was directed to failure of screen makers themselves to form standards for types of screen that would facilitate the specification of specific types for specific auditoriums with accuracy.

At the same meeting it was announced that tests had demonstrated that contrary to an original belief, the beaded type of screen was entirely adaptable to the characteristics of light projected from a surprex arc. According to Maj. Robert T. Rassmussen, secretary of the association, a beaded screen has been developed for use in conjunction with the suprex arc that is definitely superior to the diffusive type.

Among the matters associated with screen illumination and vision discussed before the SMPE convention was a new 13.6-millimeter carbon developed by the National Carbon Company. This was reported by D. B. Joy, who said that this carbon will burn currents as high as 190 amperes and provide a higher intrinsic brilliancy and a more uniform distribution of light across the crater face than the regular 13.6-millimeter carbon rated at from 120 to 130 amperes, with the result, as proved in tests, that an increase of 30% is obtainable in the available light at the screen. The lamp mechanism must be specially designed for this new carbon, which calls for an increase in both current and carbon consumption.

A new monitoring telephone receiver was also reported to the spring convention of the SMPE by Harry F. Olson of RCA. The receiver is designed for uniform response over the full obtainable frequency range of the sound system.

New Rectifier with Special Current Control

A PROJECTION ARC current rectifier of copper oxide type, providing for instantaneous arc current selection, has been developed by the C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company of Long Island City. The rectifier is of course designed to meet the characteristics of the suprex arc.

The current manipulation device, called a double rotary current control, is so designed that pressure on the wheel (see accompanying illustration) locks the control on one arc, leaving the other undisturbed. The latter is similarly subject to control. Also, both arcs can be controlled simultaneously by locking the wheel cap into position.

The capacity of the rectification medium is adapted to the operation of two arcs at from 30 to 50 amperes, and one arc at from 50 to 100 amperes. Both combinations are controllable by dial switch operations. A 50-ampere carbon arc spotlight may also be used with the first combination.

The banks of the copper oxide shells are mounted in a rigid frame constructed of aluminum castings and channel iron, insulated and designed to provide ventilation by means of free passage of air under pressure provided by a Propellaire six-blade, aero type fan of 800 cubic feet per minute capacity. The motor is equipped throughout with ball bearings, requiring no lubrication.

The transformer is of 3-phase core type. Asbestos-covered wire is used throughout for control panel connections. The panel, which is of heavy constructions, is mounted integrally with the transformer. At the upper portion is the arc current control, while at the lower part are four sets of contact posts for various line voltages, 210, 220, 230 and 240. At each side are the coarse adjustments for the arc currents, low, medium and high. Casing finish is of black crackle enamel, with the bright work in polished chromium and aluminum. Overall dimensions are: height, 30 inches, depth, 19 inches, width, 19 inches.

New Projector for Standard Attachments

THE LINE of Motiograph projection and sound systems will be augmented this fall by a new model projector designed for the attachment of any standard types of lamps and soundheads. Details of the design are withheld by the company pending determination of a definite date for deliveries.

This company will continue, however, to manufacture its unit sound-projection equipment, combing all the elements of a projection and sound system.

New Supply Dealer Group Sets Meeting

THE PROJECTED organization called the Associated Theatre Supply Dealers, Inc., expected to be headed by George de Kruif, former executive of the National Theatre Supply Company, has definitely set its initial meeting for June 8 and 9 at the Medinah Athletic Club in Chicago. The convention will be attended by at least 20 dealers, according to Rudolph Eisenberg, who will be general counsel of the organization. In addition, he said, there will be present representatives of 70 equipment manufacturers.

No exhibits or displays are planned for this first meeting, which will concern exclusively with the formulation of the methods of operation of the organization. It is expected that the new group will begin to function actively during the summer. Mr. De Kruif, who has been in Chicago for several weeks, will preside at the two-day session. Any further meetings will be decided upon at that time.

New Booklets On Variety of Equipment

THOSE THEATRES which have workshops for general repairs and also the construction of stage sets and lobby displays, will be interested in several new booklets issued by the South Bend Lathe Works of South Bend, Ind. One, being also a catalog of this company's lathes and workshop equipment, is free, but it has also been prepared for purposes of instruction in woodwork and use of workshop implements. Two others are available at 10c each. They are handbooks of instruction, non-technical in language and well illustrated. One is entitled "How to Cut Screw Threads," and the other "How to Grind Lathe Cutter Bits."

Public address systems and all equipment elements that go into them form the subject of an illustrated 48-page catalog issued by the Wholesale Radio Service Company of New York. Amplifiers listed range in power output from 3½ to 100 watts. A full line of microphones for every type of theatre work is also described.

A 48-page booklet issued by the Da-Lite Screen Company of Chicago, combines descriptions of this company's screens with general information on the selection and installation of screens. Separate articles discuss the auditorium plan in relation to screen types and sizes, sound transmission, and screen maintenance, while lens charts indicating screen sizes according to focal length and distance of throw are also given.

Applying the "Continental Plan" To American Theatre Seating

● The first of a group of articles on aisle and chair arrangements, beginning with a specific adaptation of a seating method used in Europe

By BEN SCHLANGER

AISLE POSITION in a seating arrangement is a fundamental factor which largely controls the physical form of the theatre. Accessibility, minimum annoyance to patrons already seated by those entering rows, safe and rapid egress and space efficiency are considerations to be dealt with in determining aisle positions.

Building codes usually dictate aisle planning. Whether the requirements of the various codes are justified and whether these requirements are based on practical and scientific investigation are therefore matters to be dealt with in this and others to follow in a group of discussions of the various interlocking auditorium plan factors as influenced by aisle positions.

The present study is limited, for a reason to be explained later, to the relatively small theatre of about 400 seats, having two or three scheduled showings daily. It is important that it be understood that the plan advocated here is not yet permitted by many building codes. However, similar seating has been in use for many years abroad and is now being provided for in building code revisions in New York City and in Chicago, which cities have substantial influence on codes elsewhere. Many small towns, moreover, are not yet restricted by a building code.

Equally important to understand is the increased back-to-back distance between seating rows herein proposed. It is only by this means that the system will work and overcome a source of annoyance to the theatre-going public.

This particular discussion is devoted to the application of the so-called "Continental Seating" plan. Briefly, this is a seating plan which has an unlimited number of seats between aisles. This is made safe and comfortable by an increased back-to-back distance, which is a necessary feature of the arrangement. However, in the plan here suggested, the intention is to limit the number of seats between aisles to 18, four seats more than the usual building code limit. It is here considered that the ratio of 2 feet, 8 inches back-to-back, with 14 seats between aisles, and 3 feet back-to-back, with 18 seats, are the same with respect to the requirements of accessibility to seats, and to emergency circulation.

EGRESS FACTORS

Conservative building codes and building officials have long avoided this method despite proved records of easy egress. The Prinz-Regenten theatre in Munich, built in 1901, offers a notable example of the Continental Seating plan. A test made there soon after the theatre was built proved the safety of its plan. This house seats 1,106, with 78 chairs in loges at the back of a rather sharply sloped auditorium. In a timed test before skeptical German fire officials a capacity audience was emptied into the foyers in 90 seconds. And this house has rows of from 50 to 60 seats! No such width, of course, is suggested in this study.

In this country there are at least two examples, the Goodman Memorial theatre in Chicago, where a similar test surprised building and fire officials, and the new Peristyle in the Toledo Museum of Art. The first of these is a legitimate house, the other primarily a concert hall. An aisle arrangement problem for a scheduled performance is the same whatever the attraction, but a continuous performance causes too much movement across the house in front of seated patrons to make Continental Seating practical for such use.

This is the reason for the limitation of this first study to the small town house with scheduled showings. Yet by reason of the increased backto-back dimension to 3 feet for an 18-seat bank, it is reasonable to believe that the plan here discussed might even be used for continuous performance without serious difficulty. Actual practical application would of course test this point further, and might prove the difference to be negligible.

THE PLAN APPLIED

Let us analyze the plan possibilities of this small town theatre type, which I feel without doubt meets all practical requirements within the seating capacities mentioned. We shall assume the local code permits the use of 18 seats between aisles, or 9 seats between aisle and wall (instead of the usual 14 and 7 for these conditions), or that local authorities can be convinced that the addition of 4 inches to the back-to-back distance makes the 18-seat bank a safe scheme. Now we have 3 feet back-to-back and a bank of 18 seats from aisle to aisle.

"Outlandishly wasteful!" shouts Mr. Exhibitor. "What! Four inches more a row! That will cut down my seating capacity too much. These theory guys will kill this business yet!"

The amazing fact about all this is that the additional area needed for this plan is so slight as to be entirely offset by practical economies and superior exhibition. Greater comfort for the patron has been proved a box office asset. Finally, wasteful aisles will no longer cut a swath through the best seating areas in the house and increase the width which must be spanned with expensive steel overhead. And here is proof in a few simple diagrams and calculations.

In Scheme A, Figure 1, the rows are divided into two banks of nine seats each by a central aisle. This wasteful plan is required by the usual building code for a house 18 seats wide. (Note that these diagrams illustrate only a part of their respective theatres.)

Scheme B, Figure 2 shows a section with exactly the same number of seats. Although an additional 3 feet is required in depth for this number of seats because of the increased back-to-back distance, the area per seat is not increased as rapidly as might be expected. It is less than a quarter of a square foot per seat more. In addition, and more important, the valuable central area is filled with comfortable, paying seats resulting in satisfied and regular patronage. Furthermore, the steel span carrying the auditorium roof is less than in Scheme A.

The reason for limiting the capacity to about 400 is illustrated in Figure 3. For a house 18 seats wide the effective vision limit of four times the width of the screen results in approximately this number of seats.

It should be emphasized that this is not a radically experimental scheme. Figures 4 and 5 show two extreme examples which may be termed radical design of actual theatres. In one case, Figure 4, we have the Continental Seating arrangement in its ultimate development for a larger house requiring wide exit corridors at the sides and an annoying amount of passing in front of seated patrons. At the other extreme lies a plan developed by S. Charles Lee, Los Angeles theatre architect, in the Los Angeles theatre (Figure 5).

In the Los Angeles there are only six seats between aisles, the theory being that for continuous performance this would cause less annoyance to those seated. This is basically correct, but the waste of best seating areas and the expense of increased structural span is thereby aggravated. Somewhere between these two is the Scheme B here advocated.

Probably this scheme is not for the large theatre, or for the continuous performance. For the theatre type selected, however, it presents an entirely logical and practical solution. It has those extra advantages which make a competing exhibitor "sit up and take notice," without presenting any of the difficulties created by the extreme examples noted.

In the following in the group of seating plan studies begun with this discussion, an examination will be made of aisle arrangements for the 14-seat row maximum fixed by most building codes.

● Describing the Lincoln theatre, recently completed Wometco house in Miami Beach, Fla., designed in modern patterns with light a decorative feature

THE LINCOLN THEATRE in Miami Beach, new Wometco house, is a part of a $400,000 medical building, the first floor being devoted to shops and the other three to offices. Practically the entire space is being taken by doctors. Robert E. Collins was the architect, with Thomas W. Lamb as associate.

The theatre is given expression at the Lincoln Road entrance by the introduction of a high arched portal, protected and enriched by a marquee of polished metal and glass, denoting the name of the theatre and culminating in a crowning feature of sculptured stone which at night will be flooded with light.

The entrance portal of imitation stone leads into the lobby, a long, high room with walls of polished Florida key stone. Tall mirrors framed with moulded glass and enhanced by fluted surfaces in which are recessed bright metal and glass display frames announcing coming attractions. The floor, ramping slightly upward, is covered with a woven rubber rug laid within borders of Florida key stone.

The lounge is oval and is entered through a curving vestibule. It is about this lounge that all activity of the theatre will revolve. It is a quiet, restful room, the principal feature of which is a great picture window in the west wall and facing it on the east a large mirror in which is recessed an aquarium of tropical fish. Moulded glass with concealed lighting fixtures frames the mirror. Tropical plants fill the window and spaces around the mirror. The furniture is contemporary in design and planned especially for the contour of the room. Walls are seaweed green key stone, with floor covering of tile-red thick-pile carpet. Upholstering is in lemon-yellow leather. The tops of the odd-shaped coffee tables are of mirrored glass with aluminum ash trays on each. The china service is a deeper shade of the sea-weed green of the walls, and was made specially for this room. It is a part of the theatre service to serve tea in the afternoon to patrons who are using the lounge, and in the evening coffee is available. The tiny kitchenette is finished in golden yellow. Maids wear smart black and white uniforms.

The women's cosmetic powder room, opening from the lounge, is gayly colored with lemon yellow fixtures and orchid vitrolite walls, and the smoking room has a rubber dado in ultramarine blue over which life-size monkeys are scrambling.

Opening off the lounge are finely appointed telephone booths, men's room and an unusual drinking fountain. This is a "photo-electric-cell' controlled fountain.

Specially designed overstuffed streamlined, chromium-framed chairs were made for the Lincoln. About 800 are on the main floor, and 211 in a loge. In the main floor the 32 rows are so spaced as to allow ample room to pass those already seated. In the loge, where smoking is permitted, there are nine rows of seats similarly placed. Seats were designed and made by the American Seating Company.

Auxiliary rooms containing a motor-generator, dressing rooms, offices and storage are off the second floor loge. In the projection room the walls have been painted rather deep brown with the ceiling in a lighter shade. Two projectors have been provided, with one spot and one effect machine. Western Electric Sound equipment is used. The maximum screen width obtainable is 13 feet 6 inches. The distance between the screen and the front row of seats is 23 feet.

The air-conditioning system is automatically controlled. The three plants necessary to supply the theatre are of 150 tons capacity and provide 720 tons of air a day. A remote valve controls the ventilation, air-conditioning and the heating of the equipment. A special gauge is set for room temperature. All the equipment is installed on a trembar spring base, the same as Radio City's broadcasting studios, which reduces the vibration. The entire ceiling in the roof is insulated with spun-glass. Brass pipes are used throughout. The installation was made at a cost of between $40,000 and $50,000.

The auditorium is acoustically treated according to specifications given by Western Electric Company, using acoustical plaster.

The auditorium decorative treatment is confined essentially to the lighting scheme. The wall and ceiling surfaces are white, and upon them light is both spilled and projected. The entire lighting scheme, designed by Kliegl Brothers of New York, is related functionally to the contours and fascias of the auditorium, and it is thus that certain "moulding effects," as at the proscenium arch, are created (see accompanying photograph).

The illumination scheme consists in two systems, each operating on its own dimmer system, with control from the projection room. One is a system of ceiling troughs, each 66 feet in length. The other is composed of twelve groups of down-lights, of three projectors each, located in the ceiling and so focused that each effects a sharply defined area of light on a fixed part of the wall. With the dimmers preset, a series of color changes are effected in red, blue and amber.

The trough light sources have indirect reflectors and glass roundels. Each trough contains 44 ambers, 44 reds and 44 blues. The same color combination is used for the down-lights, in groups of three lamps, each 500 watts. The fixture for the down-lights is of the Klieglight type, with ceiling cones.

Illumination beneath the balcony is provided by trough lights in the soffit, which are also arranged in amber, red and blue lamping, being arranged in intricate patterns and coordinated with the electric sign work to give an artistic harmony in the maquee and facade.

Winding stairways lead from the lounge to the loge, and opening from this passageway are the offices and ushers' rooms. The proscenium opening is 19 feet high by 25 feet wide.

In designing the interior of the theatre all efforts were toward the creation of a setting that interferes in no way with the picture. There is absolutely no ornamentation. Walls and ceiling are simple plain surfaces made interesting through the right proportion and contour and beautified by means of "painting" with hues from hidden lights. Frederick T. Rank of Chicago, was interior decorator.

Ushers wear cream and maroon uniforms in the afternoon, exchanging the short braided jacket for formal tails in the evening.

Miami Beach, and its sister communities which comprise the greater Miami area, have a fluctuating population. Normally it runs around 125,000 but during the winter season this number is more than doubled by visitors and winter residents. Lincoln Road, on which the new theatre is located, is a smart shopping district. The theatre is in the heart of this district.

The building, which was erected under a general contractor, represents an investment of approximately $400,000, of which the theatre investment is about $135,000. The Lincoln is managed by Sonny Shepherd.

A CHAT WITH AN INTERESTING PERSON OF THE THEATRE WORLD

JOHN HERTNER, who says:

Television Will Lack Quality of Theatre

IN AN INTERVIEW BY F. H. RICHARDSON

IN THE INDUSTRY of the motion picture there are many men whom the thousands who have heard of them, or who have used their products, would like to know personally, but unable to do that, they at least would like to know something about these gentlemen who have served them long and faithfully. And John Hertner's is a name that long has been associated with affairs of the motion picture.

Since the year 1903, when the motion picture was still in its swaddling clothes, the Hertner Electric Company in Cleveland has been turning out motor-generators, and the theatre man has found them good. They have done their work, which means that John Hertner has contributed his mite to the solution of technical problems around which the success of the motion picture continually turns.

Through most of these many years I have known John Hertner personally, and there has been none more ready and willing to give unstintingly of his time in forwarding information concerning current rectification apparatus, in solving problems having to do with current rectification.

John Hertner was born in Williams County, Ohio, in 1877. As a young man, shortly after leaving college, he drifted into Cleveland, and finally turned up with a job with the Lincoln Electric Company. There he met another youngster, D. C. Cookingham, and not so long after they went into business together. Thus was the Hertner Electric Company formed.

Starting in this small way, John Hertner has built up a business which supplies motor-generator sets—Hertner Transverters—to theatres all over the world. Indeed, during the depression, he advised me, the foreign business often exceeded the domestic business. However, today that is no longer true. The total production of Hertner Transverters exceeds 6,000 (the company now manufactures other appliances as well). One customer in a single year purchased almost a quarter of a million dollars worth of Hertner Transverters—and that was during the depression!

And the faith of John Hertner in the motor-generator set for rectification of projection arc current is unshaken. In fact, he is quite willing to talk about this, and we did. He believes firmly that the motor-generator supplies a smoother current—that is, it causes less ripple—and that it delivers a steadier volume of output where line voltage fluctuation is present, than rectification mediums of other types.

But I did not confine my questions to current rectification. The experience of John Hertner goes back to the beginnings of the motion picture and from such we may expect a broad point of view. I asked him:

"In your opinion, will the future trend be toward a greater or smaller number of theatres?"

"I am inclined to think that the number of theatres now in evidence will not sharply increase or decrease," he responded. "There will be probably some increase, due to the fact there will be new centers of population—new towns springing up in country sections. There will be undoubtedly changes in present industry which will be a cause for remodeling completely or possible rebuilding. The total number of houses have a seating capacity that is well in line with the present population. I don't think it will change a great deal, either up or down."

I asked, "What is your opinion as to the possibility of television when it enters into the theatre situation?"

"I am not a prophet and don't like to make guesses," he laughed. "However, I don't believe that television lends itself to the general purpose of the theatre as much as may be anticipated. I imagine that the idea is to have a group of actors play at some theatre at a center such as New York and to have that play transmitted to various theatres simultaneously through the country. There may be something to that. As for current events, television is of course out. We can't have things all happen at 8 o'clock in time for the show.

"The ordinary picture is presented on the screen, I believe, much more perfectly than the ordinary show is presented by the actors in person in the theatre, as the result of countless repetition in the way of rehearsing and preparation. Perfection also is the result of a lot of labor in cutting film, splicing up things and finally getting a result that is again submitted to criticism for some more editing. That can't be done with television. If you have a group of actors who are presenting a show on the stage you have something that you cannot get from a picture because the actors are before you. You hear and view directly. On the other hand, if you have it transmitted by wire it comes down to the so-called 'canned' effect and lacks the perfection of detail that is possible in the standard picture on account of the toning-up and touching-up that it gets after it has been produced."

"Do you think," I asked, "it is possible to illuminate a theatre screen adequately by the television methods?"

"My experience," he replied, "is so limited in my connection with that phase that I am not prepared to state, but I would say from what little I do know that it would be impossible to get the proper amount of illumination."

Though the years behind him are many, John Hertner is still developing new solutions to rectification problems.

Describing the Earl theatre in the Bronx, New York, wherein metals, fabrics, wood veneers and yet other substances join in a festive mood of moderne

LOCATED JUST a scratch three-bagger's flight from the Yankee Stadium at 161st Street and River Avenue, the Bronx, the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises' smart new Earl theatre commands a populous residential area and suavely serves cream-of-the-crop screen fare in the clean-cut manner of Clement Perry, its manager, in an exhibition setting as modern as this year's pennant race.

To study the Earl theatre layout, appointments, equipment and policies have come exhibitors from many States, from Canada and the British Isles. The building is fireproof throughout, constructed of brick, concrete and steel, and includes seven store spaces fronting on River Avenue. The building measures 125x115 feet overall. The auditorium is 80x115 feet. The Earl was built at a cost of approximately $150,000, exclusive of land, and was equipped at an additional cost of $45,000. Eugene DeRosa of New York, was the architect.

FRONT AND VESTIBULE

The front is made of enamelled steel and aluminum with a vertical fluted surface design and is a product of the American Bronze Company. It is impervious to weathering and requires no polishing. The marquee, by Continental, is a broad, deep structure underlined with neon tubing in alternating colors and presenting three spacious attraction boards bordered by bands of running color. These spaces are surmounted by the Earl insignia in high-visibility red and blue.

Display frames in the vestibule, in common with those in the foyer beyond, are likewise products of the American Bronze Company, made in the same stainless metal with glass cover and concealed lighting. The same material encloses an island type box office, located in the exact center of the vestibule. Above it is suspended a strikingly original chandelier designed by Laurence Bolognino, general manager of the Consolidated circuit, and executed to his specifications by Charles Weinstein.

THE FOYER

Fireproof doors by Pioneer admit to a deep foyer, which is floored with rubber mats set into terrazzo. Wall bases are in black marble. The walls are finished in walnut colored Flexwood laid over fireproof backing and are broken at intervals by vertical panels in aluminum and red Verona marble. Large round mirrors are sheerly mounted along each side of the foyer wall. A classical frieze surmounting the Pioneer fireproof doors leading into the auditorium pleasantly engages the eye and leads it to the plaster ceiling, running down the center of which a glass light fixture of suspended trough type combines its utilitarian illumination function with an effective knitting together of the decorative design. Interior decoration of the theatre throughout is by the Rambusch Decorating Company of New York.

The main lounge (upper view) on the mezzanine level, and the mezzanine promenade.

THE AUDITORIUM

The auditorium is modern in character, with black, gold and red the predominant colors. Futed pilasters alternate with deep red tapestry panels. Illumination is indirect, with specially designed glass fixtures by Weinstein, casting light in a blue tone, during exhibition. Carpeting throughout the auditorium, stairs, lounges and retiring rooms is of cheerful, geometrical figure design in a color scheme of dull gold, rust red and black.

The average height of the auditorium is 38 feet. Wide aisles separate into three banks the 1,200 seats on the orchestra level. Two hundred seats in the balcony, which has the appearance of a mezzanine from the auditorium point of view, are similarly arranged. The chairs, upholstered in rust velour, are by the American Seating Company. Kalite acoustic plaster is used at the ceiling and behind the fabric wall coverings.

The promenade on the orchestra floor, like its equivalent in the balcony, is spacious and decorated in consonance with the foyer. Broad stairs at left lead to the second level and directly into a broad general lounge furnished by Modernage, Inc. Women's and men's toilet rooms are directly beyond. A powder parlor is furnished in the tubular type of modern metal chairs, with dressing tables, mirrors and individual lighting fixtures to match.

A steel stairway from the balcony promenade leads to the projection quarters. Projectionists' toilet and washbowls are off a brief corridor leading to a large room provided for lockers and reserve equipment. A somewhat smaller room between this and the projection room proper contains a Neumade sprinkler-system film vault and an enclosed automatic rewinder.

The projection room, together with the adjoining rooms, is of steel and concrete construction with terra cotta partitions. It is finished in gray. It is 24 feet wide by 12 feet deep. The projectors, of which there are two are Simplex. They are equipped with Brenkert Enarcs. Arc current rectification is by a Robins-Imperial motor-generator. The sound system is RCA Photophone. The Earl screen image is 18x24 feet, projected from a 100-foot throw at an angle of 12°.

At right the projection room gives access to the intake and exhaust chambers of the ventilating system and to Powers thermostatic control dials governing theatre temperature with a maximum over-all differentiation of 3°. This equipment is intimately integrated with a Carrier-Brunswick heating and refrigerating ensemble installed in the basement.

Entrance to the basement is from the orchestra level promenade. The first of three commodious basement rooms houses a Spencer-Turbine vacuum cleaning unit powered by a Westinghouse motor, with inlets conveniently placed throughout the theatre. The second room contains oil-burning National Steel Boilers, which provides heat for the entire building; and the third contains the air-conditioning units.—William R. Weaver.

About People of the Theatre

NEWS OF THEIR ACTIVITIES REPORTED FROM ALL SECTIONS AND BRIEFLY TOLD

Louis J. Starr, formerly in the Warner sales department, has been named a representative of the Condenser Service & Engineering Company of Hoboken. The company will install and repair theatre air-conditioning equipment.

Frank Mascato, head of Giylon Amusement Company, expects to open the Ditmars theatre in Astoria, L. I., by the end of May or early in June. The Amusement Supply Company of New York is supplying the equipment.

Sam Freedman is constructing a 600-seat theatre on Kings Highway, Brooklyn, N. Y., with opening scheduled for fall.

The Shaker theatre in Shaker Heights, Cleveland, has been opened by Sam Stecker, Myer Fine, Abe Kramer and their associates. This is the first motion picture theatre to be built in this suburban community. The house seats 1800.

R. J. Dawson has razed his Maple Leaf theatre in Vancouver, B. C., and will erect a new theatre, to seat 960, on the site. Thomas L. Kerr is the architect.

R. L. Smallwood, Sykes Haney, Bramlett Roberts and Theron Lyles plan to build a $25,000 theatre in Oxford,

C. Thomas of Grand Rapids, Mich., has plans for a 922-seat theatre in that city, to be leased to the Johnson-Butterfield circuit.

Ray Theatre, Inc., of Bells, Tenn., has been granted a charter. The incorporators are S. E. McDonald, R. F. Doffinger and E. M. Weeks.

The Jefferson Amusement Company, Texas operators, has plans for a new theatre at La Porte, Tex. It will cost $15,000 and seat 500.

S. W. Craver, T. A. Little and Carolyn P. Shuman have formed a company with the title, Dilworth Theatre, Inc., and will erect and operate a theatre in Charlotte, N. C.

Edward Ramsey of Mansfield, Ohio, who recently purchased the Plymouth at Plymouth, Ohio, after having operated it under lease for the past year, is closing the house for the summer. He expects to operate an open air theatre, sponsored by the Plymouth merchants.

D. M. Major is building a new 450-seat house at Paris, Mo., at a cost of approximately $10,000.

Death took one of the pioneers of the motion picture business and one of the industry's most prominent theatre supply dealers when Clem Rizzo, owner and operator of Clem's Independent Motion Picture Supply House in Philadelphia, died on April 27 in that city following an operation for appendicitis. He was only 45 years old.

Clem Rizzo entered the amusement business at the age of 13, at Verdi Hall in Philadelphia. When that playhouse began to present "moving pictures," young Rizzo shifted from back-stage tasks to projector operating. Projection remained his work for a number of years, even when, in 1908, he became owner of the Uptown Wonder nickelodeon in Philadelphia.

He either owned or managed a number of theatres in the ensuing years, and also operated a film delivery service between Philadelphia and Atlantic City. He remained a projectionist during most of this time, however, and from 1913 to 1917 was treasurer of Local Union 307. It was not until 1922 that he entered the theatre supply business. That year he became associated with Lew Swaab in his equipment establishment. In 1926 he opened his own supply store, and only about a year ago removed his business to larger quarters. He was one of the founders and at one time an official of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association.

The E. J. Sparks interests will erect a theatre at Jacksonville Beach, Fla., at a cost of approximately $40,000. The new houe will have a seating capacity of about 800.

J. B. Gardner has taken over the management of the Rex theatre, Sandpoint, Ida.

Dale Green has been made manager of the recently reopened Family theatre in Endicott, Wash.

J. T. Whelan has purchased the Kiva theater at Santa Rosa, N. M., from R. L. Riddle. The house has been renamed the Pecos. Mr. Whelan also operates houses in Hobbs and Lovington, N. M.

R. E. Scarboro and H. L. Detgen have awarded contracts for the erection of a theatre at Chestnut and Scott streets, San Francisco, to cost about $40,000.

H. Muraki, H. Asano, S. Hattori and K. Yokoi, operating the Mission theatre in Sacramento, Cal., have transferred the business to Mission Theatres, Inc.

W. M. Nelson has been named manager of the Menlo theatre in Palo Alto, Cal., purchased recently by the Harvey Amusement Company. The theatre is to be reopened when alterations are completed.

Both RKO first-run theatres in Boston will be extensively modernized, according to Division Manager Charles Koerner. The Keith's Memorial, managed by George French, will be given new RCA sound equipment. The Boston, managed by Ben Domingo, will be reseated. Other minor improvements will be made at both houses.

The Alpine Circuit, with headquarters at Terra Alta, W. Va., has taken over the Nadine, at Middleborne, W. Va., formerly operated by M. G. McIntyre. Other houses in the West Virginia territory will be acquired in the near future, according to Charles Anderson, head of the circuit.

H. Vernon Johnson, formerly manager of the Rialto theatre in Columbus, Ga., has been transferred to Macon, Ga., as manager of the Rialto in that city. He succeeds Bill Johnson, who resigned to accept a position in Dallas, Tex.

George M. Mann and Morgan A. Walsh of San Francisco, have secured the use of the Dingle grammar school auditorium at Woodland, Cal., for the showing of motion pictures, pending the rebuilding of the National theatre, recently damaged by fire.

Frank Baumgart and Louis Kanstein will erect a theatre at Tehachapi, Calif.

Fox Salinas Theatres, Ltd., has taken a lease on the Crystal theatre at Salinas, Cal., owned by Elmer L. Brown.

J. L. Hatcher, now operating the Victoria in Baltimore, Ohio, will build a new 700-seat house at Xenia, Ohio. The construction will be financed by the Federal Savings & Loan Association, amounting to $75,000. Hatcher has taken a 20-year lease on the house, and will dispose of his interests at Baltimore.

The Golden Gate Theatre Company of San Francisco, is preparing to spend $50,000 in remodeling the Haight theatre in that city. Jorgensen & Deichmann are the architects.

Charles A. Thompson, owner of the Gem theatre in Pioche, Nev., is preparing to make alterations to that house.

Louis Gordon, independent operator, has bought out the interest of Arthur Lockwood in the State and Opera House in Waterville, Me. He and Mr. Lockwood acquired these situations from H. H. Paul some weeks ago.

James Hughes has taken full interest in the Sole theatre at Burlington, Colo. Mr. Hughes, who will now make his home in Burlington, also operates houses in Palisades, Neb., and Wray, Colo.

William Yaekle, assistant manager of the Paramount theatre in Hamilton, Ohio, has been named manager of the Gordon in Middletown, O., succeeding Milton Kress, who resigned. Marion Tasso, chief usher at the Paramount, succeeds Mr. Yaekle. Barney Moffett, assistant manager of the Paramount, at Middletown, has been made manager of the Gordon, replacing Bobb Gibbs, Jr., who takes Moffett's post. All houses are units of the Southio circuit, under jurisdiction of Tracy Barham, general manager, with headquarters at Hamilton.

The Penova Theatre Co., has been incorporated at Wellsville, Ohio, with capital of $25,000, by George Davis, C. J. Vogel and Walter B. Uhrling, associated with the Rex Theatre Company, Steubenville, Ohio.

Frank Weir has been appointed assistant manager at the Poli in New Haven, Conn.

Nat Williams, manager of the Rose theatre in Thomasville, Ga., twice arrested in connection with his attempt to operate the theatre on Sunday for a charity benefit, is being boomed for mayor. Mr. Williams is a former member of the city council.

T. & D. Theatres and Fox West Coast Theatres are planning alterations to the Capital theatre, Sacramento, Calif., at an estimated cost of $40,000. L. H. Niskian is the engineer.

Nasser Brothers of San Francisco, will remodel the Strand theatre in Alameda. F. F. Amandes of San Francisco, is the architect.

Benjamin T. Pitts, president of the Pitts Amusement Company, is completing arrangements for the constructon of a new theatre, to cost approximately $140,000, in Fredericksburg, Va. The new structure will be of Colonial architecture. Mr. Pitts is also planning to construct a new playhouse in Richmond, and is adding an $8,000 addition to his theatre at West Point.

The Rex Theatre Company, Steubenville, Ohio, of which W. B. Urling is head, has acquired the Kohler Building in Pomeroy, Ohio, and will convert the building into a 600-seat theatre.

Phil Chakeres, an executive of the State-Regent Corporation, operating a number of houses in Springfield, Ohio, and nearby towns, has returned from an extended visit to California.

Herman F. Jensen, formerly with Essaness Theatres Corporation of Chicago, in charge of maintenance, projection and construction, has become associated with Joe Goldberg, Inc., equipment dealers in Chicago.

Phil A. Frease, operator of theatres in Greater San Francisco, died at Redwood City, Cal., May 17, following a heart attack. He was 48 years old. He was stricken in the Redwood City theatre, which he owned. He also operated theatres at Vacaville and Albany. For years he booked shows for the navy post at Guam, and was formerly vaudeville director for Fanchon & Marco. Surviving are his wife, two daughters and a sister, Mrs. Jenny Blumenthal, who lives in Santa Maria.

Essential Automatic Control In Air-Conditioning Systems

● How operating efficiency and economy depend upon the action of instruments, and what these instruments should be in a plant suited to theatres

IT IS GENERALLY conceded by all those who are in any way associated with the air-conditioning industry, that it is in a pretty unsettled state with few, if any, real standards as to design or methods or standards of practice. This is emphatically impressed on one when exactly the same set of design conditions are given out for a specific job to four or five of the leading companies and the proposals or bids are returned with a difference of six or seven thousand dollars in price in a cost range of fourteen or fifteen thousand dollars.

How is one to account for such a great difference between the high and low bidder? Is it because of greater ingenuity, lower overhead, a more favorable dealership on equipment, or a good engineer designing and competing against cheap, shoddy engineering? Well, I can propound these questions, but I have not yet found the answers that would apply in all cases. But one great difference I do know, and that can be generally found under the heading of controls.

By this time it should be established that controls are not only essential, but indispensable if economical, efficient and satisfactory results are to be obtained. It seems almost inconceivable that a company or individual will consider favorably the investment of from eighteen to twenty thousand dollars for air-conditioning a theatre and then hold back on nine hundred to a thousand dollars, or 5% of the job, for the proper controls. Yet this happens sufficiently often so that it becomes the rule rather than the exception. So frequently has it happened that a bidder on air-conditioning has lost jobs on the narrow margin of cost between the adequate control system and the inadequate, that bidders themselves are inclined to cheat on what they know is the proper system in order to compete on a price basis.

It should be thoroughly appreciated by theatre operators that no operating engineer, regardless of salary or his worth as an engineer, can possibly react and adjust himself to each change of load conditions as can automatic instruments. So when you hear the theatre man say, "I don't need such elaborate controls because I have to employ union engineers anyway," or "I want this plant to be completely automatic so that I won't have to employ an engineer," you know that he does not understand the principle of automatic control. Such statements, frequently heard, indicate a confusion of understanding between the true function of the engineer and the true function of automatic controls. The controls do a delicate job to a degree which cannot be performed by a human being. On the other hand, we all know that controls can't fill the oil reservoir or tighten a fitting.

INSTRUMENT TYPES AND WHAT THEY DO

THE MARKET today in electrical instruments presents one or more instruments which can be adapted to the control of almost any man-created piece of apparatus. Yet the air-conditioning industry, while fully cognizant of the foregoing facts, has not yet developed any standard system of controls which in general will meet the great majority of conditions in the theatre field. The air-conditioning industry and the manufacturers of control instruments are responsible for the viewpoint taken by most buyers of air-conditioning equipment, who look upon controls as a luxury, a necessary evil, an accessory to the job that might easily be dispensed with!

It is time that some of the larger buyers of air-conditioning equipment give serious thought to the correlation and coordination of the various functions of the integral parts of an air-conditioning installation, and endeavor to establish a yardstick for standard comparison.

REASONS FOR CONTROLS

The basic, primary reasons for automatic controls of an air-conditioning plant are:

1. To have the entire system instantly respond to the momentary changing of load conditions, whether atmospheric or whether due to a sudden rise in temperature within the house caused by an influx, say, of five hundred people.
2. The buyer of air-conditioning is entitled to the maximum comfort for his patrons.
3. The necessity for economical operation.
4. The necessity for simplicity of operation.
5. The necessity for control from one point or one set of conditions at one key point.
6. The necessity for the plant to permit easy adjustment for seasonal changes.

In order that controls fulfill all six of these functions properly, the plan of control must be carefully thought out and the instruments themselves must be of unquestioned quality, workmanship and materials, and be designed with accuracy. These points and these only will insure dependable functioning and continuity of operation within the close range required.

CLASSES OF INSTRUMENTS

So that we may all become familiar with the names of some control instruments, the following brief definitions are here given (they really represent classes of instruments):

Thermostat—A device which by changes in dry bulb temperature causes some other mechanism to go into operation. Most thermostats depend upon the unequal expansion or contraction of two different

Don't Let Demon Heat Rob Your Box Office

The reputation of hot theatres travels fast and the audiences stay away. You might as well have a bandit walk away with your money. Why not have your audiences spread the news of your theatre's cool comfort? It pays to let your theatre be their cooling place.

Play Safe with Equalized Kooler-Aire

No longer must you see your box-office "take" diminish because the installation of a cooling system is prohibitive in price. You will be surprised at the moderate cost of a dependable Kooler-Aire System. U. S. metals securely fastened together. Such instruments are said to be bi-metallic, or to operate on the bi-(two)metal principle.

Pressurestat—A device which by changes of pressure exerted upon a flat disc or bellows, will move, and by the use of springs, levers, and adjustments, put into motion or operation, another mechanism, or start or stop another function performed by another piece of apparatus. A pressurestat is frequently connected to the suction line of a compressor, and the pressure on the low side (in the expansion coils) can be used as a guide for starting or stopping the compressor.

Humidistat—A device which reacts to changes in the moisture content (humidity) of air and in turn will open or close valves which add more or reduce the content of the air, so that the instrument will return again to a normal or predetermined condition, resulting from the correcting of a wrong moisture condition of the air. Most humidistats operate by making or breaking a low voltage electric circuit and are generally accurate within a limit of 5% relative humidity.

Hygrostat—A device which reacts to the moisture content in the air. The element most generally used is human hair. Human hair is very sensitive to moisture, expanding and contracting according to the moisture content of the air surrounding it. Some cheaper hygrostats have been put on the market operating by an element that looks like a small ribbon of celephane. The function of the hygrostat is similar to that of the humidistat, but these instruments sense and record changes in atmosphere before the eye can or does detect them on wet bulb thermometers.

Psychrostat—Another device which reacts to changes in the moisture content of the air.

These last three instruments generally come under the head of humidistats, each operating upon a different principle, but all reacting to the moisture in air. In theatre air-conditioning, conditions have changed somewhat during the last few years: We used to attempt to air-condition not only the auditorium, but the lobbies, foyers, lounges, rest rooms and toilets. This is now considered a somewhat luxurious procedure—foyers and lobbies are somewhat cooled by spilling a quantity of cooled air equal in amount to the fresh air taken into the system through these spaces; and toilets, lounges and rest rooms are taken care of by replacement of the air exhausted by the toilet exhaust fan with the cooler air of the auditorium. In brief, our control problem is simplified, except in very large theatres, because our plants serve but a single space, the auditorium of the theatre.

ESSENTIALS OF AUTOMATIC CONTROL

IT IS NECESSARY to review the cycle through which the air travels in the summer time before discussing the necessary controls. First, a quantity of air is sucked or drawn in from the outside by the blower or fan. This quantity today is maximum 7½ cubic feet per minute per seat in the theatre (some air-conditioning contractors reduce this amount to 5½ cubic feet and once in a while to 3 cubic feet per seat, definitely cutting corners—a bad practice). This quantity of fresh air is mixed with about 12½ cubic feet per minute per seat, in the theatre, of air drawn from the theatre (some contractors will design plants to handle only a total of 12 to 15 cubic feet per minute per person, not standard practice). Then the whole quantity of air is filtered, and from the filter it passes (either all or part of it) through coils which cool or chill the air.

If part of the air was by-passed around the cooling coils, it is then mixed with the colder air and the mixture is then delivered to the aduitorium. The step described, of by-passing a portion of the air around the cooling coils, has up to within the past few weeks been covered by patents owned by one company, and any others using the idea have had to pay a royalty for its use. The supreme court of one of the States has recently ruled against these patent rights, thereby setting aside a decision of a lower court, and it is assumed that at this writing the by-pass principle is available for use by anybody. The use of extended (finned) surface direct expansion coils in the direct stream of air with the newer refrigerant has permitted simpler methods of control in most jobs.

INSTRUMENTS REQUIRED

In the above very briefly described central cooling system the following control system is about the minimum that could be installed:

A combination temperature and humidity control instrument should be located in the return air duct. This instrument would measure the temperature within the auditorium and start or stop the compressor, as the dry bulb temperature would rise above a predetermined temperature, or stop the compressor as the dry bulb fell below a predetermined temperature. The humidity control of this instrument would be set, and serve as the high limit of the humidity range, starting the compressor should the humidity in the auditorium exceed the predetermined high limit.

To refine this system somewhat we could install another thermostat in the delivery duct, which would become operative at the low limit of the dry bulb range and stop the compressor. The inclusion of a low dry bulb limit instrument is desirable even though the exact low temperature at which air may be delivered depends to some extent upon the size and shape of the auditorium, the location of delivery points, and the velocities at which the air is delivered.

Instead of having these instruments start and stop the compressor, it is good practice to have them operate a pressure control which in turn will operate a solenoid valve in the high pressure line to the coils, which will reduce the amount of refrigerant being expanded in the coils. In this way the refrigerating, or cooling, effect of the coil is reduced.

The high-limit humidistat is most necessary on direct expansion coil jobs on wet, damp or humid days. The elementary plan of control has at times in the past been considered an elaborate system. Of course it still functions today, but the more modern system is far more positive and over-shoots the predetermined conditions less frequently. The over-shooting in the elementary plan was largely caused by the fact that it was a two-position system, either off or on. In-between conditions were not satisfactorily met. This two-position objection could of course be cared for by a multispeed motor on the compressor, or by multiple compressor installations, both of which have in recent years been resorted to.

Now let's add the feature of operating the louvers on the fresh air intake and the return air intake, plus the operation of by-pass louvers to the above-described elementary system. These additions will definitely create a more flexible system.

A temperature control or thermostat should be installed in the air stream as it leaves the cooling coil. As this temperature falls and reaches the lower limit, the thermostat operates a motor which opens the by-pass dampers, and a portion of the air will pass around the cooling coils and mix with the cooled air, thereby raising the temperature of the mixture to conform to the preset range on the thermostat.

Another thermostat should be located in the fresh air duct connected with a motor to operate the fresh air louvers. As the temperature of the outside air rises and becomes hotter, the thermostat causes the motor to operate and close the fresh air intake. If the outside temperature becomes colder, the thermostat will modulate the motor causing the fresh air louvers to open.

The above briefly describes the simplest set of controls and then shows how that set of controls can be added to.

Suffice it to say, for the time being, that with the increasing complexity of air-conditioning installations, and the insistance of the buyers of air-conditioning that real results be accomplished in terms of comfort, efficiency and at the lowest operating cost, more and more dependence must be placed on automatic controls. Due to the ability of automatic controls to coordinate and interlock the many variable conditions and various functions performed by the many units of the plant, and in a manner almost, if not entirely, impossible to accomplish by manual operation, it is a positive fact that they do bring about lower operating costs. The lower cost results from the ability of the control equipment to maintain the operation of the plant within narrow predetermined limits, and the control devices react promptly to changing conditions which would require minutes or hours to be put into effect by an operating engineer.

Before I close I want to make one statement, which may or may not have been impressed upon you before, and that is that air-conditioning is primarily a problem of control and regulation of a combination of variable elements. How can we afford then to chisel on the control equipment to operate a plant representing a fifteen thousand dollar investment?—J. T. K.

New Model RCA Photophone Rotary Stabilizer Soundhead

AN IMPROVED model of the rotary stabilizer soundhead, incorporating distinct improvements of detail, recently brought out by RCA Manufacturing Company, Inc., has a number of features distinguishing it from previous models of RCA photophone equipment. The main frame casting is unique in design, in that it mounts the driving mechanism only. The sound mechanism, including exciter lamp, lens system, photo-cell and the rotary stabilizer itself, are component parts of a second assembly, mounted on their own casting, which is held to the main frame by cushion mountings of special oil-resisting synthetic rubber.

The rotary stabilizer drum is, of course, driven by the film itself. The only mechanical connections between the sound mechanism are the mounting cushions, the loops in the film, and the asbestos-covered wires to the photocell and exciter lamp.

The process of mounting or removing the projector has been vastly simplified by provision of two large, key-hole shaped slots in the top of the soundhead. The two mounting bolts are threaded into the bottom of the projector before it is placed on the soundhead. The bolt heads can then be inserted through the enlarged portion of the keyholes, the projector moved forward to its proper position, and the bolts tightened. To remove the projector, it is only necessary to loosen the bolts, move the projector back, and detach it. Slotting the soundhead top also eliminates the use of shims between projector and soundhead. Proper gear mesh can be obtained by moving the projector forward until the drive gear meshes correctly with the soundhead gear.

The rotary stabilizer has been rebuilt as an hermetically sealed unit, on the basis of service records which show this improvement to be entirely practical. The change prevents oil seepage, reduces costs, and improves the mass ratio between the stabilizer parts. The description proceeds pictorially:

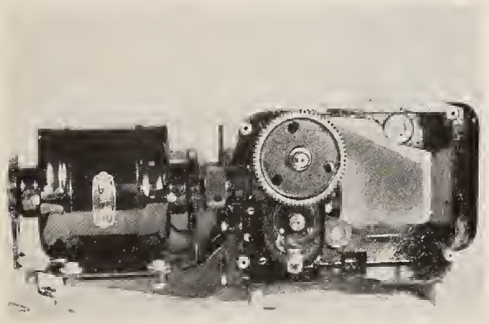

Figure 6. Drive side. Housing of motor flexible coupling in place. Sprocket drive housing, equipped with oil shaft and oil cup, in place. Lubrication of the drive is provided by the action of the lower gear running in oil. Projector drive gear is in place over the upper sprocket.

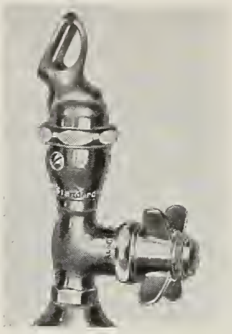
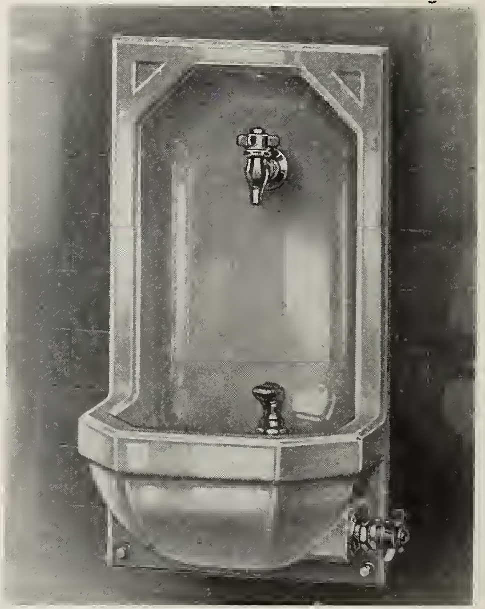
Sanitary Drinking Water Equipment For the Theatre

DISCOVERY THAT the early and the conventional types of bubbler fountains for supplying drinking water, did not end all of the evils of the common drinking cup, has led to the designing of equipment for adapting such fountains for the use of sanitary paper cups. At the same time, more attention has been given to the faucet fountain for use with sanitary cups. Although equipment of this kind is well known, health authorities still find reason for drawing attention to the unsanitary character of unguarded bubblers (such views formed the subject of an article in the February 8th issue of BETTER THEATRES). In general, the public health factors involved are of concern to theatre operator, and there is also the added consideration represented by the reluctance on the part of certain types of theatre patrons to use bubbler fountains which did not have guards—some mothers, in particular, will not let their children drink from them.



Bubbler fixture ("Standard Renu") with guard and readily attachable to existing bubbler fountains. The water issues at an angle.



An alcove type drinking fountain ("Standard") suitable in appearance for theatres, attached either to wall as pictured, or in a deep recess. It is of vitreous china and is equipped with both angle-stream bubbler and a faucet for cups.

Most manufacturers of, and dealers in, sanitary fixtures are sources of equipment suitable to the adaptation of existing fountains to the use of individual drinking cups.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticism. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

We are planning on building a 900-seat theatre, on a large lot where we will have more than twice enough room. We would like for you to give us any suggestions pertaining to the erection from the ground on up, heating, cooling, seating arrangement, etc.—M.C.

THE ANSWER:

So that we should be able to give a more detailed answer to your inquiry, we wish you had given more information about the size of the lot and if this new theatre is to be of the one-floor type. We will assume thit this is the case in forming our reply.

The most economical seating layout is to have a center bank of 14 seats across, with an aisle on each side and two wall banks of seven seats each. This will give you 28 seats across the width of the auditorium and cut the amount of aisle space down to the minimum. This arrangement will require a building 60 feet wide, and a depth of 100 feet for the auditorium proper, which dimensions give every good proportion.

Plan for a lobby 25 feet or more deep, and 18 feet wide. The foyer should be 12 feet wide, with men's and women's lounges and toilet rooms at each end along the side of the lobby.

Four exit doors will be required, one on each side of stage; one at each end of the foyer.

The best location for the heating plant is under the stage, if provisions are to be made for a stage. Since you state that you have more space than you required, dressing rooms could be built in back of the stage. Your State code governs the changes of air required in such a theatre. Use forced air for auditorium, and radiation in the other parts of the house. We recommend that you install an air washer, and if the water is cold enough, it can be used for summer cooling through the same system as the hot air is provided. Also, install air filters—they will help keep the theatre clean. Cooling can be done as described above or by a refrigerating process—all according to the amount of money which you may wish to spend.

For the structural parts of the building, a steel skeleton with masonry curtain walls could be used; or use reinforced concrete walls and piers with steel trusses. This, however, depends in what part of the country your theatre is located, as the cost of these different types of construction depends a great deal on locality. Be sure to provide effective acoustical treatment.

THE QUESTION:

We have a good building 25 feet wide, 100 feet deep and about 17 feet high in which we wish to build a 300-seat house. Would like to know how much drop there should be in the floor after figuring 16 feet out for lobby and foyer. Also, how large should the balcony be?

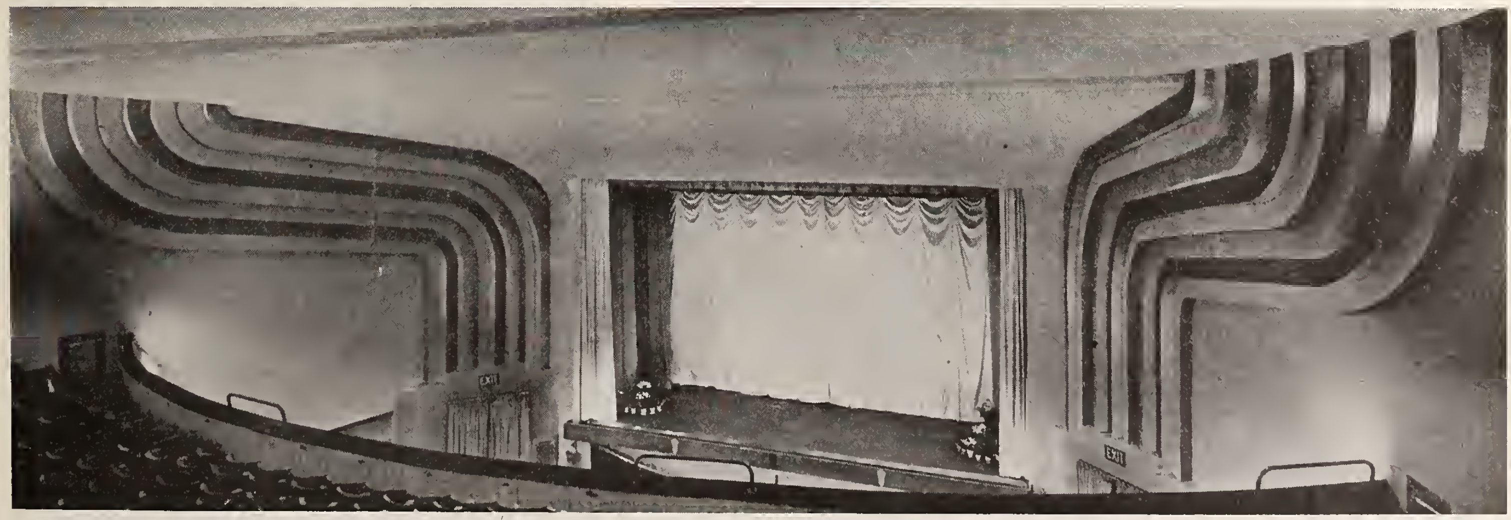
With the 16 feet for lobby and foyer, how much would you recommend for each? We plan to have the rest room in the basement in order to conserve space for the auditorium. Is that a satisfactory arrangement?—L.V.B.

THE ANSWER:

If you are satisfied with a 16-foot space for lobby and foyer, a building 25 feet wide and 100 feet deep will be large enough to accommodate 300 seats without constructing a balcony.

A 36-inch slope in the auditorium floor will be sufficient. For such a small house, a foyer 6 feet wide will be satisfactory.

The arrangement of placing toilet rooms in a basement is used in a great many instances, but there should be provisions



An auditorium design relying for decorative effect almost entirely on a direction form of wall and ceiling surfaces in conjunction with directionally reflected light. The walls and ceiling are of plaster, tinted in a color scheme consisting in pink flecked with gold and red and a green and gold combination along the facetted features at the forward cornices. This auditorium is that of the new Argosy theatre in Sheerness, England, designed by F. E. Bromige for East Kent Cinemas, Ltd. The seating capacity is 935.

THE QUESTION:

ENCLOSED ARE two photos of theatre front, which has been painted too often. We would like to modernize the front with Carrara structural glass unless there is some other way not so costly.

What suggestion could you make in remodeling, with the three windows taken away from above the tonight sign, and perhaps some kind of corrugated metal to go across the entire front just below neon sign may. The doors and photo frames taken from the front, the ticket office moved to where the photos are between the two sets of double doors. Would you advise taking the two neon signs theatre away, removing the tin around the canopy and using a changeable sign in place of the neon theatre.

The entire front must be repainted, but we find some frames must be replaced so we might change the entire front if not too expensive. Have read many of your suggestions in the BETTER THEATRES and find them very interesting.—M.T.

THE ANSWER:

STRUCTURAL GLASS is a splendid material to use in modernizing a theatre front. It really is not very expensive, and so little of this material is required. We suggest that to obtain good results, small blocks about 8x16 inches be used. You may figure the cost at about $2 per square foot for this material.

Why not install a new ticket booth between the entrance doors where the poster frame is now located? If the large window has no purpose, why not place a large poster frame with Lumiline lamps along all four sides, with glass doors in front. In that space it could be set recessed in the center of the structural glass panel, which would cover the 12-foot part. This glass could be run up to the metal cornice. It would not be necessary to carry the glass above the marquee because it would not be noticeable, especially when new attraction boards were installed.

We certainly advise you to remove the signs saying "Theatre," as they do not mean anything. Install attraction boards with two or three lines of changeable silhouette letters all around the marquee.

Use very vivid colors for repainting the front, such as blue, tangerine, yellow, etc. The structural glass comes in various colors. Do not be afraid to use color, as it certainly attracts attention and you will obtain a very effective modern front at very little expense.

THE QUESTION:

ENCLOSED FIND cross-section sketch of my present theatre. I am considering remodeling to include a balcony that would seat at least one hundred people. In view of the rear height of my house, will it be practical to include a balcony in my remodeling plans so as to afford clear vision for all customers? Also, what suggestions have you on arranging the projection room so that the light rays will not be disturbed by people walking in front locating seats?

I don't want to change my present ceiling, and would it be advisable to have the projection room on the next floor or suspended from the center of the ceiling? Am planning on redecorating ceiling and side walls with Nu-Wood and don't want to spend a lot of money unless I can work in more seats. Would appreciate your suggestions as soon as possible and an estimate of cost.—C.W.J.

THE ANSWER:

IT WILL be impossible to install a balcony with a seating capacity of 100 seats in your theatre, even if the present ceiling is to be removed, which you state you do not want to do. It will require 10 rows of seats, plus a cross-aisle, to obtain 100 seats.

To maintain vision of the entire screen on the lower floor, the last row of the balcony should start at the front wall of the building, and the top of balcony would be on about the same level as the present ceiling. Therefore, there is no space for the projection room, since no seats could be placed on each side of it—this space would have to accommodate the stairways.

Suspending the projection room from the ceiling would not solve this problem, as it would interfere with vision from top of balcony, and we doubt if this is permissible unless your building is of fireproof construction.

The material you mention for redecorating walls and ceiling are satisfactory. This material should be shrunk before application. It should be applied to a plaster base with a cement especially manufactured for this purpose, not nailed. The cost of this material, applied, is between 8c and 10c per square foot.

THE QUESTION:

I AM RESEATING my theatre and would like your advice on seating arrangement. My theatre is 31 feet, 3 inches wide and from end of foyer to stage is 78 feet. My stage is 18 feet deep, and screen sets 10 feet back on stage.

There are three pilasters on each side, which extend out 8 inches.

I am enclosing a sketch of the floor. As you will notice, there is an offset in the building which is 12 feet, 6 inches wide and extends into the seating space.—E.E.B.

THE ANSWER:

IN ORDER to avoid traffic confusion and a cut-up appearance, we suggest that you meet the conditions created by the difference between the depths of the seating area at the sides by using the following seating plan:

Arrange for 3-foot aisles between a center bank and side banks, each side bank row containing four 18-inch chairs. These chairs will be narrower than is commendable, but four chairs of this width will permit the aisle on the short side to continue flush with the wall at the rear on that side, and join with a 3-foot space at the rear to form an uninterrupted traffic lane from the auditorium entrance.

The center bank would be arranged in 27 rows (32-inch spacing, back to back), each row containing six 20-inch chairs and a 19-inch chair at each aisle. This would give you 216 chairs in the center bank. The left side bank would have 27 rows, or 108 chairs. The short side bank would have 23 rows, or 92 chairs. The total seating capacity would thus be 416.

However, from these side capacities you will have to deduct six chairs to allow for the pilasters.

The space between the auditorium entrance and the last row of chairs would, as indicated above, be 3 feet wide, leading to the aisles. Since your screen is 10 feet from the edge of the platform, this arrangement has been calculated with a distance of 3 feet between the first row and the platform.

THE QUESTION:

I AM FIGURING on building a new theatre, frame building, that will seat 350 or 400 on the lower floor, and a balcony that will seat 40 or 50 negroes, negro entrance to be on the side, but the same cashier will collect from both white and negroes. Do you have a plan that would suit this occasion? My lot is 50 x250.—O.O.H.

THE ANSWER:

SORRY TO inform you that this department does not furnish any plans or sketches. It simply gives advice and suggestions.

Your problem should be an easy one to solve. But first you should consult your local or State authorities to find out if it is permissible to erect such a building with frame construction.

FOR the sixth time since its inception in 1931, Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association meets in annual convention with the manufacturers of theatre equipment and supplies—this year, at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, from June 5th to 8th. To those manufacturers, it extends its good wishes for their spirit of progressiveness and their cooperation.

As in the past, the primary purpose of the convention is to exchange ideas—to discuss ways and means of affording the trade better merchandise, better service. The "Independent" member-dealers learn first hand what is what in new and advanced equipment and supplies. But more than that, they pass on to the manufacturers the comments and criticisms which they receive in their dealings with exhibitors and projectionists. Types and Uses of Rubber Mats in the Theatre

RUBBER MATS have specific applications to a number of areas in the motion picture theatre. In fact, in most instances they are advisable as floor coverings in vestibules and outer lobbies, and to be recommended throughout the traffic lanes between the street and foyer or auditorium.

The dirt and mud and grit brought into the theatre on the shoes of patrons impose both a maintenance and a replacement charge on the business. Rubber mats, as developed today for use in buildings of a public nature, with corrugations and perforations, remove a great deal of the dirt before the patron reaches the carpeted areas.

At the same time, the use of rubber mats in vestibules and lobbies supplies a flooring of suitable appearance and durability without recourse to costlier materials, such as tiles. They have a further advantage over even such material as terrazzo, in that wear takes place along the line of traffic no matter what the flooring, and rubber mats are readily replaceable, throughout the floor area or in the worn sections.

Rubber mats, in single units of size and shape to fit, on stair treads. The coloration harmonizes with that of the marble steps. (Academy theatre, New York City.)

Yet another factor is noise. This is not always of importance, particularly where a foyer intervenes between the lobby and the auditorium. The motion picture today, however, requires as low a noise level in the auditorium as possible, and hard floorings can be a source of sound interference. The rubber mat, of course, provides a noiseless approach to the auditorium.

Rubber mats in lobbies. The upper view shows a simple checkerboard pattern in the Birmingham theatre, Birmingham, Ala. The other installation is that of the Beacon theatre in New York City, in which each of four separate recesses contain a mat of highly ornamental design.

Rubber mats can be obtained today in either stock or special patterns, with a variety of color combinations to choose from. Some of those illustrated in the Tyl-a-mat installations pictured are of special type, with the name of the theatre (showing the possible addition of advertising value to this type of flooring) worked into the design. Others are of stock type or conventional patterns. The illustrations also indicate the five principal applications of rubber mats to theatre floor, areas—vestibule, lobby, outer edge of foyer, stairways and isolated traffic points, such as in front of fountains, candy dispensers, etc.

VESTIBULE

Between the sidewalk and the lobby doors, rubber mats can be installed in patterns to harmonize with the decorative scheme, with the name of the theatre worked into the design; or in conventional patterns of neutral tone. Almost always it is necessary, in the interest of good appearance, to have the mat shaped to the floor, fitting snugly around the box office and against wainscoting or within the recess bordered by decorative tiling.

LOBBY

In the lobby, especially, the concrete floor should be recessed, and it is better to provide a border instead of bringing the mat to the wainscot, for sake of cleanliness as well as appearance. Inasmuch as the vestibule and lobby are more or less continuous as architectural elements, it is advisable to have the vestibule and lobby mats identical, or at least closely similar, in pattern and coloration. This, of course,

Trends Towards Simplification In Sound Equipment Design

● Examining characteristics of reproduction apparatus today which represent efforts to unify the system and simplify both its operation and its maintenance

By WILSON N. DURHAM

PROJECTION ROOM test of sound via ear, while another and entirely different sound track is being played through the screen speakers, is one of the many improvements in operating technic and efficiency that have been made possible by modern types of sound equipment.

It is today perfectly practical, at insignificant expense, to adjust exciter lamp focus or film guide positions, test sound quality, etc., during the course of a show, without interruption to that show or the slightest inconvenience to the audience. Test films can be run while the performance is in progress, frequency measurements made, and many other types of work can be done that until recently made bad sound necessary until the end of the day, because repairs were impossible while an audience was present.

Technically, of course, the same procedure might always have been available, but the commercial considerations were such that not even the most expensively equipped theatres undertook in the past to install the arrangements needed. However, today the simplicity and low cost of amplifying apparatus has made the dual amplifying channel a common feature of theatre equipment, and with a dual amplifying channel and suitable switching arrangements there is no difficulty whatever in operating one projector through the stage speakers while the other projector plays a different sound track through the monitor. All that is necessary in the way of operating technic in connection with such work is an observer in the auditorium who will telephone the projection room in the unlikely event that it may be necessary to return monitor reproduction to the same sound that is being reproduced behind the screen; and if that step does prove necessary, a mere flip of a switch restores standard operation in every respect.

Tests of this kind are further facilitated by the greater simplicity of modern volume measuring equipment. The volume indicator and output meter are, in the newer apparatus, component parts of the monitor speaker assembly, and are available, together with the monitor speaker, at prices lower than the cost of the speaker alone only a relatively short time ago. The indispensable volume indicator, without which maintenance of satisfactory sound quality is almost impossible, may now be regarded as a standard part of the permanent theatre installation, as much so as the plate current milliammeter; and tests made with its aid are standard parts of daily routine, not special events to be undertaken by a visiting service engineer once in the course of a number of service visits.

These improvements are relatively indispensable in the case of extended frequency reproduction, in which correct positioning of the exciter lamp, to mention only one example, is most satisfactorily obtained only with assistance of the buzz track and volume meter. But while required by the new, higher standard of sound quality, they are made practicable for all theatres only by the new, vastly lower cost of apparatus.

MAINTENANCE

Servicing difficulties that have been to a large extent eliminated by the increased reliability of present day equipment, are further minimized, not only by the practicability of dual channel systems, but by the relatively very low cost of repair and replacement parts, removing any incentive for keeping doubtful parts in service or for limiting the stock of spares kept on hand. Thus, the writer is personally familiar with a theatre amplifier of 40 watts output power, more power than the largest theatres had available three or four years ago, for which a complete set of tubes can be purchased for the price of $5.54. That price may be compared with the cost for a single tube, up to $18, and in some cases higher, that was common in the very recent past. Translated into practical terms, this means that two complete sets of spares, in addition to the set in use, can be kept on hand for 1/3 less than the capital investment formerly needed to keep a single spare tube; and a very slight fraction of the investment formerly needed to maintain a full set of spares. What is true of tubes is also true, in varying degree, of all other spare and replacement parts used for theatre sound.

What is true of parts, is, of course, also true of finished apparatus which consists only of those parts wired in suitable combinations.

With greater inherent reliability, dual channel systems for emergency switchover, repairs instantly possible during the course of performance, and parts inexpensive enough to be stocked in any selections and quantities that may reasonably be called for, servicing of sound takes on an entirely new aspect, and becomes immeasurably a simpler and less troublesome problem.

SIMPLIFICATION

The new simplicity and economy has been extended even to the cost of original installation. The sound system illustrated happens to be one of the modern systems with which the writer is particularly familiar. That illustration covers a complete installation in a single unit, omitting nothing whatever except projector sound attachments and screen speakers.

The monitor is included; the rectifier for d.c. supply to exciter lamps constitutes the bottom panel of the assembly. The two centre panels are the two amplifiers, each of 40 watts output. A switching panel, by means of which one projector and amplifier can be operated to the screen speakers while the second projector and amplifier drive the monitor, is shown between the monitor and the upper of the two amplifiers. The volume indicator meter is shown on the monitor panel, to the left of the monitor speaker itself.

This assemblage is 20 feet wide and 10 feet deep, 3 feet 4 inches high. It mounts between the two projectors, and the process of installing this complete sound system, except for wiring, consists of driving four expansion bolts into the front wall of the projection room, or, still more simply, of standing the assemblage on the floor or on a low metal stand suitably placed.

The wiring in installing this equipment is simplified by the fact that all inter-connections between apparatus, which formerly were made in the theatre, in conduit, and in accordance with costly municipal regulations, have now been done in the factory under ideal conditions for low cost wiring. Six different connections to this assemblage constitute the complete installation. All of these connections may be in flexible cable. Two run to each projector sound attachment, and consist of a shielded cable connected to the photo electric cell, and a short piece of BX connected to the exciter lamp. The fifth connection runs to the stage speakers, still and unavoidably an expensive part of sound installation—except, of course, where wires are already installed. The sixth connection from this assembly runs to the AC supply line. If screen speaker lines are already available the entire process of installing the system may take less than two hours.

This efficiency is made possible by the fact that component units formerly scattered about the projection room have been united in a single rack. For example, the rectifier panel for lighting exciter lamps was always, until recently, a separate unit, located at a distance, and requiring installation of conduit runs. Similarly, the monitor speaker was until recently located away from and sometimes at a considerable distance from the amplifier, requiring more conduit. Lastly, earlier practice, made necessary by the bulk and weight of apparatus used, was to ship component portions of the rack assembly to the theatre separately, and mount and wire them upon the rack in the projection room, to the profit of the electrical contractor, but to the cost of the theatre. The equipment shown in Figure 1 is small enough, and light enough, to be shipped to the theatre completely assembled, and to be carried to the projection room with less difficulty than in the case of a single power amplifier of earlier types. Wiring, including the complicated switch wiring, is done before the system is shipped.

A unit sound system representing the newer simplified methods of arrangement for all elements of the system except the soundheads and speakers.

To the engineer, the most interesting feature of these improvements is that they came about logically through advance in technical design. To take only one point, the efficiency of electron emission and control in the newer tubes is such that tube filaments today need only a small fraction of the heater current formerly required to do the same work, with the result that a complete modern amplifier may logically weigh less then the filament transformer alone in apparatus of earlier design.

A WORD ABOUT PROJECTION KNOWLEDGE AND POPULATION

SOME OF YOU may remember that I have more than once remarked upon a tendency among men in large city theatres to feel that they have advanced in knowledge as far as they can, and that it is now only necessary that they study such new things as may be introduced into the field of projection. This is not likely to be true of projectionists in small cities and towns. Very often, considering the equipment and the films received, they produce a better result than in many a large city theatre.

There is a reason for this. The small town man has no feeling of superiority. On the contrary, he feels it still necessary that he study and learn all he can.

This was exemplified in my recent trip. On several occasions the entire projectionist membership of small local unions drove through rain, 40, 50, 75 and 100 miles on the chance that they might learn something from my address. In four instances men drove over 150 miles to be present at the meeting where I was to speak. On the other hand, in one large city the executive board of the union refused to call the men together to hear the talk, although a beautiful meeting place and a really very fine lunch was provided for all who attended. In that city there were 96 men present, all but six of whom were division managers, theatre managers, assistant theatre managers and exchange managers! The half-dozen were projectionists.

In another large city the union merely informed me that it was "not interested." The exhibitors, however, expressed much regret that they could not accept on the date offered because an important affair was to be held by a theatrical club in the city that day.

Now I do not pose as a Solomon, but it is logical to suppose that a man who has labored in the interests of projection as I have for 27 years, may reasonably be expected to be able to deliver an address to projectionists having at least some value; and certainly, unless men assume that they already know everything there is to know, about projection, it then is their duty to attend such meetings on the chance that they and their craft may be benefited. It certainly is not to their credit when they refuse an opportunity to do so.

No projectionist is justified in estimating the extent of his knowledge purely on the basis of the last local census, or on the seating capacity of the theatre he works in.

EQUIPMENT FOR A VERY SMALL THEATRE

EARL CONRAD of Breaux Bridge, La., says "In the May 2d issue of BETTER THEATRES is an article captioned 'How I Built Myself a Theatre Business in a Hamlet of 400.' Now that is precisely what we propose to attempt doing. Our little town may not be as prosperous as the one described in the aforesaid article, but we have a thickly populated outlying country. Fifteen miles from where we propose opening we have a 600-seat house. If the theatre we have in mind, 276 capacity, does a third the business of the other we will be satisfied.

"We now come to the question, detailed answer to which is requested. We would like to know the most economical manner in which to equip the little theatre, considering what it now contains. We are leasing from one who has been operating it with one projector, with of course one soundhead. The equipment is: one amplifier, battery operated; two model 6-A Powers projectors; one soundhead, make unknown; one battery-operated amplifier, one speaker. No motor for one of the projectors. Please advise as to what you deem necessary.

"The sound is fair—we believe good enough. Yet we might buy a cheap a.c. amplifier to save time and trouble. One Powers runs quietly and gives good results. The other produces good results but makes an awful clatter when in operation. Would you suggest the purchase of just one new soundhead? Will soundheads of different makes operate successfully? What is your opinion of a battery-operated amplifier?"

First of all, Friend Conrad, assuming you have at least a moderate amount of capital available, you are going to operate a theatre, however small and modest, for the purpose of entertaining your public. First of all, if the amplifier be a good one and it be properly handled, there is no reason why it should not be satisfactory if supplied by battery, but it would be well to have the batteries inspected by a competent battery man to make sure they are in good shape. Next, much of course depends upon your projectors, and one of them has an intermittent movement badly out of adjustment or badly worn (or both), or else its film track (probably the guard back of the intermittent sprocket) is not properly adjusted. Hold the rotating shutter stationary and if you can rotate the intermittent (not the sound) flywheel as much as 5/16ths of an inch, measured at its rim, that mechanism is in need of a general overhauling, which may be properly done only at the factory or some repair shop approved by the manufacturer. If the intermittent flywheel rim cannot be rotated 5/16ths of an inch, then the intermittent movement, gear train and bearings are not too badly worn and your projectionist should be able to put the mechanism into condition himself.

As to the soundhead, I cannot of course know from what you say whether or not the result from it is anything more than passable, and you don't want passable business at the box office if you can get more. My own judgment is that with a nondescript soundhead and one speaker the results cannot be as good as they might and should be. Seems to me it would surely be wise to install another soundhead. If the one you have is a good one, all right. Get another of the same kind.

PECULIAR MARKING ON SOUND TRACK

TOM WATSON, projectionist of the Princess theatre in Oskaloosa, Ia., submits a film clipping upon the sound track of which is a broad, most peculiar mark, the nature of which I cannot determine. It is about 2 inches long and about two-thirds the width of the track itself. At either end are several thin marks such as might be made were something drawn along it under pressure, but in the central section it has an appearance, under the microscope, suggesting that a roller covered with printer's ink had passed along the track. That is not what happened—such is merely the appearance. Friend Watson says:

"Am inclosing film sample clipped from a United Artist feature. Please tell me how the damage was done. How can I be expected to place decent sound before audiences if exchanges hand out this sort of thing? These marks appear every seven frames and last for two frames each during an entire reel. And let me tell you, Pop, it sounds like what you have several times called lleH. Seems to me that after all the fuss that has been raised, the exchanges would take the hint and put some real inspectors on the job."

I cannot imagine anything that would inflict such damage every seven frames throughout an entire reel. The only thing I can even suspect is some cleaning machine. Certainly a projector could not possibly do it.

A QUEER CASE OF FILM IGNITION

R. M. GITTINGS, projectionist of the Amuse-U theatre in LaHarpe, Ill., has had a queer thing happen which he describes as follows:

"Have been projectionist here for two years. Projected for five years back in silent days. Have used Motiograph, Powers and Simplex. Recently I had an experience that has me completely stumped. Would not have thought it could possibly be, had it not occurred before my eyes. Am writing to ask whether or not you can offer any reasonable explanation of the matter.

"I was projecting the first reel of a comedy when the film broke between the lower sprocket and the soundhead. I immediately shut off both the light and motor, but quick as I was, several feet of film piled up in the lower part of the projector mechanism. Opening the casing door I started to take it out. My hand was about 2 feet from the film end when the end burst into flame. Instantly I threw it on the floor and succeeded in stamping out the fire. The question is this: The film end did not come into contact with the light beam at any time after the break. When it burst into flame it was away from the mechanism and in contact with nothing but thin air. What is the answer?

"In closing let me say I enjoy your Comments in BETTER THEATRES, and your new Bluebook of Projection certainly is well worth the money."

A queer happening, indeed, and one I believe no man could explain with certainty. But who has a good guess?

DEFINITIONS OF TERMS APPLIED TO MAGNETISM

J. L. GRANBY of Memphis, Tenn., asks, "Will you tell me exactly what the following terms mean: (1) Magnetic Iron Ore. (2) Magnetic Inclination. (3) Magnetic Leakage. (4) Magnetic Belting. (5) Magnetic Permeability. I have been studying magnetism and have been unable to find any definitions of these terms, so I come to the 'Old Reliable.' "

I don't mind admitting that I had quite a time digging out definitions of a couple of them myself. Here they are:

(1) A native oxide of iron which has the power of attracting particles of iron. In crystallized form it is known as lodestone.

(2) Term used to describe the dip or inclination of a magnetic needle that is free to move in a vertical plane. It varies at different points. At the North Pole the needle would dip or point straight down.

(3) Stray lines of magnetic force that pass around the armature—of a dynamo, for example—instead of through it.

(4) A kind of belting that has strips of thin iron inserted in its body, so that when passing around a magnetized iron pulley the tendency to slip is decreased.

(5) Term used to describe the amount of resistance encountered by magnetic current in a substance. It represents the conductivity of a substance for magnetic lines of force. Its tendency is to decrease as magnetization increases, until at the point of saturation the resistance is so high that there can be no flow at all.

PLEASED WITH IMAGE SIZE REDUCTION

SOME WHILE ago a California projectionist wrote asking for an expression of opinion as to whether or not the screen image in the theatre where he works should not be reduced, and if so, how much. I replied saying the size being used (width 22 feet, 6 inches) was very much too large and should be reduced to not exceeding 20 feet, but that if the theatre were my own I would cut it down to 18 feet. Here is a letter just received from the projectionist:

"Thanks a million for your letter of a short while since. It did the trick. I had talked quite some while about reducing the screen image, but got nowhere until I showed the manager your letter. He then agreed to a trial, so I ordered two sets of lenses, one to reduce to 20 feet and one to reduce to 18 feet.

"I installed and used the 20-foot size for a few days. The manager finally admitted the picture looked much better and agreed to permit it to remain that size. Then one morning I went down early, installed the lenses to reduce to 18 feet, adjusted the screen drapes and—well, he

And he might have added that the value of the front half of the auditorium is increased immeasurably. It is there the oversized screen image does the greatest amount of harm.

MORE REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

IT WILL BE recalled that on my way to Chicago for the Society of Motion Picture Engineers convention, I addressed meetings of projectionists and theatre owners and managers in many cities. On my way home I did likewise.

SOUTH BEND

Leaving Chicago, my first stop was South Bend, Ind., which boasts a population of approximately 100,000 and tries to sell something like 12,000 to 14,000 seats each day. Thirty-five thousand of the people are Polish, or of Polish extraction. Double features are run by all except one house. C. V. Cofell, manager of the State theatre, and J. R. Wheeler of the Colfax, both Balaban & Katz houses, agree that it is giving the pubic far more than it is entitled to at South Bend prices, which range from 10c to 35c, with a large majority of seats in the lower price brackets.

The meeting was preceded by an excellent beefsteak dinner and was attended by a total of 72 people, including twelve managers representing nine South Bend houses, two in Mishawaka, one in Niles, Mich., and one in Benton Harbor, Mich. There were eleven projectionists from Elkhart, and eight from Benton Harbor. Fred Champagne, electrical inspector for the city of South Bend, was present.

LIMA, OHIO

The Lima local that sponsored the meeting has only 17 members, a part of whom are stage hands. Therefore, although men from other towns and cities were invited to and did attend (two of them traveling 75 miles through rain), the meeting was not a large one. Unfortunately, being weary almost to the point of exhaustion, I made no note of names, nor did I visit any of the theatres.

An excellent "dutch lunch" was served prior to the meeting, and I have in all the trip had no more attentive audience. When such a small local sponsors such a meeting and prepares for it so well, it most certainly is entitled to credit for its enterprise.

In planning the trip, I believed that I most surely would be very weary by the time Lima was reached, so I had arranged to run down to Marion, Ohio, and visit two very dear projectionist friends, H. J. Seckle and R. S. Slagle, of the Palace theatre. In Marion I visited the Palace, saw some excellent projection work and talked with Manager George C. Planck, who impressed me as a type of theatre executive we might well have very many more of. Said he, "I demand hearty co-operation from all employes of any theatre I have charge of and in turn I stand ready to co-operate with them."

And that is exactly the correct procedure. The projection staff informed me that Manager Planck demanded real excellence in both image and sound, but was always willing to provide whatever was necessary to achieve that.

MANSFIELD, OHIO

Mansfield, Ohio, boasts four theatres, three of them Warner and one, a small one, independent. Feeling peppy after a day of rest in Marion, I visited them all, though at the Majestic and Ritz only long enough to say hello.

The Madison (Warner) is managed by W. V. Divorski, with whom I enjoyed an extended chat. At both the Madison and Ohio the screen is too near the front of the stage, which materially reduces the value of the front ten rows of seats and certainly is not beneficial to the next four or five rows. Also, while the Madison projection room is a very fine one, it is located away up at the ceiling, whereas there seemed no earthly reason why it could not just as well have been placed at least ten feet lower. The location causes a very great projection angle, with consequent distortion of the screen image.

The Madison projection room is manned by Howard Straub, Del Guthrie and John Deyarmon. The room is large. There is a motor-generator set room with two sets of Roth Actodectors. There are also a large work room, toilet room, etc. The projectors are Simplex, with Peerless Magnarcs. Sound is Western Electric.

The Ohio is the only Mansfield theatre regularly using double features. Frank Harpster, the manager, replied to the question, "Do you run bank nights or other give-away stunts?" with an emphatic No. Said he, "I give them the very best possible attraction, image and sound and get business doing just that."

I found Harry DeLancy and H. E. McAllister in the Ohio projection room, using Simplex with Strong light source equipment. The sound is Western Electric.

At the Majestic (Warner) the manager was at dinner, so I just said hello to the projectionists, A. F. Ebenshade (secretary of the local) and F. J. McIntrow. The Ritz (independent) manager was also absent, but I shook hands with the projectionists, H. Schlegel and J. K. DeArmand. The Ritz room is very crowded.

At the meeting were four projectionists from Tiffin, Ohio, 40 miles away; seven from Marion, 36 miles distant; and four from Ashland, thirteen miles off. They all drove over after their shows closed. All members of the Mansfield local were present. A very nice lunch was served.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The meeting at Cleveland was a most memorable event. The National Carbon Company provided the parlors of the Hollenden, big downtown hotel, as a meeting place in which to assemble the managers in the daytime and the projectionists after the shows closed at night. At noon, 96 men assembled in the parlors to listen to an address by my 'umble self on projection. My listeners were principally division managers, theatre managers, assistant managers and exchange managers.

The luncheon provided by the National Carbon Company was beautifully arranged. Certainly the satisfied faces of those who partook of it gave ample evidence of its excellence. Colonel Harry Long, who has general charge of the Loew interests in that territory, presided. A picture was taken of the meeting, which is reproduced somewhere in these pages, wherever ye ed has decided to put it.

TOLEDO, OHIO

Martin G. Smith, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, sponsored the meeting in Toledo. He invited all managers and projectionists to attend and did what he could to make it a success. It was held in the parlor of one of the down town hotels. There were six theatre operators and managers and a goodly number of projectionists present, though not nearly what there should have been.

I visited one Toledo theatre. The screen image was not bad, but in my judgment it could have been very much improved. Exactly the same thing was true with the sound. I know the projectionists in this theatre and am quite sure the lack of excellence is not chargeable to them. I had visual evidence of the carelessness in management. One thing amused me. In the foyer were two fireplaces in which were chunks of pale yellow glass, under and behind which were white incandescent lamps, visible at various points. With just a little care both fireplaces could have been made to have the appearance of containing a heap of live coals. As it was, they didn't resemble much of anything except a waste of current.

There is only one way to do anything in or about a motion picture theatre and that is the right way—not pretty nearly the right way, but exactly the right way.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

At Williamsport W. K. Glodselter, president of Local No. 411 greeted me and we visited the four of her theatres now operating. All up the valley between Altoona and Williamsport there had been ample evidence of the flood—wrecked buildings, trash-laden trees, etc.

In Williamsport I visited one theatre, operated by the Comerford Amusement Company, which had a well laid out but badly lighted projection room, a fault, I was advised, which would be remedied. This house has a 23-foot picture, whereas every need of the rearmost seat would be equally served by an 18-footer. I took the manager down front and gave him a practical demonstration that that picture, located at the stage apron, was utterly ruining the sales value of at least ten rows of front seats.

I visited the home of W. K. Glodfelter, president of Local 411 (and made love to one of his four charming daughters, Miss Beverly, aged four!) The meeting was attended by all Williamsport projectionists, two from Lewisburg, 30 miles away; two from Leffinburg, distant 39 miles; and three from Sunbury, 40 miles away.

SOME PLANT VISITS

During my trip I also tried to visit as many of my friends among the equipment manufacturers as I could. One of those whom I succeeded in seeing was Karl Brenkert, going to the Detroit factory of the Brenkert Light Projection Company with Joseph La Rose, manager of the Eastown theatre, who once was S. L. Rothafel's right-hand man at the Rialto in New York.

The Brenkert plant is of substantial size and is equipped with the precision instruments and machinery required for the production of a fine projection lamp. Associated with him in the organization are his brothers, Wayne and Neal. Before we ended our visit, I asked Karl this question:

"What, in your opinion, represents the best, most efficient motion picture projection light source in theatres of various classes?"

"Since you have put me on the spot in this manner," he responded, "I will give you my frank opinion after considerable experience and state that there is no one type of light source that will answer all requirements—and there is nothing in view at the present time that would. Two points are always to be considered in screen illumination. One is the total light on the screen and the other is the quality of the light. For total light on the screen at the lowest cost of operation the suprex arc is supreme. For total light on the screen and the highest quality of light, the super-high-intensity lamp still remains the choice among all light sources.

"The suprex arc has two fundamental characteristics that has not been employed in any light source heretofore. One is its extremely high efficiency and the other is its extreme flexibility. High efficiency, of course, means greatest light output per ampere of current at the arc. Flexibility means that the light intensity can be varied by the one size of carbon over a range of better than 2 to 1. The suprex arc is, therefore, the most universal of any arc yet presented to the motion picture theatre."

While in Cleveland I of course visited the National Carbon Company, which organization has played a prominent part in the progress of motion picture projection. Their accomplishment in the development of the Suprex type carbon is an achievement in projection practice worthy of high commendations. It has brought the advantages of high-intensity projection within the economic reach of the small theatre, which has had projection light of lower intensity and poorer quality. Their recent announcement of the development of a super high intensity carbon for operation in a current range of from 140 to 190 amperes offers further improvement in screen illumination for theatres using screens of large dimensions.

The National Carbon Company was one of the first to recognize the advantages of a higher level of general illumination in theatres, which is feasible with higher intensity of screen illumination. They have been active and consistent in their efforts to bring to the attention of theatre managers the box office value of better general illumination in the theatre auditorium.

At Fostoria, Ohio, this company operates a large factory of the most modern type for the manufacture of projector carbons. Every step of production in this plant, from raw material to finished product, is under the immediate control of the laboratory staff, which results in maintenance of both quality and uniformity of the finished product. The pitch and tar used to bind together the fine particles of solid carbon are produced in a pitch plant which is a part of this Fostoria factory. To further insure quality and uniformity, the company manufactures its own lampblack in specially constructed furnaces in which oil is burned under restricted draught, and the resulting unconsumed carbon deposits in the form of soot in huge settling chambers. This raw lamp black contains a certain percentage of volatile elements, and before being used in making up a carbon mix, is calcined at a high temperature, which process drives off all volatile elements, leaving a product which is for all practical purposes pure carbon.

The calcined lamp black, after being again reduced to a fine powder, is mixed with the other necessary ingredients, including the pitch used for bonding, in heated mixers, the resulting mix being a plastic dough-like mass. This dough is placed in the cylinder of a huge hydraulic press, from which it is forced at a pressure of several tons per square inch through a die of the required shape and dimensions to form the desired carbon rod. Carbons that are to be cored come from this die in the form of a thick walled tube. The green carbons as they come from the die are received on grooved trays, which keep the carbon straight while it is being cooled to a temperature which gives it rigidity.

After careful inspection for size and visible faults, the carbons are packed in saggers, placed in specially constructed furnaces, and baked for several days at high temperature. This bake converts the pitch bonding agent into carbon, so that the resulting product is a solid composition of homogeneous carbon. After baking, the carbons are sawed to approximate final lengths and passed through another close inspection. The core material is then forced into the carbon shell and solidified by a second baking operation.

The carbons are now ready for the finishing department, where they are ground to exact length and diameter, pointed and, in the case of high-intensity carbons, "precratered." Certain types, such as the Orotip and Suprex, then go into the plating room for copper coating. After the finishing operations are completed, each carbon is marked with its trade-mark and type symbol and passes through a careful final inspection, which includes an X-ray examination to disclose possible hidden defects. Samples from every lot of carbons are tested in the company's laboratory under actual operating conditions. Approximately 90 days are consumed in passing through the various processes of manufacture from raw material to finished product.

While in Chicago I took a run down to see my old friend J. E. McAuley of the J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of the Peerless projection lamps and all of the various equipment that goes with it. I don't know whether J. E. is afraid I'll bite him, but anyhow every time I go down there he is conspicuous by his absence. However, I met his efficient manager, C. A. Hahn, who seems to have an idea that Peerless lamps are good. He took me out into the factory and succeeded in confirming my years' old opinion that it is good.

Manager Hahn said that the McAuley plant is working to capacity. He assured me further that it always has worked to capacity, and at one time was sixty days be-

Those Who Know Select ASHCRAFT

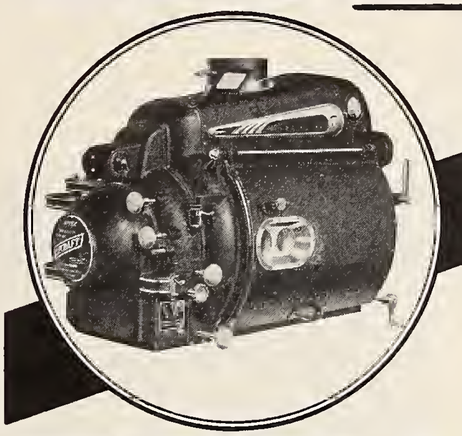
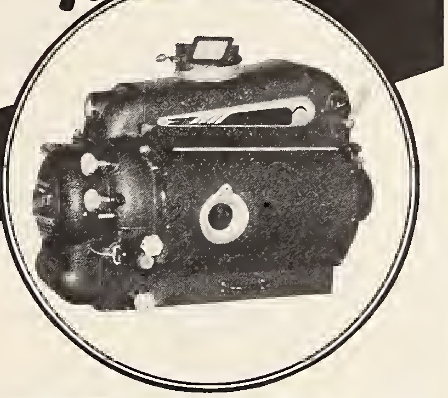
BECAUSE THEY KNOW It's the Best





ASHCRAFT TYPE D PROJECTION LAMP
The standard of high class projection is used universally in the largest theatres where the best in projection is demanded. Equipped with 14" reflector — Ball Bearing motor and every known improvement. Nothing has been omitted to make it the finest projection lamp.

ASHCRAFT TYPE E PROJECTION LAMP
Guaranteed to produce equal or better results and give service equal to the most expensive modern lamps—yet it is very moderately priced. A combination of this lamp with an Ashcraft Copper Oxide Rectifier will insure you of an installation second to none.

THE ASHCRAFT COPPER OXIDE RECTIFIER

Equipped with Dual Rotary Current Control. No rectifier is complete or entirely adaptable to Suprex projection unless means are provided for instantaneous current output adjustment. AC line voltages may vary but the DC output voltage can easily be adjusted to normal by a simple movement of the control wheel.

Has ample capacity for two 50 ampere arcs or one 65-75 ampere arc—or a spot light or effect machine may also be operated in either case.

High efficiency—dependability and extreme flexibility are built into this unit. Three phase—Efficiently air cooled.

SOME PROPHECIES CONCERNING 16-MM.

AMONG THE many old friends I had a chance to visit with during my recent trip was Herman A. DeVry. Far back in the early days of motion pictures, when everything was more or less in an experimental stage, this Herman A. DeVry started manufacturing portable projectors in Chicago. He's still at it in that city—only now, of course, he manufactures plenty of other things besides.

Herman A. DeVry was born in Schwerin, Germany, but he came to this country when he was only ten years old. As a boy he had manifested much interest in illusions and magic-apparatus, eventually taking up electricity, and still later becoming interested in motion pictures. As far back as 1908 he constructed a motion picture camera, and he has been constructing motion picture equipment of one kind and another ever since.

Mr. DeVry conducted me through his factory. Frankly, I was nothing less than astonished. I was aware that the DeVry Corporation had quite a factory on Center Street, but its complexity and the completeness of its equipment was a surprise. Whole walls lined with shelves containing costly jigs and dies, a complete lens making plant, 150 men employed, machinery, machinery, machinery everywhere, a big shipping department and stock room, and new buildings under construction. Herman A. DeVry started on a capital of $125.

Mr. DeVry stated that his chain drive projector is making headway and that his 16-mm. spring steel reel is going over big, though as yet his 35-mm. reel has not made much headway because of its relatively high first cost. I have faith to believe, however, that this situation will eventually take care of itself. The DeVry reel is the best I have yet seen. I strongly commend it to exhibitors and projectionists for projection room reels. Taken reasonable care of, a set will last for years.

I asked Mr. DeVry, "What, in your opinion, is the possibility that the 16-mm. film will enter the theatrical field?" His reply was emphatic.

"Your question is not hard to answer. Economy is probably the most important reason, though not at all the only one, for believing that there is a good chance that it will. While the difference in cost of raw stock between 16-mm. and 35-mm. nitrate film is not so great now, I predict that the rapidly increasing demand for 16-mm. will bring it down to the same price or lower than that of 35-mm. nitrate per area—roughly speaking, about one-fifth the price of 35-mm. That's something—how many millions of dollars that would amount to per annum we can only surmise.

"Then there is the matter of safety. You remember when years ago you told the governor of New York he would have to expand the grave yards if motion pictures, without proper fire protection, were permitted non-theatrically? Well, to a certain extent it also applies theatrically. The 16-mm. non-theatrical will so expand the use of film for every purpose that the theatrical will not be a prime factor, and industry swings with the lines of least resistance.

"Don't forget there are a million classrooms in the United States alone to be taken care of, saying nothing of industry, so that in time the theatrical end may not be the big end of the film business, though naturally it will always be an entity by itself and on its own.

"I predict more radical changes—"

"The tremendous strides of the 16-mm. are due to its universal application and safety, and incidentally, every large school in time will have at least one expert projectionist, though the individual classroom will probably be handled by the teacher or one of the pupils.

"I haven't any definite data, but believe that for throws not to exceed 100 feet, the 16-mm. can be made to produce as good a picture as the present 35-mm. film and equipment. The 16-mm. equipment, the sprocket intermittent projector, is head and shoulders ahead of any 35-mm. equipment, including our own 35-mm. equipment. Probably from 10% to 20% of the theatres could not use 16-mm. on account of lack of illumination, but believe me, some of the late engineering features of the 16-mm. equipment are badly needed in the 35-mm. equipment.

"When I speak of the 16-mm. theatre projector, of course, I am talking about something that doesn't exist yet, but we will have it soon, and in this connection I might add that any claw or shuttle mechanism is out of the question.

"I'd like to point out also that the 16-mm. theatre projector will run a full two-hour show without a stop on one projector. Moreover, there is the saving in transportation costs to consider. You can send 16-mm. by parcel post. The economies possible with 16-mm. would make it profitable to open thousands of closed theatres in small towns.

"Finally, I predict more radical changes and upheavals in the industry in the next year or two than we've had in the past twenty—and if someone else does not do it, I will!"

Which sounds just like the Herman A. DeVry I've known these many years. And, by gosh, he's awfully likely to do it, too!

A STRONG PLEA FOR TENSION ADJUSTMENT

J. R. PRATER, projectionist of Palouse, Wash., writes, "More power to you, Dad, in your fight for a tension adjustment on projectors. I can think of no one thing more urgently needed for the protection of both projector mechanism and films. Exchanges implore us to loosen the tension and give green prints a fighting chance to break in properly, but what can we do?

"Trailers and shorts are broken in and require full normal tension and they are on the same program with the green prints. Surely it cannot be even imagined that we can tear down a sizzling hot gate, bend the tension springs to what one guesses will be about right, only to try out the result before several hundred people in the audience, to say nothing of having to do that several times each show. But if tension be set for normal, and a green print is to be projected—well, we must just grit our teeth and bear it when the soft emulsion is unable to stand the pressure and starts piling up on the tension shoes, with the intermittent sprocket teeth hammering through the delicate sprocket hole edges because of the heavy added strain imposed.

"Of course, one may grab an oil can and smear oil on, or apply wax, constantly through the reel. Or while we clean the shoes of the idle projector the other one raises hell with the sprocket holes.

"The manufacturers who claim that a tension adjustment would be fooled with too much, certainly give us projectionists credit for having a lot of horse sense, I don't think! If automobile manufacturers felt that way about their cars they would lock their transmissions into low gear and throw the handle away for fear the driver would not have brains enough to shift gears when climbing a steep hill.

"If they insist that most of us cannot or will not use such an adjustment intelligently, then for the love of Mike let us at least have that feature optional, so that those who appreciate it, want it and get down on their knees and beg for it, can have it!"

Strongly worded and in my judgment fully justified. Projector manufacturers are invited to read what Brother Prater has said and give it the consideration it richly deserves. It is nonsensical to presume that soft, green emulsion should have or can stand the tension pressure necessary for old, seasoned film. Yet that is, as Prater points out, exactly what it must do as matters now stand. And of all you thousands of men who have been bawled out for permitting tension pad emulsion to rake the full length of reels of film, only relatively few have written me your views.

Projector manufacturers have given us exceedingly well planned, well made projector mechanisms, but to date there has never been a really practical tension adjustment, and today our most popular projectors have none at all, with the pressure needed for seasoned film far exceeded in many of them.

I repeat: We want a really practicable tension adjustment, controlled by an adjustment knob so located that it will not get so hot it cannot be handled with the bare fingers, and with a marked dial attached, preferably one upon which the projectionist may, after experiment, mark the correct position for old and green film. And don't tell me it can't be done, for you manufacturing gentlemen have accomplished far, far more complicated tasks than that.

HEAT IN COLOR FILM PROJECTION

AN ARKANSAS projectionist who asks that his name and location be withheld, writes, "Added your new Bluebook of Projection to my others a few weeks ago. It is a book all projectionists should be proud to own. It contains what we should all know and practice.

"May I ask what is the proper way to make a lens stop? Should it be painted black and is a stop of any real benefit? I made one and could see no benefit.

"While projecting Technicolor I discovered I could not hold my hand in front of the lens because of the intense heat, though projecting black and white the heat was not nearly so great. Would not this high temperature cause the lenses to pit faster and thus do harm to them when projecting colored pictures? I discovered the heat from color while experimenting with a lens stop."

Whether or not a lens stop would be of benefit depends upon things this correspondent has not mentioned. If the light beam fills the lens, then a stop will work no benefit unless there be a heavy projection angle and it is found that reducing the lens diameter helps to improve definition (focus) at top and bottom when center of screen image is sharp. This will of course be at the expense of light waste, but under such conditions may be advisable. The stop should be of stiff sheet asbestos, painted black.

It may also be advisable to stop down a lens as above to the actual beam diameter if the beam does not fill the lens. The effect of such a stop is to eliminate all possibility of the passage of rays of light reflected from aperture edges, etc., and rays that may be diffused and thus misdirected by oil on the film or otherwise.

As to the added heat produced by color, that is the first time, so far as memory serves, the subject has been raised. I am not certain about the matter, but am pretty certain that different colors might create different amounts of heat rays, some of them—red, for example—much more than black and white.

As to pitting the lens, high temperature will not do that to a projection lens, though it might possibly tend to melt or disintegrate the balsam with which the front lens combination of most projection lenses is cemented together. Up to date, however, I have had no reports or complaints of such damage, nor do I believe the possible added temperature set up by color would work any serious harm in this direction. The Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, to whom I submitted this point, says, "We have no information on the basis of which we can judge the probable truth of the observation that Technicolor film transmits more heat than black and white. If there is this difference and it is great enough, it might, as you say, cause the balsam to melt in the lens. Sufficient Technicolor film has been projected, certainly, to pretty well allay any fears as to the destruction of the projection lenses.

"We have had no reports or complaints of this sort and agree with you that the added temperature is not sufficient to do any serious damage to the projection lens."

All of which should suffice to allay any fears on the score of damage by heat, I think. I have, however, requested from Technicolor specific data as to the heat factors of various colors, which will be published when and if received.

HE'S CHIEF OF CIRCUIT PROJECTION AND UNION

I AM A great admirer of our sister nation to the north. Not only is Canada a good neighbor, but sometimes I am tempted to believe she does some things better than we do. I have met many splendid men in the various provinces of the Dominion who have rendered highly valuable assistance in the building up of the profession of projection. Among these men is a man who for twenty years has been director of projection for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, during which time he has built up a reputation not only for square-dealing with the corporation he represents, but also among the projectionists in the theatres over the projection affairs of which he has general supervision.

Charles A. Dentlebeck not only is what we call a square-shooter, but also a man who has expended much mental energy in the study of projection and has in many ways rendered to it and to the industry high service. Before he became a director of projection he was a valued contributor to my columns, supplying many articles and ideas that were highly appreciated.

Mr. Dentlebeck has performed highly creditable work in building up the Famous Players Canadian Corporation's projection department, which work has met with such approval that he today has almost complete authority in all projection matters for the company. He is also president of Local 173, IATSE & MPMO in Toronto.

While in Toronto recently, I congratulated him on his success. He replied, "My success, Mr. Richardson, is not wholly the result of my own effort. A man in my position is largely dependent for excellence of results upon the loyalty of the men he is working for, and those other men who are under his authority. Through all the many years I have been connected with Famous Players Canadian Corporation I not only have had the support of the organization officials themselves, but have received loyal co-operation from my projectionist friends in the theatres. Without these things I could not possibly have succeeded in any large way. I also have been able to deal amicably with all the various unions involved."

Charles A. Dentlebeck

While in Toronto I was privileged to visit the home of Director Dentlebeck and renew acquaintance with his charming family, as well as to inspect his office and machine shop, which latter is equipped to effect repairs on projection equipment for the company.

"OPERATOR" STARTS IT; EXCHANGE PASSES IT ON

JOHN J. CUDDY, projectionist of Palmer, Mass., sends a sample of damaged film and says, "The attached clipping is from the Universal feature, 'Don't Get Personal.' Although only 44 days old, the entire seven reels seem to be warped in every frame, doubtless because of some theatre using a very hot spot while the film was still green. I am sending this clipping so that you may see what exchanges pass out in the name of film service.

"The sample was taken from the beginning of one of the reels. It looks as though the ripped sprocket holes were due to a terrific take-up pull. A picture that age should be in excellent condition, but this one is warped, has deep scratches at each reel end, in addition to the regular S.R.P. markings, as well as ripped, strained sprocket holes and several deep scratches through the emulsoin. No wonder that in months this print will be a mess."

The sample is too short to enable me to judge what caused the ripped sprocket holes. It was not take-up tension, however, since the ripped holes are destroyed for about 1½ inches, while on either side the holes are perfect. Moreover, the rip shows the pull to be not on the take-up but on the opposite side.

But be all that as it may, the sample shows carelessness in the extreme by both exchange and projectionists, by the exchange for the reason that the damage was not checked up, but instead was forwarded to another theatre in a condition in which it could not possibly be run without extreme danger of a film fire, on the part of the projectionist or projectionists for the reason that film should not show such scratches at any reasonable age, and ripped sprocket holes never, save for some accident, in which event a slip should be included in the return shipment, pointing it out.

Rubber Mats In the Theatre

depends upon the style and layout of the theatre.

For these areas, the mats are designed to carry out a single pattern in sections which fit together. The sectional formation of the mat permits easy removal from the recessed floor for cleaning, the mats being taken outside and washed with a hose. The concrete recess needs to be merely broomed.

STAIR TREADS

The suitability of rubber mats to stairway treads depends to some extent upon the style of the theatre and the location of the stairways. Frequently the decorative scheme is such that carpeting is indicated. No stairway, of course, should be left bare, not merely because of appearance, but because bare stair treads are slippery and therefore a source of accidents, which usually result in suits for damages. Rubber mats for stair treads are made in single pieces to fit the treads, with a suitable pattern, worked out in corrugations.

FOYER DOORWAYS

Placing rubber mats at the edge of the foyer floor, just inside the lobby where the ticket taker commonly stands, has been found to protect the foyer carpet at this point. When the edge of the carpet is directly against the door sill, it receives a great deal of scuffing. In its stead, the full width of the doors, is placed a rubber strip in the neighborhood of 2 feet in depth and set with its upper surface flush with that of the carpet.

Rubber mats in single pieces, of varying weights and shapes and sizes, can give substantial protection to carpets and reduce cleaning tasks at various points in the theatre. Besides the fountain and candy stand locations previously cited, circular mats beneath cigarette urns, door approaches in toilet rooms are among other points where rubber mats are, and in many cases should be, used.

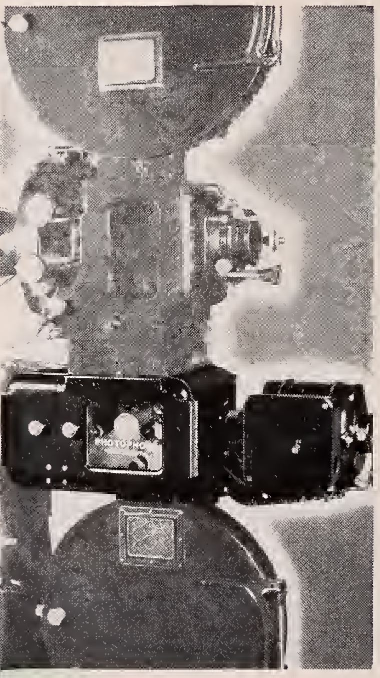
RCA Photophone Rotary Stabilizer Sound Head

Within less than a year after its introduction, the RCA Photophone Rotary Stabilizer Sound Head was famous. It was accepted by the industry as the best film-governing device, permitting true High Fidelity reproduction.

OLD RELIABILITY—NEW REFINEMENTS!

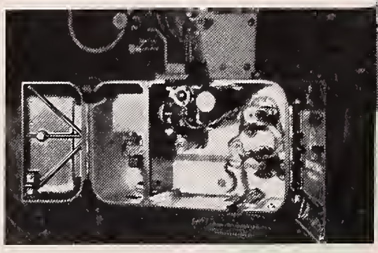
Now this great instrument has been refined. It is basically the same as before, because it is founded on never-changing laws of nature. But the refinements give you the benefits of our unique 3-year experience with the Rotary Stabilizer in all parts of the world.

★ Motor and sound parts cushioned in rubber mountings.
★ Flexible coupling in motor shaft. Ball bearings throughout.
★ Hermetically-sealed Rotary Stabilizer case.
★ Simplified. All parts easily accessible.
★ Interior light in color for greater visibility.
★ Sound head attaches to Simplex or Power's projectors without extra fittings; may be easily adapted to other projectors.
★ One quality only—the best.



ALL FOR BOX OFFICE

RCA's development of the Rotary Stabilizer, of A-C Operation, of High Fidelity, of Noiseless Recording, of Ultra-Violet Recording—all give you better sound—which means a bigger draw, more profits, less expense. Ask us to PROVE IT!



See inside the refined RCA Photophone Rotary Stabilizer Sound Head. Note constant-speed and take-up sprockets, both vital to smooth motion and High Fidelity reproduction.

WARNER BROS. say
"To Set These In 36-Point"

"Hot as headlines in a midnight 'extra.' Makes dynamite look like a lollypop. A heart-clutching, nerve-rasping drama blasts its way from the Strand screen in a manner to wrench watchers from their seats with the four-alarm-fire excitement of its entertainment. Suspense mounts with every sequence to a heart-stopping, gasping climax. Robinson in a piercing, pungent portrait such as only he can conceive and execute. The picture is a stirring service to civilization, performed by Warner Bros."—N. Y. American

"Replete with thrills. A terse and vivid critique of big-shot racketeering. Packs a thrill in each foot of film and is quite the best of the cinema's sermons against crime."—N. Y. World-Telegram

"If you care to see a picture that will certainly thrill you, don't miss 'Bullets or Ballots.' It's a grand picture, one to make your flesh creep at times. Thrills are not always educational, and education is seldom thrilling. 'Bullets or Ballots' contrives to be both. It will go down in screen history as a masterpiece of drama."—From an Editorial in the New York Evening Journal

"Taut and compelling. Exciting and violent enough to satisfy the most avid melodrama enthusiast."—New York Herald-Tribune

"This one is a thriller, a fast-paced talkie with all the suspense a melodrama can stand."—N.Y. Sun

"Warner Bros. have turned out another crackling underworld melodrama."—N. Y. Times

"A knock-out. Rousing, red-meat melodrama. Not since 'Little Caesar' has Robinson had such a vigorous and exciting story. Violent action and strong suspense, vivid characters, a strong plot, brisk action, tender romance are in 'Bullets or Ballots.' That covers everything."—N. Y. Mirror

"Fast-moving. Tensely thrilling entertainment. Timely as well as exciting."—N. Y. Eve. Journal

"A thrilling hour and a half's worth of entertainment."—N. Y. Daily News. "Another assured success for Warner Bros."—N. Y. Morning Telegraph

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 123, No. 10 — June 6, 1936

THEY'RE OFF

THIS issue of Motion Picture Herald recording the simultaneous announcements for the 1936-37 season from four great corporations presents a merchandise situation without precedent in the annals of the industry. Never before in a single week, in fact by reason of the Herald's unified account, in a single day, has the production-distribution machine launched upon the market so vast an array of features at once, a total of 259.

The season now drawing to a close has been very much a sellers' market. Despite a flow of the best product that the screen has ever achieved, by reason of competitive exhibition situations, double billing and distribution methods calculated to swiftly cover the markets, the theatres have been picture hungry. The working life of pictures is now measured in weeks as compared with months in product circulation of an earlier day.

The tremendously accelerated rate of communication and the vehicles of fame, and publicity, by radio, by wirephoto, extended press syndication, air transport, intensifies the motion picture merchandising reaction and shortens its duration. What was once a glow of success that swept across the land like the dawn has now become, relatively, a meteoric explosion.

Things are happening to Time. The speed-up is evidenced everywhere and in every operation, every device. Ordinary stock passenger cars do a hundred miles an hour. The biggest ships ever built can steam at forty miles an hour. A new target rifle, a mere 22 calibre, delivers the unbelievable velocity of 4,000 feet a second. New York to Hollywood phone service is as fast as from Times Square to Wall Street. Streamline trains are cutting days off the coast to coast traffic. Passenger planes are doing 200 hundred miles an hour and the airlines are talking about 300 as not very far off.

So the prospect that motion picture merchandising is becoming a more intensified, more rapid process, is only token of a generally accelerated tempo.

This year the exhibitor gets the product story substantially all at once, all of it in less than a month. This abrupt and sudden tide of promised product tends for the moment at least to create a buyers' market. Selling must be more competitive, trading more hectic.

One of the curious effects now manifest, however, is that much of the selling now under way partakes of the oldest of program methods, but with new, usually implied, elements of electricity and adjustment.

And despite the large array of formal presentations of programs set and outlined, there is indication that the product of the coming season will be found to be adjusting itself more rapidly and precisely to developments, trends, discoveries, than ever before.

BRITISH NEWS ENTERPRISE

OVER in London town the Gaumont British newsreel has given the rampant journalism of some of the American reels a mark to shoot at in its daring to forecast and pick the winner of the Derby for the picture patrons of the United Kingdom. The GB newsreel chose Mahmoud and airplaned pictures to its theatre customers several days before the race. The resulting enthusiasm is reported to have drawn a hundred thousand bets on Mahmoud. Incidentally Gaumont British is now serving its newsreel client by air distribution regularly, with a special aviation department and an air service time table for each theatre. This tends to indicate that the British theatre is ready to take the newsreel more seriously than its contemporaries on this side, where as often as not even metropolitan first-runs decline to disturb a screening schedule to show special pictures on the most exciting national events.

THE ALMANAC

THIS week the office of Motion Picture Herald is a-swirl with billows of pink proofs of the annual high tide of the week that the Almanac—the International Motion Picture Almanac—goes off to press. There is something of an impression hereabouts at the moment that there are a great many people and a tremendous number of facts in this industry of ours. The "Who's Who" or biographical section of the Almanac, just for instance, contains tabloid life and work stories of thirteen thousand one hundred and twelve persons engaged in the art and industry here and abroad—and all of the officers of all the corporations, and all of the titles since sound came along—and the reviews of all of the box office champions of the season ending—and the facts and figures that you'll be seeing quoted around the world on editorial pages and from the rostrum and pulpit for the next year. This year's Almanac will present its condensed summary of who-and-what in a total of about 1,400 pages. The coming of the new Almanac has become the token of the birth of a new show year.

This Week

Product

Theatre owners stand today in possession of almost all the information they require to determine their sources of product supply for 1936-37. Annual sales convention activities, bringing forth new season's product announcements, this week found four of the ten large distributors in convention chambers—including Paramount, Republic, Twentieth Century-Fox and Warner Brothers. In addition, GB Pictures and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer already have held their meetings and announced their programs.

The week brought the greatest concentration of sales effort on behalf of new product in a decade, the four companies announcing 259 pictures, or some 53 per cent of the 485 promised by the 10 large distributors. This and other developments brought the pre-seasonal period long past the half-way mark, as witness:

70 Companies Busy

Some 70 independent companies were busy on 1936-37 plans, lining up distribution channels and programs, promising the highly optimistic, highly-tentative total of 427 features—in addition to the 485 to which the 10 large companies are committed.

Activities of those 70 companies are surveyed in detail commencing on page 16.

78 from Paramount

Paramount Pictures, in convention, at Chicago, on Friday and Saturday, announces 78 features and more than 100 short subjects for 1936-37.

52 from Republic

Republic Pictures announced 52 features and four serials for 1936-37, at the second annual sales convention, in Chicago, from Thursday to Saturday.

Titles are listed on page 76.

69 from Fox

Sixty-nine features, 100 short subjects and Fox Movietone Newsreel were announced for 1936-37 by Twentieth Century-Fox, which met in annual convention last weekend, in Chicago.

Titles are listed on page 78.

60 from Warner

Warner Brothers and the affiliated First National and Cosmopolitan Pictures did the unusual when they announced the full list of 60 features scheduled for 1936-37, while in convention, in New York, on Wednesday and Thursday.

Titles are listed on page 83.

More Conventions

Sales conventions and product announcements still to come: RKO Radio, June 15th to 17th, Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York—tentatively set for 48 features; Universal, June 15th to 17th, Astor Hotel, New York—tentatively set for 36; Columbia, June 22nd to 24th, Chicago—tentatively set for 48; and, United Artists, June 30th and July 1st and 2nd, Hollywood—tentatively set for from 26 to 30 features.

See page 12.

Royalty Protests

Thirty applicants were admitted to membership by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers at its last board meeting, and protests were received from publishers who are dissatisfied with their royalty ratings.

Legislation Dead

There will be no legislation against block booking in this session of Congress. That was made certain this week when the House committee on interstate and foreign commerce adjourned without acting on the Pettengill bill. In the Senate the interstate commerce committee reported favorably on the Neely bill, companion measure.

Upturn

Financial reports issued by seven companies during the week reflect continued upturn in varying degrees. In a number of cases substantial profits stand in sharp contrast against losses for corresponding periods a year ago. In other dividend payments have been resumed after protracted suspension.

A statistical survey of the reports is published on page 97.

Foretaste

While David O. Selznick's production unit reenacts on the American desert near Yuma, Arizona, Robert Hichens' long popular novel and play, "The Garden of Allah," a short wave intercommunication system keeps Hollywood advised of and interested in progress made. The new version of the play screened nine years ago as a silent picture is being made in color with Marlene Dietrich and Charles Boyer in the leading roles.

An illustrated preview of the picture by Gus McCarthy appears on pages 14-15.

IATSE Session

With problems that have accumulated during the past year to be ironed out, the executive board of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, headed by George E. Browne, president, convened in Kansas City on Monday in prelude to the general convention opening June 8.

See page 93.

Their "First Duty"

Facing the loss of motion picture backing, Broadway producing managers named their representatives to the joint advisory committee on the sale of film rights to plays, and instructed them that their "first duty" was to reach an agreement that would satisfy the film companies. The film interests, meanwhile, stood pat.

For developments of the week, see the news reports on page 92.

"It's dirt in disguise as serious treatment of life that is, in my opinion, illegitimate. It belongs in clinics, not back of footlights."
GEORGE M. COHAN in Liberty

Louisiana Legislation

Again disturbing the lull that followed the storm of adverse legislation during the winter and spring months in Louisiana, legislative guns are again trained on the motion picture. Nine measures are before the state's solons, which, if passed, would make it impossible to operate within economic reason within the confines of the commonwealth.

See page 102.

Short Contract

Distributors found laid in their laps this week a new short-form of standard exhibition contract, drafted by the MPTOA for purposes of simplification as part of the exhibitor organization's trade practice conference procedure. The old, cumbersome standard license agreement, four times the size of the new draft, would, by inference only, continue in existence—none of its clauses would in effect be invalidated.

Text of the new short form, and an explanation of the events leading up to its presentation, appear on page 99.

Surcease

The extreme censorship decree for control of world exhibition of films regarded by the French Government as contrary to its national interests has been suspended pending a clarification of its terms, according to word received by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. There

These developments and the new regulations are detailed on page 103.

Frels Loses Round

Ruben Frels, Dallas, Texas, exhibitor, lost a round in his anti-trust action against the Jefferson Amusement Company, East Texas Amusement Company, J. G. Long, and major distributors, when the United States district court sustained a demurrer of the defendants this week at Dallas. Mr. Frels had asked for damages amounting to $547,000, plus counsel fees.

See story on page 93.

William Fox Plea

William Fox, former head of Fox Film, and more lately the leading figure in numerous court battles with peoples and corporations seeking judgments against him, this week filed a voluntary petition of bankruptcy in Camden, N. J., listing his liabilities at some $9,000,000, and his assets at approximately $2,000,000. Meanwhile, actions in the courts, especially in New York, continued to be directed at him.

See page 93.

Deaf to Plea

A motion of Loew's and MGM to reverse the court decision against them in the "Letty Lynton" plagiarism case was unproductive this week in the circuit court of appeals. Attorneys for the plaintiffs, Margaret Ayer Barnes and Edward Sheldon, writers of the play "Dishonored Lady," submitted the decree to the federal district court in New York. Next comes the fixing of damages.

Details appear on page 97.

Supply Dealers Meet

Preceded by a three-day meeting of the directors of the organization, the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association members are gathering in Chicago's Edgewater Beach Hotel this week for the annual convention. The largest number of exhibits from manufacturers in the history of the organization will be on display.

Details of the convention, along with a daily program of events, are found in the story on page 88.

Poster Service

Directors of the National Poster Service Association this week, in a surprise move, cancelled the emergency meeting scheduled for Cleveland to discuss means of combating Paramount's poster rental service. It was said the cancellation of the gathering was brought about by the failure of other major companies to follow Paramount's move toward establishing their own poster departments. The first complication in the major companies' service, which has to do with special contracts held by the poster association, arose in New York.

Details are found on page 92.

Sunday Shows

A recent ruling of the Georgia court of appeals declaring Sunday operation of motion picture shows illegal in that state has been denounced editorially by the influential Atlanta Constitution, which urges enactment of new legislation covering the point at the next session of the state assembly.

Text of the editorial appears on page 70.

Production

Four pictures went into production this week in Hollywood and six were brought to completion as the seasonable letup occasioned by executive attendance upon company conventions continued to delay the annual spurt of studio activity.

Titles and personnel of pictures started and finished are given on page 89.

Exhibitor Activities

Allied States' convention at the Hollenden hotel in Cleveland is the focal point of exhibitor interest this week, but other activities included the summer gathering of the Motion Picture Owners of Virginia, the decision of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Owners to hold their annual meeting this month, time and place to be announced this week, and arrangements in Seattle for the meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington.

For details, see page 47.

Television

The widely publicized inauguration of regular television broadcasting by the British Broadcasting Company next month will correspond in general character to the thing Hollywood calls a "sneak preview" for the reason that nobody but engineers conducting tests will have receiving sets, which are not to be made generally available until trials and revisions have been completed.

Circumstances responsible for this state of affairs are described on page 98.

Missouts

A decision of the United States Supreme Court defining the responsibility of common carriers with regard to losses sustained by exhibitors through failure to receive film shipments on schedule is expected next fall. It will be based on the tribunal's review of a South Carolina court decision against the Southeastern Express company in favor of the Pastime Amusement company.

Details of the basic suit are published on page 18.

"Didn't Work Out"

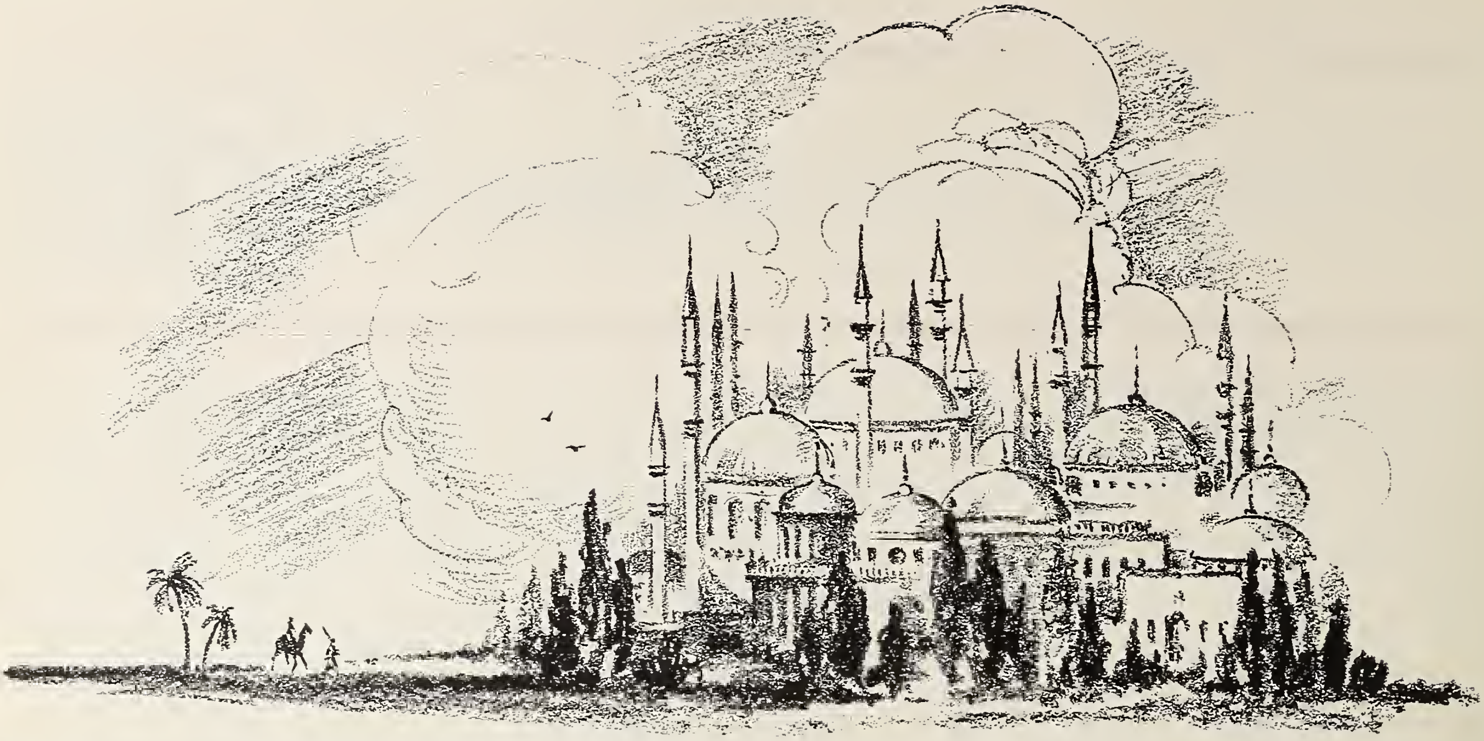
"It didn't work out," said the office of the WPA federal theatre project in explaining the discontinuance of the managers' tryout theatre unit in New York, but on Broadway it was said that the managers felt that their plays would not receive justice at the hands of the Government's proteges.

This, and other developments, are reported on page 82.

"Horror Films"

Socalled "Horror Pictures" are still the most popular in Mexico, according to James Lockhart's dispatch to the HERALD this week, if the success of "The Horror Trunk" may be used as a criterion. The Mexican government is further cooperating with producers to make a film dealing with narcotics.

These facts, along with the theatre situation and labor question, are all discussed in the story found on page 96.



THE TRADEWAYS of a thousand years led to Baghdad, city of marvels, riches and wonders, glorious by day, romantic, mysterious by night.

¶ There the dusty laden camels plodded into the caravansaries, bearing the treasure wares of all the world. There the traders gathered to display their precious goods gathered from Cathay, the Baltic's shores, the mines of Africa, the pearling waters of the Celebes, and in trade to send them away again to far markets.

¶ Among the wares of this ancient city was the intangible stuff of magic, for Baghdad was indeed the capital of magic—the city of Aladdin and his wonder-working lamp. To touch it was to command for that hour all that wishes might ask of Araby.

¶ Now in a new world a new Baghdad has been builded, the great city-within-a-city of Rockefeller Center in the heart of New York, more wondrous far than that glamoured metropolis of Haroun-al-Raschid.

Caliph's abandon, comes and goes by wire and ether-magic, through this mart of sky piercing towers.

¶ This, indeed, is today's great caravansary of the traders in the wares-of-wishing, the personality star stuffs and song and story treasure. Here the purveyors and buyers meet, not as of old around the coffee urns in the rug strewn market place, but in a certain new manner by words-on-paper, gathered, created and spread again to the world, from atop one of those towers in the new Baghdad. By words-on-paper the sellers proclaim, display their wares from the alchemy of the studios. By words-on-paper the buyers meet them and contribute their wisdom and tales of box office adventure and the whims of the consumers of the wish-stuff of the screen. Here in these pages of words they bid and ask, sometimes bluster and blunder, sometimes clash in conflict, and out of it all comes—business. It is their forum, the place of the talking, the telling, the promising—and the place of inventory, too.

¶ To these words-on-paper the traders and the buyers turn their weekly attention by custom and habit as persistent, as founded in practise, as the merchants and buyers of the East turned to Baghdad.

¶ This instrument of the new magic, the organ of the buyers and makers of shadows and voices is the weaving together of their desires, into a fabric called Circulation—a magic carpet of service to those who buy and those who sell. There is no other in all the world like it. It is a pattern made by the makers of the industry. It has been more than two whole decades on the loom of Experience. It is

259 FEATURES LISTED BY 4 MAJORS, AS 70 OTHERS WORK ON '36-37 PLANS

The greatest concentration of sales effort on behalf of new product to be directed in a decade by the studios of Hollywood and their distribution divisions to the theatres of the country brought forth this week disclosures of the nature of the motion picture entertainment that will be furnished in 1936-37 by four of the ten large companies: Paramount announced 78 features; Republic, 52; Twentieth Century-Fox, 69, and Warner Brothers, 60—a total of 259 productions, or some 53 per cent of the 485 pictures to which the ten companies are committed for the new season

The occasion was the annual sales conventions, formally signaling the commencement of the selling season for each company. Twentieth Century-Fox met at the Congress Hotel in Chicago last Saturday, Sunday and Monday; Warner Brothers, First National and Cosmopolitan convened at the Ritz Towers in New York on Wednesday and Thursday; Paramount's convention opens at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago on Friday, running through Saturday, and Republic convenes at the Drake Hotel in Chicago on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and GB Pictures have already held their conventions, announcing 44 and 24 features, respectively, with Metro's commitment probably standing augmented later by some eight additional features.

Six Major Companies Announce Productions for New Season

Thus, with this week's product announcements, as reported in full on other pages, exhibitors have in hand the complete new programs of six companies for 327 features, representing 67 per cent of the product coming from the ten large distributors, which supply the bulk of all entertainment used on the screens of the country. Programs still to be announced are those of RKO Radio, tentatively set for 48 pictures, convening in New York on June 15th; Universal, a possible 36 features, to be announced at the convention, opening in New York on June 15th; Columbia, with 48 pictures, meeting in Chicago on June 22nd, and United Artists, set for a minimum of 26, running to a possible 30, the titles to be made known at the convention, starting in Hollywood on June 30th.

In addition to the features there will be, of course, the usual short subject programs, several dozen serials furnishing more than 1,000 pictures in one- and two-reel lengths, and taking on considerable new life through color, music and new personalities. Newsreels, too, will continue to be important adjuncts of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO Radio, Twentieth Century-Fox and Universal.

Product and Sales Plans of 70 Independents in Work for 1936-37

The titles of the 259 feature productions announced this week and the story sources from which they will be forged, together with star, featured player and directorial assignment, appears as follows: Republic's, on page 76; Twentieth Century-Fox's, on page 78, and Warner Brothers', on page 83. The details of Paramount's convention appear on page 75, the company's titles not being available until later in the week.

The "Big Eight," so-called, and GB and Republic are not alone in the progress being made to round out product programs and sales policies for the new year. Bearing tangible evidence that all factions are faced with the most competitive selling engagement of ten years, some 70 independent companies are presently rushing to market with a varied assortment of features or short subjects, or both. These activities are reported beginning on page 16.

While the large companies this year have concentrated in most cases on single sales conventions, abandoning the practice of holding regional meetings, in order to speed their selling forces to the doorsteps of exhibitors, the vast array of independents who this year will flood the market heavily with product have been for weeks consummating negotiations for the disposal of their promised product either through major releasing systems, or through independent states right exchanges in the field.

Two Hundred Features Expected From Independent Producers

At least another 200 features and several hundreds of short subjects will be forthcoming from the independents in 1936-37, bringing the total number of features available to the exhibitor to some 685, a normal figure, and excluding at least another 200 reissues and importations.

Running throughout the programs will be a generous sprinkling of color, in both Class A and Class B product, including westerns, in color's first serious bid for wide popular favor. Technicolor alone is spending $1,500,000 to double the size of its Hollywood plant, a significant expansion.

Westerns will be increased next season, numerically, with a growing appeal becoming evident from virtually all sections. The production of "classics," too, will be considerably extended, tangible evidence appearing prominently in the new product announcements of the large companies.

The trade practice conferences now being conducted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America with all of the large distributors, except Warners, will have a definite relation to contractual negotiations for new product in the new season. A cancellation privilege, non-restricted, to not less than 10 per cent, indications that the score charges will be eliminated, the establishment of local boards for adjusting contractual and other product disputes, and a new short-form of standard license agreement already present strong possibilities of relief from the problems about which the exhibitors have been complaining to distributors for years. The text of the new suggested short-form of contract appears on page 99.

Independent Companies and Totals Of Product Promised for New Season

Some of the more important independents which have advanced their 1936-37 plans to the point where at least the numerical nature of promised programs have been determined, include:

Company	Features Promised	Company	Features Promised	Company	Features Promised
Academy	6 to 8	FitzPatrick	12	Nuovo Mondo	40
Alliance	12 to 14	Grand National	11	O'Neill	7
Ambassador	4	Guaranteed	16	Pan American-Hoffman	30
Amkino	10	Hirliman	5	Principal	14 to 18
Atlantic	6	Hoffman-Liberty	30	Royer	6
Banner	4	Hungaria	12	Seiden	6
Burroughs Tarzan	16	Imperial	8	Shubert-Rowland	6
Chesterfield-Invincible	18	Krimsky	3	Spectrum	8
Conn	6	Kandel	6 to 8	Stage and Screen - Weiss	3
Coronet	18	Leichter	14	Victory	6
Crescent	8	Melody	4	Zeidman	6
Fanchon and Marco	4	Mutual	52

The 427 features listed by the foregoing are not to be expected to reach the independent market in their entirety. Several will be taken by large companies as part of their commitments; many dozens are intended only for limited distribution to foreign-language theatres, while others will never materialize. The total represents the usually highly optimistic pre-seasonal estimate of the independents.

In addition, several companies still are at work on their plans, including: B. & B. Pictures, Celebrity, Centaur, Chadwick, Film Products, Garrison, General, Goldstone, Harper & Company, Hoffberg, MacLean, Rosener & Brill, Shapiro, Supreme, Tapernoux, United Film, United Pictures, and World.

GLIMPSE INTO "GARDEN of

ON printed page, three-walled stage and silent screen Robert Hichens' "The Garden of Allah" had proved its entertainment value trebly in a quarter century of shifting tastes and interests qualified to test the merit of the soundest fiction before David O. Selznick decided to produce it for United Artists distribution. In such a circumstance any producer might have chosen to appoint a reasonably competent director, assemble a generally adequate cast and sit back in confident expectation that the oral picturization of the story would duplicate the commercial experience of book, play and silent film. Mr. Selznick did no such thing.

On the contrary, he selected his production personnel with explicit attention to the past performance of each in association with material of comparable nature. He elected to produce the picture in color. He sent to the desert near Yuma, Arizona, a company and staff so numerous and complex as to necessitate establishment of short-wave intercommunication between unit and studio.

Direction of the picture was assigned to Richard Boleslawski, whose works include "Les Miserables," "Rasputin," "The Painted Veil" and "Men in White." Preparation of this scenario was entrusted confidently to W. P. Lipscomb in consideration of his work on "Les Miserables," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Cardinal Richelieu" and "Under Two Flags," and Lynn Riggs was engaged to supply additional dialogue.

Marlene Dietrich's performances in "Morocco," "Shanghai Gesture" and other pictures of Oriental flavor were regarded as eminently qualifying her for the feminine lead. Charles Boyer's suave delineations of emotionally complex male roles in "Caravan," "Lilliom," "Private Worlds" and thematically kindred productions recommended him conclusively for the difficult portrayal of the Trappist monk whose transgressions of his vows is basically responsible for the story conflict.

In principal support of these leads veteran C. Aubrey Smith, most recently seen in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," was given the austere role of Father Roubier, and Basil Rathbone, notably effective in "David Copperfield," was called upon to portray the fearsome Count Anteoni whose personality and purpose is a threatening element in the desert fastness which the author calls "The Garden of Allah." Joseph Schildkraut, Tillie Losch and John Carradine have less prominent roles.

Robert Hichens' story brings two emotionally distressed people, a man and a woman, to the Sahara Desert in search of a peace they have not found in the more crowded areas of civilization. The woman is deeply religious. The man, unknown to her, is a Trappist monk who has broken under the restraints of his Order and determined, somewhat confusedly, to find surcease in the vastness of the desert. Under the spell of the setting they fall in love, are married and embrace the Islamic faith.

For a time they are intensely happy. Then the presence of Father Roubier, reminding the man of his broken vows, and the menacing Count Anteoni, representative of a more worldly philosophy, combine to disrupt their idyllic relationship. Ultimately the woman learns of her husband's monastic affiliation and releases him to return to his calling.

In the working out of this essentially mental drama the physical element provided by warring tribesmen and marching Legionnaires is steadily emphasized. Photographs shot in mid-production are published herewith.

427 Features Promised in Last Ten Days Raise Total Estimated Output Planned to 912 for New Season

The highly optimistic, highly tentative total of 427 feature motion pictures promised by some 70 independent producers for 1936-37, as estimated from both formal and unofficial announcements made in the past ten days, brings to 912 the potential number of productions from which theatre owners of the country can select their programs for the new season, the ten large distributors having committed themselves to 485. There will be, of course, a considerable paring down eventually, due, for the most part, (1) to a diversion of a large number of independent importations to foreign language theatres in the United States; (2) the purchase of dozens of the independents' better productions by the majors; and, (3) the failure of some of the independents' plans to materialize.

Regardless, the independents are making progress in getting their product to market as early this season as are the large companies. The competition already is keen among the salesmen of all factions.

Added to the convention and product-announcement activities of the ten largest companies is the frenzied planning of the independents to setup product structures and, even before they become film-in-the-can, to arrange for their distribution, principally through franchises to states right exchanges.

The further advancement of product and sales plans in the past three weeks, since the last survey of the field, which appeared in Motion Picture Herald on May 9th, follows:

Academy Pictures

Between six and eight features will be forthcoming from Edward Halperin's Academy Pictures in the new season. This year the company was committed to eight, two of which are completed: "The Revolt of the Zombies" now being released.

Alliance Pictures

Titles of the first six British International Pictures, of from 12 to 14 scheduled for this market in 936-37, follow:

Hell's Cargo, with Jack Doyle, Henry Mollison and Tamara Desme.
Radio Follies, with Helen Chandler, Henry Mollison.
Jilted, with Greta Nissen and Patrick Knowles.
Give Her a Ring, with Wendy Barrie, Zelma O'Neal, Henry Mollison and Eric Rhodes.
It's a Bet, with Jean Girrard, Helen Chandler and Judy Kelly.
Love at Second Sight, with Marian Marsh, Anthony Bushell and Ralph Ince.

BIP in England will produce a total of 24, from which the releases will be selected for the American market. The company's so-called "invasion" here will be conducted seriously in 1936-37 for the first time, in charge of Budd Rogers, general sales manager of Alliance. Part of the group will be released through national companies, it is hoped, and the remainder by the states right market.

Ambassador Pictures

Harry Conn's Ambassador Pictures is set for four Kermit Maynard westerns for 1936-37. Additional of the company's plans are listed under Conn-Ambassador-Melody.

Amkino Pictures

Already set for release in America, from the Soviet, through Amkino Pictures, a Soviet-controlled agency, are the following ten productions, to be supplemented, in all probability, by others:

Seven Brave Men
Little Nightingale, first Soviet film to be made in color.
Gypsies.
We Are From Kronstadt
On the Bank of the Blue Sea
Anna, by Sergei Eisenstein
Four to be selected.

Atlantic Pictures

At least six, starting with James Fenimore Cooper's "Deerslayer," are to come from Bob Savini's Atlantic Pictures.

B and B Pictures

Lewis Jacobs, director, and Thomas Bouchard, cinematographer, are making a series of dramatic short subjects for release next season by B. and B. Pictures. John Bovington, dancer, is featured in the first, "Underground Printer," a satire on Nazism, already completed.

Banner Pictures

"The Trunk Murder Mystery," to star Norman Foster, who will also direct, starts the series of four features scheduled for the new season by Banner Pictures, a new company in Which Fenn Kimball and James Love are the principals.

Brenon

Herbert Brenon is understood to be considering the formation of a new producing company, supposed to be backed by British capital, and probably releasing through a major company. Mr. Brenon, who has been directing in England, will also continue his contract with British International Pictures, making "Treachery," in London, as his next.

British International

Alliance Pictures distributes B.I.P. product in America, under the supervision of Budd Rogers. Titles of the first six out of 12 to 14 scheduled for 1936-37, appear under Alliance.

British Lion

The English "invasion" of the American market will be extended by British Lion's distribution of eight features next season through Morris Kandel, on the states right market.

Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures

Sixteen features is the final determination of Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, Ben S. Cohen, president, to be released in two groups of eight each. The first four are completed, as follows:

The Drag-Net.
Phantom of Santa Fe.
Tundra.
Three Wise Monks.

There will also be at least one serial.

John Golder, of Hollywood Film Exchange, Philadelphia and Washington, has bought the Burroughs-Tarzan 1936-37 franchise for eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and West Virginia, Washington, Maryland and Delaware. Monarch Film, Detroit, bought the franchise for lower Michigan peninsula.

Mr. Cohen will continue 1936-37 product-sales conferences for another two weeks, with Harry Rathner, general sales manager. They will also negotiate foreign distribution. Mr. Cohen will return to Hollywood for final production conferences, then back to the east and Europe.

Celebrity Productions

P. A. Powers "ComicColor Cartoons" and the new series of "Reg'lar Fellers" cartoons for 1936-37 may be produced in New York instead of Los Angeles. Harry A. Post, vice president, is now on the coast to confer with the cartoon producer, Ub Iwerks, on the practicability of moving the entire plant eastward, or

The Devil Doll

(MGM)

Fantastic Drama

While this production is a weirdly fantastic melodrama, it is not a horror picture. It tells a story, the relation of which is made possible only through the technical advantages of the modern screen. Basically it's a melodrama of revenge. With the entertainment and commercial possibilities of that type of entertainment understood, the picture is also a novelty to which there should accrue unusual and effective interest-creating possibilities.

The story told is one adapted from Abraham Merritt's book "Burn, Witch, Burn," plus an original authored by Tod Browning, the director, titled "Witch of Timbuctoo." It tells of a Frenchman who, framed by his partners and sent into exile on a penal colony island, determines upon a terrible revenue. Making his escape with a deranged scientist who has been experimenting with a serum that shrinks animals and humans to doll size, he returns to his homeland to avenge himself upon those who ruined him. The combination serves to form a novel story idea and a gripping dramatic theme. Naturally, supplementing the suspense and adventure of its motivating melodrama, it also carries an attractive and sympathy stimulating story of two young lovers.

Lionel Barrymore, currently in "Road to Glory," is the featured player. In the sequences in which he goes about his terrible revenge, reducing, paralyzing and killing his enemies, he appears as a haggish old woman in grotesque makeup. Henry B. Walthall is the scientist. The story's romantic contest is handled by Frank Lawton, now in "Trouble for Two," and Maureen O'Sullivan. The trio of enemies are Robert Greig, Pedro de Cordoba and Arthur Hohl. A character as vivid as Barrymore's is played by Rafaela Ottiano Other players in the cast are Lucy Beaumont, Grace Ford, Juanita Quigley, Claire du Brey, Rollo Lloyd and E. Allyn Warren.

My Man Godfrey

(Universal)

Farce Comedy

Farcical and ridiculous comedy is the tune to which this story spins. Continually the dominating factor, it is being incorporated so that the substantiating elements of novel hectic romance and equally explosive light drama, though always subordinate to it, are inspired by it. The premise and theme are funny. In narration the spirit of wild exciting fun motivates the dialogue, action, situations and characterizations. The producers are anticipating that its presentation will result in one of the season's top all-laugh shows. The basis for their opinion is the quality of the story, the stars featured, players in the supporting cast and ability of the director to extract all the comedy values of a hilarious story.

The picture is adapted from a novel by Eric Hatch. The book enjoyed a wide sale, a fact that should prove beneficial to the picture inasmuch as many persons are familiar with the amusing story and its topical modern comedy quality. That the full spirit of the story should be retained in the original, Hatch collaborated with Morrie Ryskind in preparing the screen play. That its comedy value should be fully developed Universal decided on Gregory LaCava for direction. His comedy talents have been proved by many features, particularly "She Married Her Boss" and "Affairs of Cellini."

Furthering the importance that is attached to comedy, William Powell, currently in "Ex-Mrs. Bradford" and "Ziegfeld," and Carole Lombard, who made a name for herself as a comedienne in "Hands Across the Table" and "Princess Comes Across," were selected for the leads. The supporting cast lists several better than ordinary names, Alice Brady, Eugene Pallette, Gail Patrick, Mischa Auer, Alan Mowbray, Jean Dixon, Robert Light, Pat Flaherty and Grady Sutton.

The story is up to date. A supposed bum is picked off a dump and made butler in a household composed exclusively of nuts. His experiences, romantic, dramatic and seriotragic, are continually comic as, first setting that household in order, he lures his nutty sweetheart to the erstwhile dump that has been transformed into a place of grandeur.

The Return of Sophie Lang

(Paramount)

Mystery Drama

Jewel robbery stories many times having proved their entertainment and commercial value, this production picks up the well tried formula and is being looked upon by its sponsors to provide satisfactory film fare. It is being given a novel treatment.

In the story, Sophie Lang, loved as a feminine Raffles in other pictures, returns from the grave. Actually she never has been dead, but to maintain an alibi she has completed the ruse and comes to take a farewell look at her tomb prior to embarking for America and a new life. Then the fun and drama begins. A wealthy woman is taking a valuable diamond to America. Sophie, her companion, falls in love with a reporter she met at her grave. She recognizes a notorious jewel thief. The jewel is stolen. Sophie is arrested. The thief slips the loot into the reporter's pocket. But though the thief, recovering the diamond, endeavors to pin the guilt on Sophie, she eludes the police to trap the thief and decides that it's more exciting to be in love than to live a life of crime.

Alexander Hall directs. The writers, Phillip MacDonald, Eve Greene and Harlan Ware, collaborated on preparing the William R. Lipman-William Wright story for the screen.

The four principal players are well known film names. Gertrude Michael is Sophie, Ray Milland the reporter, Elizabeth Patterson the woman whose jewel was stolen, and Guy Standing is the incognito thief. Other personalities in the cast are Colin Tapley, Paul Harvey, Gary Owen, Forrester Harvey, Ted Oliver, Charles Coleman and Jack Raymond.

Women Are Trouble

(MGM)

Comedy

Though not being considered a big feature, this production is being looked upon as entertainment that will relax and satisfy. Fundamentally the story is exciting, fun provoking comedy in which there is much suspense and action, romance and intrigue and a chapter of dramatic adventure that is being produced in attractive style.

The title is the keynote; women are trouble, the one featured here particularly causing plenty of it for all who come in contact with her. Modern, all the action happening in a big city, the yarn is a newspaper story. It tells of an ambitious girl who gets a job on the town's biggest paper and by chance becomes the star reporter of a series of exciting happenings including a murder, a gangster street battle, a kidnaping and the attempt of a racketeer mob to take over a legitimate business.

The picture is being made with an adequate cast. Paul Kelly is the editor, Florence Rice the embryo reporter and Stuart Erwin the wisecracking scribbler with whom she shares all the romance, most of the comedy and much of the drama. Supporting players include Margaret Irving, Cy Kendall, John Harrington, Kitty McHugh and Raymond Hatton in the next most important roles. Others listed are Robert Livingstone, William Tannen, Frank Lackteen and Alex Melish.

The story is an original by George Coxe and the screen play was prepared by Michael Fessier. The director, Errol Taggart, is a new addition to the MGM ranks.

Stage Struck

(Warner)

Musical Comedy Drama

For entertainment and commercial purposes this promises to be a colorful combination of gay romance, light drama, mirthful comedy, tuneful music and lavish production effects that will make for audience and exhibitor interest. Being made by an organization that specializes in elaborately mounted backstage life musicals, it is anticipated that this production will take rank with any of the previous musical successes.

Basically, the story with musical, dance and specialty features included in the proper places follows an established formula, but it nevertheless is not without novelty and originality that set it distinctly apart from anything heretofore seen. It concerns a young girl-show dance director and the experiences that befall him in his workaday and romantic life.

The screen play for the original story by Robert Lord is the work of Tom Buckingham. Direction is in the hands of Busby Berkeley, maker of several of the most spectacular girl dance numbers in other shows and also the director of "Golddiggers of 1935," "Stars over Broadway" and "Bright Lights."

Musical numbers are by the team of E. Y. Harburg and Harold Allen, who wrote the music and lyrics for "The Singing Kid." Numbers in which the Yacht Club boys appear are their own.

Dick Powell and Joan Blondell again are teamed again in the leading roles. This time Miss Blondell is Powell's romantic and business nemesis. A newcomer to pictures, Jeanne Madden, is the third side of the romantic dramatic triangle. The supporting cast will present Frank McHugh, Spring Byington, Carol Hughes, Hobart Cavanaugh and Warren William in the featured roles along with the four singing Yacht Club Boys, who scamper in and out of the picture.

OWNERS OF 1,500 HOUSES AT ALLIED NATIONAL GATHERING IN CLEVELAND

Exhibitor Group at Cleveland Hopes to Provide Russell Hardy with Ammunition for Federal Trade Practices Case

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Several hundreds of independent exhibitors are in Cleveland today attending the annual convention of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, airing their individual problems of operating a motion picture theatre with a view to arriving at solutions which will better their positions not only in their competitive relations among themselves, but with the distributors.

The convention was enlivened at the outset when Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board, opposed the suggestion of Nathan Yamins, president, that problems of trade practices be clarified at round table discussions with the distributors.

Admittedly, they are a scrappy bunch of delegates who are assembled in the meeting room on the mezzanine of the Hollenden Hotel, demanding action—and at once!—on the problems which they are setting forth for adjustments. They seek to effect a stronger position in the business scheme of the motion picture, regardless of whether it be done through the courts, through legislative persuasion, or otherwise.

The Hollenden was buzzing on the opening morning of Wednesday with some 300 theatre owner delegates registered even before Cleveland's mayor, Howard H. Burton, delivered the official welcome address. Another 150 were en route to the city—representing in all some 1,500 independent theatres.

Complaint to Hardy Waited

The directors, as usual, met in a pre-convention session, at an early hour Wednesday morning, to draw their lines of strategy and steer the outcome to "headline" proportions. Expected momentarily was the registration, formally, of a vitriolic complaint against the large interests, with Russell Hardy, special assistant United States attorney general. Mr. Hardy was the prosecutor in the Government's anti-trust case against Warner, RKO and Paramount, in the Fanchon & Marco St. Louis matter. Allied hopes to provide Mr. Hardy with the basis for a federal case on the trade practices as indulged in both by the large distributors and their theatre affiliates.

There were whisperings around the convention hall long before the start that Allied is to embrace a national plan of insurance for independent theatres with the firm of Lloyd's, of London, reputedly effecting a large saving in premiums from any rates now existing in this country. More than 50 New England exhibitors were said to be already committed to the plan. The Boston Allied affiliate sponsored the idea, with early estimates that the national Allied will take out at least a $100,000 policy with Lloyd's the first year.

"SHUT-OUT" BUYING IS HAWAII PLAINT, TOO

Charles Franklin, New York attorney, on Tuesday wired Attorney General Homer S. Cummings to take action on an investigation which he said the Department of Justice has been conducting for 20 months into the product situation in Hawaii.

Mr. Franklin informed the attorney general of reports that complaints by independent theatres on the islands had been given scant notice as a result of alleged influence exercised by the Consolidated Amusement Company, dominant operator in Hawaii.

Mr. Franklin charged that Consolidated is overbuying from the major companies for the purpose of forcing out of business houses controlled by Franklin Theatrical Enterprises.

Allied is to get a master policy. The various sectional affiliates, in turn, will receive sub-master policies, and they will write policies for the individual exhibitor.

The plan probably will provide for a 25 per cent reduction from annual rates, with Lloyds paying from the first dollar on all accident claims against theatres above $25, or possibly another plan whereby the exhibitor would receive a flat 10 per cent reduction in the rates he is now paying or upon manual rates based on seating capacity. An additional 10 per cent reduction would be given at the end of the second year if the exhibitor will re-sign.

Myers Sounds Warning

Sounding the keynote, "The Job Must Be Done," Mr. Myers said among the trade practices which interfere with the rendering by exhibitors of the maximum of service to the public, tending to vest control of operating policy in persons remote from such communities are: (a) compulsory block booking and blind selling; (b) unreasonable protection and clearance; (c) favoritism in leasing and delivering films to affiliated theatres; (d) compulsory designation of playdates, and, (e) regulation of admission prices of subsequent-run independent theatres in favor of prior run affiliated theatres.

"Independent exhibitors," therefore, declared Mr. Myers, "are warranted in employing all necessary legal means to carry the foregoing principles into effect, including campaigns for legislation and litigation and the setting up or encouraging of additional sources of supply."

Citing the independent exhibitors as having made a major contribution to the growth and development of the industry, Mr. Myers warned the large companies that "the independents are deserving of as much consideration as any other branch of the industry."

National Plan for London Lloyd's Insurance for Independents Is an Early Topic of "Buying Convention"

The independents must maintain their own independent trade associations, he added, and they must refuse to cooperate with "producer-subsidized" organizations of exhibitors and their leaders, referring, it is assumed, to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which Edward L. Kuykendall is president.

Cites "5-5-5" Debacle

"The motion picture business is a legitimate business and its affairs should be so conducted as to inspire confidence within the industry and command the respect of the public," continued Mr. Myers, adding: "I have before me a copy of the proposals submitted by Allied to a joint conference of the several branches of the industry in December, 1929. That was the beginning of the socalled '5-5-5 Conferences.' These proposals, prepared and submitted before the animosities had been aroused by the persistent attempts of the 'Haysites' to undermine Allied, would have provided all the concessions to fair dealing and cooperative machinery necessary to insure complete harmony and cooperation among and between the different branches of the industry throughout the depression. It would be interesting to hear the executives of the major companies explain to their stockholders why they rejected these moderate but sound proposals in favor of a campaign of harassment and oppression against many thousands of their customers."

Mr. Myers added, "Most of all I would like to know what those executives would say when it became apparent to their stockholders and creditors that by openly employing such tactics over a period of years they have sacrificed the sympathy and support of public groups with an aggregate membership running into the millions, with the result that today Allied, not the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, is recognized by these groups as representing decency and progress in the motion picture industry."

Calls Conferences "Ridiculous"

The MPTOA's present conferences with the large interests for the establishment of a set of fair trade practices was described by Mr. Myers as being "a performance more ridiculous than any farce, funnier than any comedy. The pity of it is that Charles Dickens or Cervantes is not alive to embalm it in enduring literature."

"Experience teaches that nothing can be gained by petitioning the 'Big Eight' for reforms or redress," warned Mr. Myers.

INDEPENDENT FILM DEAL CONFIRMED

"The only hope for relief is in the direction of legislation and litigation."

Mr. Myers concluded with the observation that the independent owners "should continue with renewed interest and vigor your efforts to solve the ever-increasing menace of product shortage by encouraging the establishment of new sources of production."

In this connection, the delegates heard an explanation of the arrangement which Allied made recently whereby it guarantees between 3,500 and 4,000 accounts to Chesterfield and Invincible for the purchase of 18 pictures in 1936-37, as reported in detail in Motion Picture Herald May 23rd, page 13.

Attacks on the large distributors by Mr. Myers and other Allied leaders, however, did not deter the companies from sending representatives to the convention hall. David Palfreyman was on hand, representing all the large companies, in his position as exhibitor contact for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors. Also present were: Frank J. McCarthy, eastern sales manager for Universal; George Weeks, sales manager of GB Pictures; Reginald Wilson, special sales representative for GB; Robert Mintz, of Stage and Screen Productions; George R. Batcheller, president of Chesterfield; Maury Cohen, president of Invincible; Edward A. Golden, general sales manager of Chesterfield and Invincible, and others.

Allied's leaders made clear at the beginning that they would deal vigorously with the subjects of (1) buying in its relation to the present sales season's activities of distributors for 1936-37; (2) a curb on producer "aggression"; and, (3) selling terms which, it is charged, "are ruining hundreds of independent exhibitors."

The principal group delegations on hand to hear the program included 34 from Michigan, 12 from Philadelphia, 22 from New England, six from Texas, two from California, 14 from Minnesota, 20 from Wisconsin, 30 from Chicago, 20 from Indiana, 12 from New Jersey and 150 from Cleveland and the surrounding territory. Local Cleveland owners were enlisted en masse to work with M. B. Horwitz, convention chairman, in arranging the program and entertaining the delegates and their guests.

"A Buying Convention"

The convention was called principally as "a buying convention," and with that in hand the major business was analyzation of the product and policies of all companies as promised for 1936-37, and as they compare with 1935-36.

Allied, said its leaders, is refusing to "face another selling season blind as to what we are to buy and what we are to get."

Leading the various delegations was the entire national executive personnel: Nathan Yamins, president, Fall River, Mass; Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board, Washington; Fred J. Herrington, secretary, Pennsylvania; Herman Blum, treasurer, Baltimore; H. M. Richey, recording secretary, Detroit; Martin G. Smith, regional vice-president, Toledo; Aaron Saperstein, regional vice-president, Chicago, and executive committee members Walter Littlefield, Boston, and Sidney E. Samuelson, New Jersey.

Shortly after the convention was started on Wednesday the officers announced to the delegates that the directors had confirmed the distribution deal with Chesterfield and Invincible; organized a committee to work on an Allied membership expansion program; instructed state leaders to summarize state theatre taxes, and appointed another committee to investigate Lloyd's low-rate insurance offer. The membership-expansion committee, selected geographically, each to extend the activities in his respective division, include: Martin Smith, of Toledo; Arthur Howard, New England, and J. B. Clinton, Minnesota.

Steffes In Action

One of the pre-convention highlights was the renewed demand by W. A. (Fighting Al) Steffes, former Allied president, that "Hays must go!" Mr. Steffes declared: "Chief among the tasks of the independent theatre owner, if he is to withstand the continued and insidious attempts being made to trustify the business and eliminate the little fellow, is the removal of Will H. Hays as head of the producer-distributor association."

"Allied national must justify its existence—and without delay—by taking concrete steps (not negotiation) and obtaining concrete results in the solution of this (the independent exhibitors') problem," declared Harry A. Cole, regional vice-president, of Texas.

Committees named to handle the convention included:

National Convention Committee

H. M. Richey, chairman; Nathan Yamins, Sidney E. Samuelson, W. A. Steffes, M. B. Horwitz, Martin G. Smith, William Davis.

General Convention Committee

M. B. Horwitz, chairman; Henry Greenberger, John Kalafat, Ernest Schwartz, Myer Fine, L. G. Baldwin, John Urbansky.

Hardy and Bertrand Speakers

The program included addresses by the following: Russell Hardy, on trade practices; Daniel Bertrand, on the same subject; D. L. Lowe, of the Federal Housing Administration; P. S. Harrison, on "The Coming Buying Season"; M. B. Horwitz; H. M. Richey, on convention activities; Nathan Yamins, on the convention's keynote; Henry Greenberger, outlining entertainment; George W. Weeks, "The Outlook for 1937;" Ray Tesch, "Is Designation of Play Dates Illegal?" Sidney Samuelson, "Our Good Friends, the Public."

Committees were appointed to handle the matters of legislation, chain theatre expansion, taxation, product situation, designation of play dates, theatre loans, theatre building, the music tax, copyright laws, score charges, trailers.

Fall Ad Campaign Under Discussion

To stimulate late summer and early fall theatre attendance at a time when the industry launches its new theatre season, advertising and publicity heads of member companies of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America are considering an annual national institutional advertising campaign.

The campaign would be financed by participating companies. Consideration is being given to the idea for this fall when the presidential campaign will keep many patrons before their radios during September, October and November. A promotion campaign stressing the new product would do much to offset the loss of patronage, it is believed. If successful this year, the cooperative campaign would be staged annually.

Robert Gillham of Paramount, S. Charles Einfeld of Warner Brothers and Howard Dietz of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have been appointed a committee to develop the idea. Alternates are Oscar Doob, Loew's, and S. Barret McCormick, RKO.

The Road to Glory

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

As this picture unfolds it takes the audience first into a rest camp, then into the front line trenches where the tattered remnants of a glorious French regiment has lived and died for two years. It travels a realistically grim road to glory, telling its story in a forceful nerve tingling way, but also in a manner that is impressively human and heart touching. It is an arresting drama, neither glorifying war nor condemning it.

Forcefully produced, scope and scale of effects impressively capturing the spirit of men who lived and died in seething war, there is an atmosphere of realism that held the unwavering attention of the preview audience. The horror of conflict being constantly present either actually or by powerful illusion, the manner in which it has been applied here provokes only sympathy and compassion for all the men and the one woman with whom the yarn is concerned. Yet when it plunges into the melodrama of the Big Drive, there is a symphony of noise, cracking machine guns, roaring shells and bursting grenades that has the power and effectiveness to lift anyone right out of his seat. A thrilling piece of spectacle, the surge it evokes is not permitted to create hysteria inasmuch as the immediate following sequence is the solemnity of Mass in a hospital.

Tersely "The Road to Glory" concerns itself only with the romance, drama, humor, pathetic tragedy, courageous heroism, fear inspired cowardice and the patriotic sacrifice of the men who fought for France. Understandable drama is expressed in the character of Captain LaRoche, a soldier of blood and iron, charged with holding his sector and counting not the cost of men in maintaining it. There is drama, too, in his relations with Lieut. Denet, drama that becomes intensive, though in the early part it is tinged with gay comedy, when audiences become aware that Denet is falling in love with Monique, the girl beloved by LaRoche. There's humor in hardboiled but tender hearted top sergeant Bouffiou (practically enabling Gregory Ratoff to steal the show) that's laugh provoking in its contrasting power. There's horror, too, as the weary veterans and frightened replacements take their place in line to march up to the front. Nerves are chilled as the fear wracked platoon listens to sappers digging beneath their trench to plant a mine. Suspense and tenseness so created give way to humor as Bouffiou gets a letter warning him that if he doesn't make a payment on his music box, he will find himself in serious trouble. The relief that comes to the men turns to tragedy as the replacing regiment becomes the victim of the exploding mine.

Preceding the big drive, there is pathetic drama as LaRoche finds his father, private Monet, in the replacements. He tries to send the old man back, but Papa LaRoche, in heart touching comic collusion with Bouffiou, defeats his intent. The drama of this gives way to personal drama when LaRoche discovers the relationship between Monique and Denet. Then comes the drive, a mighty portrayal of desperate men bent on a dangerous mission. Rushing towards its climax, LaRoche is ordered to string a wire to a machine-gun infested outpost. The job calls for volunteers and as Denet accepts the job, Bouffiou, Papa LaRoche and Regnier are in the patrol. The unit decimated en route, Papa turns coward, and when the phone installation is completed, the fear crazed man grenades his comrades, believing them to be the enemy, wounding Bouffiou, who dies as Denet strives to exonerate Papa from responsibility. But LaRoche learns the truth, and his love of country and father surpassing any other love, takes the old man with him to the outpost, where, now blinded, he gives the directions to his own artillery that annihilates them in their own barrage. The finale has Denet assuming the dead captain's command, but having the love of Monique to inspire him, giving the company orders to move up to the front again.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre. The force and impressiveness of the production held the audience continually in hushed and appreciative silence.

Girl of the Ozarks

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Sentimental melodrama to make them cry a bit, liberal doses of comedy in action, dialogue, situations and characterizations to make them laugh a lot and just a few dabs of romance to supply the expected and necessary love interest —all of which centers about little Virginia Weidler, who does an exceptional job—constitute this picture's entertainment and showmanship. The kind of show for family type audiences and especially attractive to children, it's a hokum tinged yarn of Missouri mountain folk. Production detail capturing the spirit of the locale and the personalities of the characters, the picture consistently centers attention on its little girl lead. Such technique endows the film with considerable human interest, not only in the child who loves to lie for the pure fun of it, but further because she believes her tall stories will be pleasing to her ailing mother and fire-eating gun-toting granmaw.

Incorrigible story-telling Edie Mosely, letting her imagination run wild, is a baffling problem child to school teacher Miss Trent. Apparently her one redeeming quality is the way in which she lies to her sick mother, Maw Mosely, and the peculiar childish prayers she makes up asking the Lord and other heavenly denizens to make her a good girl. Comedy enters in the manner in which she inspires fiery tongued Granny into action, and there is a hint of romance between shiftless mountain printer Bolton and city girl Gail Rogers. Drama enters as Granny, wanting Edie to be as well dressed for graduation exercises as any of the other youngsters, steals a dress. It turns comic again when Wilder, demanding his property, breaks up the exercises. Despite the pleas of Miss Trent, the threats of Granny and Edie's self defense, there's nothing for kind hearted sheriff Stuart to do but take the youngster in charge. She's placed in the guardianship of careless but lovable Bolton, but he falls down and there's nothing for the county to do but send the girl to an institution. The sequence in which Edie tells a white lie to her dying mother to gloss over the serio-tragedy is a tear jerker.

So played by little Miss Weidler and the rest of the cast that the story is continually aimed to play upon the more tender emotions, it carries a continuous atmosphere of pathos that has the power to make audiences believe what they are seeing. Yet the picture is not a somber affair; the manner in which comedy has been inserted precludes that.

Previewed in Alexander Theatre, Glendale. A typical suburban town neighborhood house in which many more pretentious pictures are previewed, audience reaction indicated that they appreciated the entertainment and was enthusiastic in applauding Miss Weidler.

DARINGLY DIFFERENT TYPE OF SCREEN ATTRACTION SALUTED WITH THE GREATEST REVIEWS IN THE HISTORY OF THE MOTION PICTURE PRESS!

"'The Green Pastures' is something new under the motion picture sun! It has had no predecessor; nothing heretofore produced is even vaguely similar. Sure to make a deep impression upon audiences, it looms as a valuable contribution in the progress of screen production. It is a tribute to brainy, intelligent craftsmanship," declares Motion Picture Daily. "To describe the utter charm of 'The Green Pastures' makes a review sound like some Warner publicity. And a week after 'Anthony Adverse' from the same lot, it sets an example difficult for any studio to follow! In every department it may be regarded as flawless. Undoubtedly one of the outstanding films of the decade!"-Douglas Churchill's syndicated review. "One of the screen's truly great dramatic recordings is Warners' production of 'The Green Pastures'. It will feed the pride of producers, directors, players and all who had a big or little share in the film translation. It will amply feed the tills of exhibitors in city and hamlet the world around, wherever folk can be moved by simple, majestic drama and beauty. Primarily it is mass entertainment—and should have a long, prosperous life on merit and novelty which will be widely broadcast", writes Variety Daily. Louella Parsons, popular motion picture columnist, calls this "One of the grandest pictures ever made!" "Marvelous—there never was a better or finer picture made!" agrees Harry Neimeyer of St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "It's a pip – most refreshing picture I've ever seen!" raves Dorothy Manners of Photoplay. "A magnificent motion picture!" says Literary Digest. And Jack Moffitt of the Kansas City Star names it "the greatest picture to come out of Hollywood"! "Laughter from the heart was the perfect tribute. Surely this is the most beautiful triumph of the screen for years to come!"—Richard Sheridan Ames of Chicago Mail. "Extraordinarily moving. If anything the congratulations showered on Jack Warner were more effusive than those following the preview of 'Anthony Adverse'!"—Harrison Carroll's syndicated flash. "'The Green Pastures' deserves a play date in every theatre throughout the whole wide world. It is grand entertainment! You will be able to look back upon its engagement at your theatre with pleasure – when you think of the receipts; and with pride—that your theatre was privileged to play it," is the opinion of Editor 'Chick' Lewis of Showmen's Trade Review. "An opinion can be best expressed by cheers. If you get the idea that I am very much excited about 'The Green Pastures', then you've got the right idea!" says Sidney Skolsky in his syndicated column. "Undoubtedly one of the most unusual and most entertaining motion pictures to reach the screen!" ex-claims Jimmy Starr of the L. A. Herald-Express. "A perfect marvel of entertainment!"—Lloyd Pantages. "An absolute artistic triumph!" reports Box-Office. "This is positively one of the finest films the screen has ever made—a film to see and cheer about", says William Boehnel in the N.Y. World-Telegram.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE MOST INTERESTING development to date growing out of the huge expenditures by the Works Progress Administration on stage play producing, writing projects and other boon-dogglings, is the "discovery" by WPA research investigators of the how and why of Uncle Sam.

The WPA people in Washington have given official sanction to an old story that the pictorial figure, long, lean and bewhiskered, in striped pants, high hat and long-tailed coat, sprang from one Samuel Wilson, a meat inspector during the War of 1812, who held forth in the collar-factory city of Troy, New York, less than a stone's throw from the Sixth Avenue mansion—in which we were born—of our ancestral Pat Sullivan, of the "Big Tim" Sullivans.

Mr. Wilson, it appears, was a supervisor of workers at the Troy meat establishment, and among his intimates he was known as "Uncle Sam." Some of the meat was purchased for the government for use in the war, and on the barrels to be shipped were stenciled the initials "U. S.," for United States. Asked what they meant, a facetious worker said "Uncle Sam."

Workmen from the meat packing place were soon enlisted in the war and when they found "U. S." stamped on their guns and clothing and equipment they continued to refer to the letters as "Uncle Sam." Others began using the phrase—and made it what it is today.

The WPA searchers believe a picture of "Uncle Sam" Wilson is in the possession of a descendant living in Kansas City—and they're going to get it, by gad, if it takes another half-a-billion-dollar Works Progress Administration appropriation from Congress to find it.

Reverend Edmund J. Walsh, S.J., believes the President of the United States should be paid at least as much as film stars of "questionable intelligence."

The five Dionne babies in Canada reached their second anniversary the other day with a gross income to date of $250,000, of which Twentieth Century-Fox contributed $50,000 for a nine-minute sequence for their "Country Doctor," and Pathe News contributed another $45,000 under its contract for exclusive motion picture rights. In the instance of "The Country Doctor," Pathe waived its rights to allow the guardians to get the $50,000 from Fox, and for that gesture they extended Pathe's exclusive filming contract. It still has another three years to run, Pathe paying a flat sum annually, plus a percentage of the gross on any short subjects it releases. The sum involved in this connection is reputed to run in the neighborhood of $60,000 to $70,000 a year, but part of it is paid by Newspaper Enterprise Association, Pathe getting the motion picture and NEA the still photo rights.

Not all of the $250,000 intake, however, is clear profit for the Dionne babies, who, born without a dime on May 28, 1934, cost $1,000 monthly to keep, some $30,000 having been spent so far on Yvonne, Annette, Cecile, Emilie and Marie in their 24 months of life. Even so, $220,000 net profit so far is not a bad return on the investment. Then there's the new $250,000 three-picture contract for next year that was signed the other day with Fox.

When the guardianship of Doctor Allan Dafoe and Judge Valin expire, on the quintuplets' 18th birthday, D. Q., Inc., may easily be worth $1,500,000.

Already the newspaper, magazine and newsreel publicity has whetted the appetite of the curious to the point where visitors to the Dionne countryside have poured $1,000,000 into the coffers of merchants and hotels thereabouts. The kids pay Papa and Mamma $100 monthly.

YOUNG KENNETH O'BRIEN, ambitious press agent on Monroe Greenthal's staff at United Artists, submitted for publication in our pictorial section a photograph of Selznick International's "Garden of Allah" unit on location. The scene shows a few tents and a handful of technicians on a desert. There's not another sign of life, except desolate stretches of white sand as far as the eye can see, and an occasional telephone pole. The small "Allah" unit is enclosed within a thin cord fence on which hang numerous signs, warning: "POSITIVELY NO ADMITTANCE" — and there's not a soul within miles.

Riding the desert plains, along with others carrying the principals in "The Garden of Allah," is a big, white Arabian stallion, named Jadaan. Seventeen years ago, Jadaan carried Rudolph Vanentino to fame, and Dick Rowland's Metro Pictures to a $4,000,000 fortune in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." It was a triumph of a new Don Juan of the screens, a victory for Latin love and suppressed desire among the millions of movie morons. Valentino, unknown before he rode Jadaan, began to ride the crest of thousands of violet-scented fan letters received daily at the studio.

Jadaan carried Valentino through Metro, then Famous Players and on to United Artists, where the star died and the horse was dispatched to retirement. Today Jadaan returns to the place where his master worked last—at United Artists.

The austere Hudson County Bar Association in New Jersey has passed a resolution condemning motion pictures because they ridicule lawyers.

The barristers want accurate portrayals, they say. So, henceforth, the films will be expected to show scenes of fabulously wealthy lawyers frolicking at swanky night clubs, others accepting huge retainers for defending the nation's worst public enemies and vice lords, but never a lawyer admitting to his client that he should not have lost his case, refusing to accept any fee, because the case was not properly prepared. The Hudson County lawyers might even be shown lending their aid to motion picture producers in a movie depicting hordes of lawyers converging like albatrosses on bankruptcies and corporate reorganizations.

The squelch elegant is Lowell (Kansas City) Lawrence's report of the Hollywood ham actor who, following the death of a wellknown star, rushed into the office of the studio's chief executive and said he would like to take the place of the player who had just died. "It's okay with me," snapped the producer, "if the undertaker is willing!"

historical political drama which is both entertaining and educational.

Intelligently produced, directed vigorously and convincingly acted, the picture is of a caliber for any kind of audience. All is set to stage the climactic sequence, the history making battle between the devastating terror of the Confederate fleet, the railroad track covered Merrimac, and the hope of the North, the Monitor, cheesebox on a raft. Naval buddies in the Federal forces, Kenneth and Raymond are made enemies as Kenneth remains true to the Union and Raymond follows the Stars and Bars, and Constance is torn by her love for the two. Switching from the romance and drama of this, the picture turns to the drama of the effort of John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor, to convince President Lincoln, Admiral Farragut and the Secretary of War that his cheesebox is the only salvation for the North against the Merrimac which Raymond has raised and with which he is scourging the wooden fleet. Finally, Lincoln, whose heart is always charitable and humane, consents, and Kenneth is assigned to command of the Monitor. The ironclads meet. Both buddies know that it is a battle of life or death. The world knows the Monitor won.

Possessing the necessary class in personnel, story content and personalities presented, as well as being an ambitious production undertaking, the picture is an exploitation feature that places countless opportunities in the hands of exhibitors for contact showmanship with schools and patriotic associations.

Romantic Comedy Drama

Introduction of three song numbers makes lots of difference in this picture. They noticeably strengthen its entertainment caliber and endow it with a showmanship character that should prove helpful to exhibitors. Without the music—a topical girl-in-love song, a cowboy ballad and a sentimental love number—the picture would be just an average light dramatic comedy romance. With it the show is a bit of pleasing amusement for showmen.

Seconding the entertainment and commercial worth in a story that has only thin plot motivation are several good performances. As she is seen here Frances Langford takes a definite step up the ladder. Not only is her singing pleasing, but she shows promise as a comedy romance player. Introduction of Smith Ballew, other than the fact that he sings, is not particularly auspicious, but Guy Standing, Ernest Cossart, Spring Byington and Sterling Holloway are effective and E. E. Clive in is for a comedy bit that nearly steals the show.

Joan Smyth, very attractive to the boys, thinks her father is a man of position. Expelled from college for indulging her gambling proclivities, the modern miss goes to join her supposedly rich dad in California's colorful society—movie folk playground, Palm Springs. The old boy turns out to be only a roulette table croupier. Determined to make a marriage that will lift the family out of the slough of poverty, Joan encourages socialite Britell, whose aunt, Letty, is decidedly suspicious of the young lady. Meantime it is evident that Joan is actually in love with Slim, a singing horse wrangler. As Letty calls in Englishman Morgan to do his bit of picture stealing in an attempt to identify Joan as the English lady she claims she is, at Britell's engagement party, Captain Smyth denounces the girl as an impposter, an act that blasts the Britell engagement and drives her into the arms of Slim.

Previewed at Alexander Theatre Glendale. In appreciating the class of music as sung by Miss Langford and Ballew, it was evident that without the melodies the crowd didn't regard the comedy romance drama of the picture very highly. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

The White Angel

(Warner - First National)

Drama

The drama of a great ideal, the drama of a great woman, Florence Nightingale, this picture is fine entertainment for any kind of audience. Also it is an exploitation show that places in the hands of exhibitors countless opportunities to indulge in soundly constructive interest creating and business building campaigns. It is the kind of picture, like "Louis Pasteur," in which intelligent attention on the part of writers, director and players has been paid to the importance of dramatic detail in situations, incidents and characterizations.

Though the picture is entirely different in theme motivation from "Pasteur," there is a direct entertainment parallel that it does not seem possible that audiences will miss or showmen overlook. Always treated with a sincere dignity, with Kay Francis giving an impressive and convincing sympathy-winning performance, it is the story of Florence Nightingale, founder of the Red Cross, whose work in the hospitals of England and on the battlefields of the Crimean War was the inspiration for the modern profession of nursing.

In bold strokes, more impressive than they are heroic inasmuch as the action is guided by a definite humane trend, the story is told with force and dignity. Revolting against the insanity conditions prevailing in English hospitals, such as they were in the Victorian era, Florence Nightingale, a woman of high birth, is forced to bear the insults, slurs and bigoted abuses of doctors, government officials and hospital operators. To them she is a visionary woman; a dreamer and a woman ignorant of the theories of medical and nursing practises and therefore a menace. Never discouraged, bravely weathering the storm of criticism and ridicule, she holds fast to her ideals with a faith that seems inspired by some ethereal force. The Crimean War breaks out. A great opportunity dawns for Florence Nightingale and her little band of followers. On the battlefields, tortures befall her as she again is the object of derision, she undergoes the torments of bodily hardship and suffering that are glowing tributes to the faith and idealism of all womanhood. Even when she sacrifices the emotion that is closest to the heart of every woman, to turn her back on the man she loves and the man who loves her, there is a believable realism that the love of an ideal is a greater force.

As it is a story of a great dramatic ideal, it is also the story of a great triumph. Rising from the filth and dirt of the field stations, from the carnage of the battlefield, the soldiers rally to the cause of the angel of mercy. In one great sequence, all the objections of doctors, politicians, officers, vanish like the dew beneath a blazing sun. Proving herself and her theories, Florence Nightingale becomes the idol of those who derided her.

Sheer dramatic power is the outstanding quality of the picture. Human drama, honestly and sincerely told; directed and played with conviction fully reflecting that those concerned know they were engaged in producing a valuable piece of screen merchandise, the picture which heroizes a woman is a 100 per cent woman's picture. Likewise it is an attraction worthy of the attention of every man, youth or adult, who is interested in the cause of improved screen entertainment. Telling about real persons and real things, absolutely devoid of anything that is artificially theatric, it's the kind of show that exhibitors can take to the opinion creating forces in any community and demand that they support it in such a manner that it will be brought to the attention of every potential patron.

The Poor Little Rich Girl

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy Drama

Just about nine-tenths of this picture is Shirley Temple singing, dancing, acting and being the same charming girl that has endeared her to legions of theatre-goers. Considering the vogue, it doesn't seem to be such an unwise technique. The motivating story isn't much.

Quite a bit in it may be difficult for audiences to swallow. But as a vehicle that keeps Shirley in practically every sequence, either personally or by direct illusion, it serves the purpose of giving patrons plenty of the little lass. Departing widely from the original, it actually is a series of gayly comic and light dramatic situations, contrasted by only a slim thread of romantic love interest, but interluded with much singing, dancing and chances for Shirley to demonstrate her personal talents.

The first reel or so, really a prelude, serves to show that Barbara Barry is tired of being a daughter of great wealth. It concludes with an incident wherein nurse Collins being accidentally injured, Barbara, calling it a vacation, wanders into the streets of New York. Fun and spirit of the picture pick up at this point, with Barbara attaching herself to organ grinder Tony and being sheltered overnight in his tenement as she tells a white lie about running away from an orphan asylum. With a suggestion of romance involving the child's father, soap maker Richard and Margaret Allen, publicity agent for a business rival, Barbara comes to attention of hoofer Jimmy Dolan when he hears her duplicating his intricate tap steps. A threat of melodramatic kidnaping entering, Jimmy, Jerry and Barbara as Dolan, Dolan and Dolan, get a radio audition and are engaged by Margaret for the Peck soap program to combat Barry's advertising. The picture's highlight is the sequence in which Barbara melts the cold heart of sour-minded Peck. The first broadcast a success, Margaret urges Barry to listen; doing so he recognizes the child's voice. Discovering she has not arrived at summer camp, convinced that the girl is his daughter, Barry goes to the Dolan flat, to which scared and bewildered Jimmy and Jerry have returned to intercept Flagin in his second kidnap attempt. Recovery of Barbara leads to a merger with Peck and a promise of a romantic one between Barry and Margaret. The finale has an extended martial military tuned music song and tap dance number featuring the three Dolans.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre. Audience reaction indicated that no matter how much Shirley Temple there is in a picture it still is not quite enough. Applauding the little girl many times, it also seemed to think that the footage featuring her and Claude Gillingwater was the show's most attractive entertainment.

A Woman Alone

(Garrett Klement - British)

Problem Drama

Against a background of Czarist Russia, made picturesque by Guards' uniforms and by peasant costume, music and dance, this first feature of an ambitious British production unit presents, very effectively, the theme of a woman faced with the dilemma of confessing her own lack of virtue or of sending a man to death. That the admission of frailty is an untruth and that the innocent unloved man is saved by the ruin of the loved one is an additional point of story appeal.

Even without Anna Sten and Henry Wilcoxon, "A Woman Alone" would offer story values of exceptionally popular kind.

These two stars are, as it happens, very well cast. Add the colorful setting already indicated and the fact that an incidental "baby" interest is cleverly exploited, it is obvious that "A Woman Alone," which does not advertise its British origin by any defects of technique, tempo or accent, is audience material of well-proven kind.

Captain Ilyinsky, of the Guards, at a country village at which he is quartered, has a passing innocent flirtation with Maria, a peasant girl. Later he makes a marriage of convenience in St. Petersburg. A year later, Maria is summoned by her fiance Yakov, a soldier in Ilyinsky's company, to become nursemaid to the Captain's newly born son and heir.

Ilyinsky, already unhappy with his pleasure-loving wife, falls in love with Maria. She refuses him but gossip from other servants leads Yakov to think he has been betrayed.

At the barracks he strikes Ilyinsky and is sent for court-martial. In his pocket is discovered a revolutionary leaflet. He cannot read and has no knowledge of its contents, but General Petrov, chief of the secret service, is determined to prove that this attack on Ilyinsky was inspired by political reasons, and persuades Ilyinsky to sign a declaration that it could not have been caused by his relations with Maria.

The girl, whose evidence is necessary, has disappeared and several years pass before she is discovered, under another name, appearing as a successful dancer in a distant city. The court-martial is then staged, but Maria, though Yakov has told her that he no longer loves her, and though Petrov has threatened her with ruin unless she gives the evidence he desires, declares to the Court that she was Ilyinsky's mistress and that that alone caused Yakov's attack. Ilyinsky confirms his evidence, declaring his previous statement to be a lie. Yakov is released and Ilyinsky has to resign his commission, but Maria and he are united.

Over and above the story and "problem" angles, there are very considerable spectacular values to exploit. The dancing, by the Leon Woizikovsky ballet, is admirable, and the peasant songs, the balalaika music and the stage sets, all lend girl variety and color. Apart from the leads, there is some exceptionally good acting from, among others, Esme Percy, as the Secret Service chief, and John Garrick as Yakov.

Broken Blossoms

(Twickenham-British)

Tragedy

The original film of this title, directed by D. W. Griffith, is a trade classic, and comparisons inevitably will be made, by patrons as well as by traders, with this talker version of the same story. In regard to the three major features of acting, direction and atmosphere, the British film does not suffer from one's recollection of the earlier masterpiece. Like the Griffith picture it is very grim, a very moving, and a very unusual production, and its fate with audiences may be determined by the extent to which regard for artistry in these details overweights the appetite for more conventional entertainment values.

Certainly the audience appeal is unusual. The second "Broken Blossoms" like the first, is a study in stark bestial brutality, showing the blacker for the background of oriental idealism against which a sadistic slum-bully performs his atrocities. It is a white man who plays the beast, a Chinese who is the chivalrous delicate-minded hero. That is as Thomas Burke wrote it in "The Chink and the Child," and at least it is a provocative thought for those audiences which want to think about such things.

The story is practically identical with that of Griffith's film. Battling Burrows, a third-grade drunken prizefighter in Limehouse, treats his motherless child-drudge, Lucy, with callous brutality. Half-starved, cowed, she accidentally encounters Chen, idealistic young Chinese who keeps an antique shop. He is entranced by her flower-like beauty and takes the unhappy waif to his apartment, where he dresses her in Chinese robes and treats her with the reverence due a princess.

Burrows, after a successful fight, and inflamed with drink, hears where the girl is, and with a mob of toughs carries her away from Chen's house, which is left in flames. Back at his own hovel, the bruiser beats the girl until she dies. Chen arrives too late to save her, but kills Burrows. Carrying the body of the girl back to his own room he arranges flowers about her and sits down to wait his end.

Dolly Haas, in her portrayal of the fluttering frightened child, certainly need not fear memories of a performance which had much to do with creating Lillian Gish's reputation; that very fine actor Arthur Margetson is an even more repulsive Burrows than was Donald Crisp, and Emlyn Williams in Richard Barthlemess's part of Chen is not inferior to him.

The selling campaign for this picture shapes itself in the direction of asking the older patrons to compare versions and to tell the younger ones what the older picture meant in trade development. And there's the axiom that those who weep most readily will be the best word-of-mouth advertisers.

Seen at the Cambridge Theatre at a night-to-trade audience. A hushed house and a noticeable absence of applause paid tribute to the picture's gripping power. Comment was justly enthusiastic about the acting of Dolly Haas, in particular.

Musical Novelty

Sammy Lee, dance director responsible for innumerable big sequences in an endless stream of musical productions, becomes a director in his own right with release of this novelty, credited to him as a bit of an innovation and not wholly without reason. The subject depicts a simple incident of the boy-meets-girl type but counter-imposes against their dialogue a related patter carried on by their two pairs of new and painful shoes. (It sounds stupid in description but isn't in fact.) Jean Chatburn and Arthur Lake are the boy and girl and they introduce two original song numbers that may very well turn out to be popular hits. There is no struggling for comedy effects and no bearing down on novel angles. Altogether a very pleasant little picture.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Aquatic Artists

(MGM)

Diving Demonstration

Olympic diving champion Gus Smith and sound-strip champion Pete Smith (who spares you the obvious Smith Brothers crack) combine talents to tell and show how it's done. A small boy adds humor and an eyeable young woman adds feminine presence to the orthodox exhibition of springboard and pool technique and ability which is shot from interesting angles including the bottom of the tank. A seasonable short.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Phantom Rider

(Universal)

Western Serial

A Phantom Rider pitted almost single handed against a band of land grabbers, outlaws and rustlers succeeds in besting an enemy band during the first three chapters without, however, discovering the leader's identity or their purpose, which is left for subsequent chapters to relate. The main plot concerns the efforts of an unnamed "boss" to obtain, by strong-arm methods, lands, which he later anticipates selling to railroad builders. The minor plots, occurring in each chapter, are the action sequences, of which the serial abounds, and which center about Buck Jones as the phantom rider, that perennial and accomplished six-shooting horseman. The supporting cast, a large one, consists chiefly of character actors and presents Marla Shelton and Diana Gibson as the romantic interest. Highlighting the three chapters in action thrills is Jones' narrow escape from being blown to bits by dynamite, his deliverance from the maddened hoofs of a stampeding herd and the final shot of the third chapter as he and Marla Shelton are projected over a cliff into a lake. Running time, chapters approximately 20 minutes each.

Little Boy Blue

(MGM)

Character Sketch

Mr. Charles "Chic" Sale may be said to have stepped somewhat out of his class and weight in attempting to dramatize Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue," but it is to be added that he acquitted himself with a full array of acting and artistic honors. The approach to the actual recitation of the poem is by graceful, commonsense story development and there is no overstressing of the characterization at any point. A number of first rank players appear in support and the picture has all of the technical qualifications of the most upstanding major length production. It is a fine subject in every respect and for every purpose.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Polo

(MGM)

Sports Analysis

That mad scramble of men, ponies and mallets which means so little to the uninitiated when a polo match is screened becomes precisely coordinated sports competition when explained by the omniscient Pete Smith with the action slowed, stopped, reversed and repeated in demonstration of his remarks. The training of the ponies for the game makes an interesting beginning and several flashes of off-field humor lighten the general subject. An arresting addition to any program.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Racing Canines

(MGM)

Sports Review

Greyhounds from plump puppyhood to sleek maturity, whippets for contrast, assorted mutts and trained monkeys for humor, give Pete Smith a lot to talk about and the narrator was never in better form. Central factor, of course, is the use of the hounds for racing purposes, a subject lately dealt with in other short product in different and somewhat less effective manner. The last laugh is a roar, better appreciated if undescribed. The item is suitable for inclusion on any program at any time or place.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Old Mill Pond

(MGM)

Color Cartoon

This Harman-Ising jazz fantasy combines brilliant pigmentation adroitly with swingingly syncopated orchestration to produce a rare consolidation of visible and audible impressions keynoted by a Cab Calloway band composed of frogs. Bill Robinson is another of several negro professionals imitated with startling effect by the jumpy citizens of an old mill pond gone rhythmic for a night. The total effect is swift, modern, stimulating and briskly entertaining.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Arbor Day

(MGM-Roach)

Our Gang Comedy

The incredible goings-on that are depended upon for laugh production in most Our Gang comedies are sharply subordinated this time to the more normal humor abundant in the serious efforts of very small children to enact school ceremonies with their parents looking on. A pair of midgets are projected into the closing episodes with understandable result, but the major portion of the subject is made up of more or less legitimate juvenile comedy. The change is distinctly for the better.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Golf Tourney Is Reset

Due to several sales conventions scheduled for the week of June 15, and the expressed desire of many sales executives to attend the annual Film Daily Golf Tournament, the date of the tournament has been changed to June 24. The Glen Oaks Golf and Country Club, Great Neck, L. I., will be the location of the tournament as originally scheduled.

Leaves British Lion

H. Kessler Howes has resigned as publicity director of British Lion in London and will return to Columbia there in a similar capacity. He will be succeeded at British Lion by J. Leslie Williams, recently publicity director for Universal.

Film Men Examining New Canadian Budget

Film distributors of Canada are directly concerned with several provisions of the Federal Government budget now before the Canadian Parliament, although the stipulations of Charles A. Dunning, Minister of Finance, automatically became effective with their announcement in the budget speech before the House of Commons.

The duty on films remains unchanged, but so-called educational prints or negatives have been placed on the free list. The extent of this exemption is receiving the study of exchanges, but no word is yet forthcoming as to whether travel or scenic subjects as presented in theatres come under the budget change.

The exemption clause reads as follows:

"Educational moving picture films of all widths, silent or sound, positive or negative, when certified by the minister as entitled to exemption from customs duty under the convention for facilitating the international circulation of films of an educational nature; subject to such regulations as the minister may prescribe."

The exact meaning of this provision is a puzzle to the film companies.

One item on the budget which may seriously affect the industry in Canada is a new five per cent excise tax on payments to foreign film companies for imported pictures. If this is found to be a blanket resolution, the impost is expected to prove a real detriment.

Carl Laemmle to Be Honor Dinner Guest

Carl Laemmle will be guest of honor at a dinner to be tendered him at the Waldorf Astoria on June 22 under the auspices of the amusement division of the United Palestine Appeal. Probably it will be the final function signalizing his retirement from general activity in the industry.

A committee of 100, representing all branches of show business, is being organized under the general direction of Nathan Burkan, who is chairman of the amusement division of the appeal. Will H. Hays will be chairman of the dinner and Eddie Cantor and Louis Nizer co-chairmen.

Arnaud-Connors to Make Plays

Pierre Arnaud of Arnaud-Connors Associates, independent motion picture producers, has leased the Deal Conservatoire, Deal, N. J., and announces his company will produce a series of plays there this summer in connection with the Fiske Hammond Players.

RKO Outings Are Set

Two days will be necessary to take care of the 1,500 RKO home office employes on their annual excursion to Bear Mountain on the Alexander Hamilton. June 8 and 15 are the dates.

Guaranteed, Judell Deal

Guaranteed Pictures has sold "Women in White" to B. N. Judell for five mid-western states. Treo Exchange is distributing the picture in the New York area.

New Singer Company

Julius Singer is establishing a new company for 16 mm. production and rental in New York.

BUDGETS INCREASED FOR NEW FILMS

at least producing "Reg'lar Fellers" in New York and the "ComicColors" in Hollywood.

Centaur Films

Fifty-two short subjects will remain the final schedule for Walter Kofeldt's new Centaur Films.

Chadwick

Word is still awaited from I. E. Chadwick as to his plans for 1936-37. He was understood to be considering a new independent producing-distributing combine.

Chesterfield-Invincible

Allied States Association, as already announced, will engage with Chesterfield-Invincible Pictures next season in an arrangement whereby Allied promises between 3,500 and 4,000 exhibitor accounts to the producing company, for the nine productions, each to be produced by Chesterfield, George Batcheller, president, and Maury Cohen, president of Invincible. They will eventually produce 52 a year under the Allied support. The 18 for next season are as follows:

Ellis Island
Missing Girls
Dancing in the Dark
Fugitive From Justice
The Narrow Road
House of Secrets
The Adorable Cheat
Betrayed
Alone
Mysteries of Paris
The Great Ballyhoo
Red Lights Ahead
Born Lucky
The Shadow Speaks
The Only Way
Professional Model
Beauty Racket
Return of Raffles

With Allied's commitment, Chesterfield and Invincible will considerably increase budgets. An entirely new franchise arrangement will be made with states right distributors.

Columbia Pictures

June 22nd is the definite date, and Chicgao the place for Columbia's annual sales convention and 1936-37 product announcement, embracing, it is expected, some 48 features, same as this season. Sixteen will be westerns. Additionally, there will be 24 two-reelers and 100 singles. Charles Mintz will again produce 28 Barney Googles, Krazy Katz and Rhapsodies.

Foreign feature production activities will be expanded in London to prove for an increase of quota requirements of from six to 10 features, under supervision of Joe Friedman, who is in charge of the Columbia's business abroad.

Columbia has already held a series of pre-convention sales meetings, with district managers and home office officials participating in order to determine policies before the annual session. The principal discussion subject was the new system of decentralization of operations.

Completion of the first unit of its Hollywood plant expansion program, one of the purposes for which it recently offered 75,000 shares of preferred stock, was announced by Columbia the other day when the home office disclosed the nature of additional buildings and improvements in existing properties on the studio grounds, involving some $500,000.

The 1936-37 program will include contributions from talent signed during the week to new contracts or given renewals on expiring commitments. Alfred E. Green, director, formerly with Warners, was given a five-year contract. Columbia also signed Ben Bloom, former assistant at Irvin Berlin, Inc.; Dolores Del Rio, now working in England; Herman Bing, comedian. Also, options were taken up on the contracts of Herman Boxer, Searle Kramer, Preston Black and Grace Neville, writers, and signed Richard Macauley, writer.

STRIKE IN FRANCE EXTENDS TO FILMS

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

On the eve of the taking over of the government of France by the Socialists, a general strike was extended to the motion picture industry, affecting studios and laboratories and sharply reducing theatre business.

MGM, United Artists, Universal and Columbia were unable to obtain prints from laboratories.

Exhibitors fear that their employees will join the walkout.

Howard J. Green, Edward Chodorov, Jack Kirkland and Sidney Buchman, all scenarists, have been made associate producers.

Expected on the 1936-37 program are: a new series of Ken Maynard westerns, two features from Dolores Del Rio, several with Walter Connolly, three with Mary Astor, three with Fay Wray, six starring Jack Holt, to be produced by Larry Darmour, two with El Brendel, with an option for four, an undetermined number with Henry Mollison, among others.

Polly Moran is set for a new short subject series.

Conn-Ambassador-Melody

The three combinations—Harry Conn Productions, Ambassador Pictures and Melody Pictures—controlled by the Harry Conn interests, has finally decided on a total of 14 pictures for the new year as follows: four "Pinky" Tomlin musicals, to be produced by Melody, with Coy Poe assisting; six "Sport-O-Tune" features, by Conn Productions, to star Frankie Darro and Kane Richmond, and four James Oliver Curwood stories, to star Kermit Maynard. The four features already set include:

Wildcat Trooper, with Joseph O'Donnell writing the screen play, to star Tom Maynard.
Racing Blood, scenario by Stephen Morris, with Frankie Darrow.
Valley of Terror, screen play by James Alan.
Legion of the North, scenario by Thomas Gibson.

All pictures will be made at the Talisman Studios, and releases will be through states right exchanges, some of which Mr. Conn has established on his own, named Chelsea Pictures. For the most part, however, distribution will be directed through Harry Thomas's new Mutual Motion Picture Distributors, Inc.

ERNIE MARKS RETIRING; PIONEER THEATRE MAN

With the leasing of the New Martin theatre in Oshawa, Ontario, to the Oscar Hanson chain, one of the oldest and most famous families of Canadian showmen is out of the theatre picture in Canada for the first time since pioneer days. Ernie Marks, owner of the house, who is retiring, was the last of the celebrated seven Marks brothers actively engaged in the business and the only one who shifted to pictures when the stage started on its long toboggan trip.

The Marks brothers were famous Thespians who played the sticks, the cities, the crossroads, the towns and the water-tanks from one coast to the other for season after season.

Coronet Pictures

Eighteen features, to be produced in Montreal, still comprise the 1936-37 program of the new Coronet Pictures Company being sponsored by Sherman Krellberg and his Amusement Securities Corporation, with the American and Canadian markets especially in view. William Steiner, president of Coronet, already has the first in hand, titled "From Nine to Nine."

Crescent Pictures

E. B. Derr's new Crescent Pictures is well under way in Hollywood, starting the new season with eight westerns starring Tom Keene, the first being "The Glory Trail," from John T. Neville's original, direction in charge of Lyn Shores.

Fanchon and Marco

Mike Marco, senior executive of Fanchon & Marco, has been presiding at company meetings regarding the distribution of four features F. and M. will produce for 1936-37. Said the company: "Three major companies are reported negotiating for the product." Previous information included reports that some $400,000 each will be spent on the four. Already set are:

Waltz King, by Billy Wilder and Allen Rivkin.
Dance Congress, by Allen Rivkin.

Film Products

"The Amateur Show" starts off Andrew Stone's Film Products, production starting next month in Hollywood.

FitzPatrick Pictures

Twelve features to be produced by James A. FitzPatrick Pictures, in England, will be distributed in the United States by Harry Thomas' new Mutual Motion Picture Distributors, Inc., and in Canada by N. L. Nathanson. MGM will release in England and United Artists in some other foreign countries.

Mr. FitzPatrick sailed this week with Sinclair Manson, who recently joined the enterprise as production manager. A five-year recording contract was signed with RCA Photophone. They will return in August with working prints of the first two features. The first 11 include:

John Halifax, Gentleman.
Remember When, musical revue.
David Livingstone, based on the life of the African explorer.
Gangway, a sea comedy.
Bard of Avon, based on "the private life" of Shakespeare.
The Tiller Girls, musical comedy.
Auld Lang Syne, by Robert Burns.
The Captain's Table, a mystery sea murder.
Bells of St. Mary's.

'Boat' H. O. 73G

Second week of 'Show Boat' is $73,000, plenty okay.

Radio City Music Hall (5,989; 40-60-85-99-$1.10-$1.65) — 'Show Boat' (U) (2d week) and stage show. At $73,000, can't squawk. It's a nifty second week figure, after a handsome $93,500 for the first week.

'Show Boat' at $3,800,

Lincoln, May 26.

'Show Boat' is taking the cake this week at the Stuart.

Stuart (LTC) (1,900; 10-25-40)—'Showboat' (U). Picture was given a wham publicity buildup and opened premiere style which has every body talking. In for eight days if present pace stays and will get $3,800 at least, nice.

'Show Boat' $10,000 and H. O. in Pitt.;

Pittsburgh, May 26.

Weekend trade was kicked in pants by heavy rain Sunday (24) at wrong time. Brightest prospect for week is 'Show Boat' at Alvin where $10,000 session looks practically set and holds every indication of h. o. May even hit a bit above that since musical's building every day. Easily the best showing this site has had since long before flood and with Decoration Day weekend to help on second stanza should have an exceptionally profitable fortnight's stay.

Estimates for This Week

Alvin (Harris) (2,000; 25-35-40)—'Show Boat' (U). One of the best-liked musicals in years around here and pointing to around $10,000, excellent and virtually assuring a h.o. Started off briskly and building every day through great word-of-mouth.

"Show Boat" $19,600 Hit In St. Louis

The Love Dream, from the life and music of Franz Liszt.

Velvet Fingers, musical, from the life and works of Frederick Chopin.

Philip Brandon was signed as assistant director, accompanying the producer to London, following the incorporation of a new setup to handle the new enterprise, and called FitzPatrick Pictures, Ltd.

Mr. FitzPatrick will continue to produce short subjects for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, signing a new five-year contract to make 12 "TravelTalks" annually.

Garrison Film

Garrison Film Distributors acquired North and South America distribution rights to "Maedchen in Uniform," already shown in the United States, and acquired 16mm distribution rights to six Majestic short subjects, eight shorts and three features from Lenauer International Pictures, and one First Division picture.

GB Pictures

Gaumont-British Pictures' American subsidiary—GB—held its annual sales convention last week, at the Warwick Hotel, in New York, and announced 24 features for 1936-37, to be distributed here under the supervision of Jeffrey Bernerd, Gaumont's sales chief; Arthur Lee, vice president of the American subsidiary, and George Weeks, general sales manager in New York. Titles, production assignments and selling policies were detailed in Motion Picture Herald on May 30th, together with new personnel arrangements for the field staff.

The pictures will all be Class "A", Mr. Bernerd told the convention, produced on an increased budget arrangement. Several Hollywood stars, directors, writers and technicians will participate in their production, in London. Seven of the new group are already finished, as follows:

Doomed Cargo, with Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings.

The Two of Us, musical comedy with Jack Hulbert and Gina Malo.

His Majesty's Pajamas, a Capitol Film production starring Clive Brook and Helen Vinson.

The Marriage of Corbal, by Rafael Sabatini, with Nils Asther, Noah Beery, Hugh Sinclair and Hazel Terry, and produced by Capitol Film.

Where There's a Will, starring Will Hay and Gina Malo.

Nine Days a Queen—the story of Lady Jane Grey, with Cedrick Hardwick, John Mills, Nova Pillbeam, Sybil Thorndyke and Desmond Tester.

Everything is Thunder, with Constance Bennett, Douglass Montgomery and Oscar Homolka.

Now in production are:

The Great Barrier, Canadian railroad story, with Richard Arlen, Barry Mackay and Lilli Palmer.

Everybody Dance, musical, by Ralph Spencer, Leslie Arliss and Gordon and Revel; directed by Charles (Chuck) Riesner.

Soldiers Three, by Rudyard Kipling, directed by Raoul Walsh, with Victor MaLaglen.

The remainder of the releases for the American market include:

Untitled picture to be directed by Charles (Chuck) Reisner.

Paris Love Song, to star Jessie Matthews.

Untitled musical, to star Jessie Matthews, with songs by Gordon and Revel.

Strangers on a Honeymoon, by Edgar Wallace, with Constance Cummings and Hugh Sinclair.

REVISED CANADIAN CONTRACT IN EFFECT

The voluntary arbitration clause which is reported to have worked out to the satisfaction of exhibitors and distributors is retained in the revised Canadian license agreement which is effective June 1st.

Not many changes in the revised form of contract are "of vital importance," and some of the clauses were made more comprehensive and clearer, John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, informed the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, this week.

The arbitration provision will remain in its present form. It has not been amended since 1933.

King Solomon's Mines, by H. Rider Haggard, with Roland Young.

The Nelson Touch, starring George Arliss.

Untitled George Arliss production.

The Hawk, by Francois de Croisset, with Constance Bennett.

The Hidden Power, by Joseph Conrad (from his "Secret Agent"), with Sylvia Sidney, Robert Donat, and directed by Alfred Hitchcock.

Untitled Alfred Hitchcock production.

River of Unrest, melodrama.

The Threat.

The Dark Invader, a spy story.

There will be no regional sales conventions, as originally intended.

Additional promotions made in the field staff, besides those announced at the convention, by Mr. Weeks, include: Jack Erickson, formerly salesman, named San Francisco branch manager; W. A. V. Mack, appointed midwestern district manager, with headquarters in Chicago; Marcel Makelburg, appointed Boston manager; Carl Coe, formerly salesman, now branch manager at Albany; John Scully, formerly Boston manager, appointed New England district manager; Scott Chesnutt, appointed southern district manager, with headquarters in Atlanta; Reg Wilson, field representative, assigned to special sales duties in the midwest, and Ray Halpern, named New York salesman.

General Film

"A Woman Alone," starring Anna Sten, produced by Garrett Klement, in Europe, was acquired by General Film Distributors for 1936-37, and was added to two Max Schach features, to star Robert Donat, and to be produced by Buckingham-Capital productions.

Goldstone

Phil Goldstone, inactive for a long period, is understood to be preparing a return to independent production, making features with Scott Darling, already at work on the first, an original.

Grand National

First tangible developments in the commencement of Grand National Distributors, representing Pathe interests, is a contract with George Hirliman, of Regal Productions, for five features in color in 1936-37, and another with Benjamin F. Zeidman, for six.

Mr. Hirliman starts with the following four pictures:

Gorgeous, already completed.

Captain Calamity.

The Rest Cure.

Song of the Andes, directed by Crane Wilbur.

Mr. Hirliman's own color process is being used.

"Angels in White," completed, will be among the first of the six features to be supplied Grand National by Zeidman Productions. The budget admittedly will be restricted. Mr. Zeidman supervising the entire group.

Grand National is setting up distribution arrangements through states right operators, Sam Berkowitz, head of Far West Exchanges, disposing of his offices in California to the company.

Guaranteed Pictures

In addition to product already announced by Guaranteed Pictures for 1936-37, including eight starring Conway Tearle and six with Margaret Morris, both series to be puroduced by Mitchell Leichter, Guaranteed will distribute four to be made in Ireland by Richard Hayward, starting with "The Luck of the Irish."

Guaranteed has sold "Just My Luck," featuring Eddie Nugent and Charlie Ray, to Syndicate Exchanges, for Greater New York, and to B. N. Judell, for northern Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, western Missouri and Kansas.

Harper and Company

James H. Harper and Company are down for a series of one-reel comic shorts, to be known as Ray Knight's "Cuckoo Newsreel," as the opener of this new producing company, taking Ray Knight from the radio.

Hirliman

George Hirliman will produce through Regal Films in 1936-37, making five features, in color, for Pathe's new Grand National Distributors. See Grand National for titles and additional information.

Hoffberg

J. H. Hoffberg Company has acquired for 1936-37 distribution the following three pictures, to be augmented later by others:

Girl From Maxim's, acquired from Mundus Films.

Song of the Scarlet Flower (Sangen Om Den Eldroda Bloman), Swedish.

Wanted Men, featuring Charles Laughton, made in England by British and Dominion Films.

Hoffman-Liberty

Thirty pictures are set by M. H. Hoffman, Sr., through the reorganized Liberty Pictures, to be augmented, possibly, by two series of westerns, eight in each, and by an exchange of product with English companies. Mr. Hoffman has been in England arranging for distribution on a reciprocal basis.

Howard

The new season will in all probability bring independently-produced pictures from Leslie Howard, who, before saling for a holiday in England, practically announced his retirement from acting and his entrance into motion picture production on his own, starting with a story based on the life of Bonnie Prince Charlie, the "Young Pretender," to be made in England and Scotland.

Hungaria Film

Twelve features still comprise the 1936-37

WIDE VARIETY OF SHORT SUBJECTS

schedule of Hungaria Films, all importations.

Imperial

William Pizor's Imperial Pictures has eight in mind for 1936-37, the same number as this year. Tim McCoy will star in the features, all westerns. Color may be used.

Invincible Pictures

Eight pictures are set for Invincible for 1936-37. See Chesterfield for the details.

Krimsky

John Krimsky evidently intends to continue with plans to produce three features next season, starting with "High Wind in Jamaica."

Kandel

British Lion Pictures, of London, will release from six to eight features in America in the new season through Morris Kandel, selling on the states right market. Sam W. Smith, official of British Lion, arrived in New York last week to discuss the arrangement with Mr. Kandel and to talk with Republic Pictures about the continuance of British Lion's franchise to distribute Republic product in England and the Kingdom.

Leichter Pictures

Mitchell Leichter, now in Hollywood, after announcing eight Conway Tearle features, and six Margaret Morris stories for 1936-37, disclosed the titles of the Tearles as follows:

The New Inspector
Good Justice
Paid His Debt
On Your Feet
Going Strong
End of a Winter
Another Boss
The Price He Paid

The six Morris stories include:

Call It a Night
Wicked Eyes
One Good Month
Who's That Man
All to You
He Meets a Girl

Miss Morris is now writing her own story for "Call It a Night" and Mr. Leichter has acquired the rights to the eight Tearle vehicles.

Mr. Leichter recently returned to Hollywood to start production, after closing franchise contracts for distribution with states right exchanges in the field.

Jack H. Hoffberg is associated with the producer, and Guaranteed Pictures will distribute in Europe.

Liberty Pictures

See M. H. Hoffman. The company has at least 30 promised for 1936-37.

MacLean

Douglas MacLean, in Hollywood, has received from China, for roadshowing in this country, a feature titled "Song of China," done in pantomime, with music, and said to be the first Chinese feature that was written, acted, photographed and directed by Chinese.

Marquis

Robert Marquis arrived last week in New York from Paris with a print of "Koenigsmark," which he intends to sell.

Melody

Harry Conn's Melody Pictures is set for four "Pinky" Tomlin musical features for 1936-37. Additional of the company's plans for the season are listed under Conn-Ambassador-Melody.

PICTURE PRODUCED BY GIRLS' SCHOOL

A two-reel motion picture written, directed, photographed and acted by members of the sophomore class of the Horace Mann School for Girls, of New York, who average 14 years of age, had its preview last week before Dr. Rollo Reynolds, principal of the school, and faculty members.

The girl students produced the photoplay in place of a final examination in a required course in American civilization. The total cost of the film was $75, which was furnished by the school for the experiment. The girls made their own costumes and scenery, and worked out a musical score as an accompaniment to the picture, in which they did not talk.

The action of the film deals with the adventures of a family of Italian immigrants from the day of their supposed arrival in New York City.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

William Rodgers, general sales manager, and Al Lichtman, assistant to the president, presided at Metro-Goldyn-Mayer's annual sales convention—first to be held this year—on May 11th to 14th, at the Palmer House, in Chicago, where 33 titles were announced for a feature program of between 44 to 52 pictures, 194 short subjects in eight series, and, of course, the newsreel. Titles of the features and convention details appeared in Motion Picture Herald on May 16th, starting on page 44.

Since the convention, the company has been active concluding arrangements for a complete program and policy.

Tom J. Connors, eastern sales manager, sent the delegates to their branch offices with instructions to analyze carefully existing clearance schedules with a view to corrections in new contracts.

"Very often," the salesmen were told, "clearance will remove a theatre from the possibility list, or too great a period of clearance will prevent the sale of product."

MGM, too, has completed a new arrangement for shorts, whereby the Boy Scouts of America will place its entire resources and personnel at Metro's disposal for a series of one-reelers based on Boy Scouts' activities. Boy Scouts executives are to collaborate with MGM writers, the subject point to "a moral of better citizenship.". Metro points out that the organization represents a potential audience of 5,740,556 persons, based on four members in the family of each of the 1,435,139 members, not counting 7,000,000 former Scouts. The arrangement is for a period of years, starting with a fall release.

William E. Raynor returned from an eight-week cross-country tour visiting independent exchanges to sell MGM's six quota pictures, made by Dominion Productions, in Canada. Deals closed include: Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis and Indianapolis territories, to Superior Exchanges; Minneapolis, to Elliott Films; Denver and Salt Lake, to Mercury Exchanges; San Francisco and Los Angeles, to All Star Features; Philadelphia and Washington, to Masterpiece, among others.

The first two of the quota group are "Undercover Man," with Charles Starrett, and "Thoroughbred," with Toby Wing.

Hal Roach's 1936-37 production plans, releasing through Metro, now embrace five features and 12 short subjects. At the convention, Mr. Roach was set for four features.

Lyda Roberti and Patsy Kelly will be costarred in two features, and Jack Haley in a third. Mr. Roach and Twentieth Century-Fox are partners in Mr. Haley's contract.

Mr. Roach has placed Grace Rosenfield in charge of his New York office, although the principal Roach activities will continue to be centered at Culver City. S. S. Van Keuren has been made Roach production general.

The first four of the five Roach features for MGM include:

Mr. Cinderella, starring Jack Haley, under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

Girls Go West, co-featuring Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti.

You'd Be Surprised, to star Laurel and Hardy, from a story by Richard Flournoy and Charles Rogers.

Forty-fourth Floor, starring Jack Haley, to be directed by Edward Seldwick, who is collaborating with Arthur V. Jones.

Pete Smith, prominent in MGM's short subjects division, will do 54 shorts for the company in the next three years, under a new contract signed a week ago.

MGM will produce from four to five shorts in New York in 1936-37. Dave Millert, assistant to Pete Smith, was in New York lining up material and arranging for a studio.

Too, MGM has given James A. FitzPatrick a new five-year producing contract, calling for 12 TravelTalks, in single reels, and in Technicolor, annually.

The company has signed Eleanor Powell for a feature series, and Jeanette MacDonald to a new long term, also Billie Burke to a term contract. Leon Gordon, James Cain and Harry Wagstaff are on new contracts for stories, and playing contracts were given Luise Rainer and Maureen O'Sullivan. MGM also signed Reginald LeBorg to direct a series of one-reel musicals. Barbara Stanwyck joins MGM's talent roster, and so have Harry Hamilton, Jules Furthman and Stanley Rauh, writers, and Marjorie Lane and Phyllis Clare, actresses.

Hal Roach signed Lyda Roberti, player, to a long term, and Roy Shield, to arrange musical scores. Charley Chase, star, has left Roach, after 17 years.

Mutual

Harry Thomas emerged from the old First Division, which was liquidated by Pathe, with a new company known as Mutual Motion Picture Distributors, Inc., to handle distribution on the states right market. Already set for distribution are: 12 features to be made in England by James A. FitzPatrick (titles are listed under FitzPatrick); four "Pinky" Tomlin musicals, to be produced by Harry Conn's Melody Pictures; six "Sport-O-Tune" features, coming from Harry Conn pictures; four James Oliver Curwood stories, to star Kermit Maynard, from Harry Conn's Ambassador Pictures; a possible 16 features from William Hackel, and others. Mr. Thomas may have a total of 52 for the new season.

Nuovo Mondo Pictures

Joseph Brandt's new Nuovo Mondo Pictures' 1936-37 schedule remains at 40 features, all imported from Italy, and distributed through headquarters at Rockefeller Center.

O'Neill

Maurice O'Neill is reputed to have closed with Russell Gleason to star in seven westerns for 1936-37, starting with "Wellington Pike Goes West."

Pan American-Hoffman

Thirty features were announced by Pan American Studios, at Miami, headed by M. H. Hoffman, Jr., on a budget of $4,500,000. Mr. Hoffman this week capitalized his company at $2,000,000. A Florida studio will be built.

Paramount Pictures

The annual sales convention of Paramount Pictures opens on Friday morning in Chicago, where 78 features are to be announced as comprising the 1936-37 program. Pre-convention details appear on page 75.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Pathe's re-entrance into production and distribution, starting with 1936-37, will be made through Grand National Distributors. Details of the plans to date are listed under Grand National.

Pedigreed Pictures

The new Pedigreed Pictures has a series of dog subjects, all short, starting with "The Chesapeake Bay Retriever," "The Collie" and "The Poodle." Society leaders are sponsoring the films. Active are Mrs. Milton Erlanger, Thomas T. K. Frelinghuysen and Anthony Bliss.

Principal Pictures

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures, is back in Hollywood ready to advance production for 1936-37 on 14, and possibly 18 features for 1936-37, all to be distributed by major companies. All will be financed and produced independently of the distributors, filming at RKO-Pathe Studios in Culver City.

First on the schedule is a series of six Harold Bell Wright and Zane Grey stories for Twentieth Century-Fox, starting with "The Recreation of Brian Kent," starring Richard Arlen.

Young Bobby Breen will be starred in three features for RKO, the first to be "Everybody's Boy," going into work July 1st. There will be at least two for Columbia.

Also scheduled are "Celluloid," a special written by Rupert Hughes, with the motion picture's history as background, and a series of four features based on the "Whispering Smith" stories by Frank Spearman.

Mr. Lesser is now completing the fourth and final George O'Brien production, "Border Patrolman," for Fox.

The producer signed Phil Rapp to write the screen play for "Happy Go Lucky," for Bobby Breen.

Radio Pictures

Additions to production plans for 1936-37 made it advisable for RKO Radio to set the annual sales convention back to June 15th to 17th, at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York, where Leo Spitz, president of RKO Radio Pictures; Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation; Jules Levy, general sales manager, and Sam Briskin, vice-president in charge of production, will preside.

Highlighting the screening of "Mary of Scotland," Radio is expected to announce some 48 features and at least an amount of short subjects equivalent to this year's.

Meanwhile the company is engaged in a billings and sales contest, extending from May 22nd to June 5th.

RADICAL PRESS RETURNS TO ATTACK

The radicals are on the loose again in their drive against the motion picture industry, as evidenced in listings which the Western Worker, San Francisco paper, has begun to print under the description of "thumbnail reviews, tips and warnings about current motion pictures."

Of 26 pictures listed, 17 are condemned, while only three are recommended and six are given no opinion.

The Western Worker is the outstanding radical organ on the Pacific Coast, circulating in California, Oregon and Washington. Its anti-industry campaign is similar to that sponsored by the Daily Worker, published in New York as the official organ of the Communist Party, U. S. A.

Radio will announce a new series of two-reel comedies, to be known as the "Smart Set" series, production by Lee Marcus, assisted by Bert Gilroy.

RKO has contracted with Sol Lesser for three features next season to star Bobby Breen, juvenile, also Young Breen's current release, "Let's Sing Again."

Leon Errol will produce a short subject series for Radio, with Russ Goodwin directing.

Harry Goetz and Edward Small, of Reliance Pictures, now nearing he end of their contract with United Artists, plan a series of conferences with an eye to lining up the six stories which they will produce in 1936-37 for Radio. Robert Donat will appear in one, possibly two of the Reliance releases.

RKO next season will also have a feature based on the life of Will Barber, foreign newspaper correspondent who died covering the Italo-Ethiopian war.

David Loew is now in Hollywood arranging for the launching of his commitment to RKO for the new season, all to star Joe E. Brown.

Production Chief Briskin, in Hollywood, has 31 writers working on the scenarios for 28 features for 1936-37.

The new RKO contract for short subjects with Van Beuren Pictures is expected to include from 32 to 36 subjects, instead of 48, which Amedee J. Van Beuren formerly made. This is due to RKO's acquisition of the Walt Disney Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphony series from United Artists.

Meanwhile Radio continues to strengthen its talent roster for the new program, signing contracts with Paul Yawitz, New York columnist, to write on a long term; options on Thomas Lennon and Dorothy Yost, writers; new contracts with Christy Cabanne, director; Samuel Fain, writer; Patsy Lee Parsons, juvenile singer; Thyra Samter Winslow, writer; Smith Ballew, player and radio star; Lou Lusty, given a producership, and Lee Marcus, William Sistrom and Edward Kaufman, staff producers.

Regal Films

George Hirliman's Regal Pictures will produce five features, all in color, for the new Grand National Distributors, of Pathe Exchange, for 1936-37, including "Gorgeous," "Captain Calamity," "The Rest Cure" and "Song of the Andes."

Republic Pictures

The annual sales convention of Republic Pictures opens on Thursday morning in Chicago, where 52 features and four serial features are to be announced as comprising the 1936-37 progress. Titles of the pictures and pre-convention details appear on page 76.

Rosener and Brill

Rosener and Brill Enterprises opened offices in the Film Center Building, at 630 Ninth Avenue, New York, for the national distribution of an undetermined number of features, starting with the following three:

The Shadow
Death on the Set
Souls for Sale

Eastern distribution will be through Glove Films Distributing Company, Dave Brill, in charge, and in the west, through Rosener Film Exchange, in San Francisco. Mr. Brill and Mr. Rosener are associated in the new distributing enterprise, which will concentrate on importations and the occasional "unusual" production.

Royer

Returning to independent production, Fanchon Royer in 1936-37 will make six features and distribute them through the Nat Saland-Mercury Laboratory interests.

Shapiro

One of the 1936-37 Irving Shapiro releases on the states right market will be "Kliou," produced by Marquis de la Falaise in the jungle, in color.

Seiden Pictures

Joseph Seiden will produce and distribute six features in Yiddish in 1936-37, to be augmented by a series of short subjects.

Shubert-Rowland

England will probably be the headquarters for a new producing combination in which J. J. Shubert and William Rowland have been mentioned as the principals, making six musicals, four in Technicolor.

Spectrum Pictures

The series of eight westerns starring Bill Cody having been completed and delivered on this season's commitment, Spectrum Pictures will turn attention to another group of eight for the new year.

Stage and Screen

Louis Weiss, president of Weiss Prductions, has signed Eddy Graneman, Dallas Fitzgerald, William Schenker, George Merrick and Victor Jordon to collaborate on the story of "Phantom Island," a new 15-chapter serial, the third this year, to be released on the states right market by Stage and Screen Productions, following "The Clutching Hand," another serial. Albert Herman was engaged to direct "Phantom Island."

Robert Mintz, president of Stage and Screen, has closed with P. Weintraub, of Majestic Pictures, in Omaha and Kansas City, for the franchise to "Custer's Last Stand," in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and western Missouri.

Weiss Productions in 1936-37 will again produce three serials for Stage and Screen.

Supreme

A. W. Hackel, of Supreme, has in mind for 1936-37 a series of Bob Steel action pictures and a second group starring Johnny Mack Brown.

Tapernoux

At least French importations will be on the 1936-37 schedule of John S. Tapernoux.

Twentieth Century-Fox

The annual sales convention of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation was held in Chicago last weekend, where 69 features, 100 short subjects and the Fox Movietonews were announced as comprising the 1936-37 program. Titles of the pictures, and convention details appear on page 78.

United Artists

George J. Schaefer, vice president in charge of distribution, will preside at United Artists annual sales convention, to be held, as tentatively set, in Hollywood, from June 30th to July 2nd, where some 26 to 30 features will be announced, none to be sold en bloc, and to be contributed by affiliated producers as follows: Samuel Goldwyn, seven; Walter Wanger, six; Pickford-Lasky, five; Selznick International, five; Pioneer, four, all in Technicolor; Alexander Korda, four or five, and probably others from Europe.

There will be no change in the company's sales policies.

District and branch managers, and not salesmen, will attend the convention, to be followed by regional conferences for the selling force.

Among the home office executives who will attend the convention are Harry D. Buckley, Arthur W. Kelly, Harry Gold, Paul Lazarus, Haskell Masters, Jack Schlaifer, Charles M. Steele, N. A. Thompson, Monroe W. Greenthal, Morris Helprin and Sam Cohen.

Charles Stern, Ben Fish and Jack Goldhar will board the special train en route.

The producers' representatives at the convention will be James A. Mulvey, for Samuel Goldwyn; Lowell Calvert, for Selznick International; Emanuel Silverstone, for Alexander Korda; John Flinn and Emil Jensen, for Pickford-Lasky.

Maurice Silverstone, chairman and managing director of United Artists in England and Europe, now on a visit to the United States, will also attend.

Among the producers' publicity representatives who will sit in on the sessions are Jock Lawrence, for Samuel Goldwin; Russell Birdwell, for Selznick International; Lincoln Quarberg and Mark Larkin, for Pickford-Lasky; Dan Thomas, for Walter Wanger; Paul Snell, for Pioneer Pictures; Sam B. Cohen, for Reliance Pictures, and Hal Sloane, for Walt Disney.

Walter Wanger and United Artists finally consummated a releasing arrangement last week, Mr. Wanger joining the company's producing affiliates from Paramount Pictures, on a basis whereby the present owners of United Artists will hold a substantial financial interest in the newly organized Walter Wanger Productions, Mr. Wanger, president.

The deal is to run for a term of years, on a six-picture annual commitment. Mr. Wanger arrived in New York and immediately prepared for a six-week vacation in Europe, starting on the new contract immediately upon his return, with Sylvia Sidney starring in "Three Times Loser."

Maurice Silverstone, chairman and director of United Artists in England and the Continent, is in New York from London, and will shortly proceed to the coast for conferences with the producer-owners of the corporation. He said that at least eight of the features to be produced by the company's affiliates in 1936-37 will be made in England.

ATLANTA NEWSPAPER FAVORS SUNDAY SHOWS

The Atlanta Constitution, long recognized as one of the South's most influential newspapers, comments on the recent court ruling that Sunday motion pictures in the state of Georgia were illegal, as follows:

"The Georgia court of appeals has ruled that it is a plain violation of the law to operate a motion picture show on Sunday in Georgia, even when the net proceeds of the day are given to charity.

"This may be the law—but if it is it should be modified at the next session of the general assembly.

"The day is far past when people can be legislated into church attendance, and far worse things happen on Sunday, openly and without censure, than attendance at a moving picture show.

"There are many laws which should be modified or repealed, and this is one of them."

United Film

Charles A. Rossi, of United Film Distributors, will produce and distribute in 1936-37 at least a series of ten one reel natural color subjects, to be known as "Contrasts in Color."

United Pictures

Anna Sten will next make in Hollywood, for C. M. Woolf, a picture to be known as "The Witch," and to be directed by Miss Sten's husband, Eugene Frenke, for United Players Productions.

After "The Witch," Miss Sten and Mr. Frenke will return to London to make "Nina" for British and Dominions.

Universal Pictures

The annual sales convention of the new Universal Pictures now controlled by the Cowdin-Rogers-Cochrane interests, will be held at the Hotel Astor in June from June 15th to 17th, attended by sales representatives from all of the world's offices, and at which some 36 pictures will in all probability be announced for 1936-37.

Meanwhile, R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, J. Cheever Cowdin and Willard McKay have been in Universal City in California to complete the final list for the new year, in conferences with Charles R. Rogers. The Cochranes returned to New York Tuesday.

Trem Carr joins Universal with the new season, supervising production of six John Wayne westerns.

"Three Little Sisters" will be the first feature to be produced in this country by Joseph Pasternack, producer, and Henry Koster, director, for Universal, both having been brought to the United States from Budapest.

Universal will have another series of Buck Jones westerns, to be directed by Les Selander, and is considering a new feature to star Paul Robeson. Charles Previn was signed as musical director at the studio. Also signed were Michael Loring, player; Hal Mohr, cameraman; Robert Presnell, under a new associate producer's contract; David Oliver, William Hall, and Gracie Barrie, players.

Victory

Sam Katzman's Victory Pictures will produce six features next season, to be sold individually, three of them to have serial versions. Mr. Katzman is in New York, from Hollywood, to arrange for distribution. Already scheduled are:

Already scheduled are:

Gold Ship, by James Oliver Curwood.
Thou Shalt Not Covet, by James Oliver Curwood.
For the Rest of Your Natural Life, by James Oliver Curwood.
Three Untitled Peter B. Kyne stories.

Warner Brothers-First National

The annual sales convention of the Warner Brothers, First National, Vitagraph and Cosmopolitan interests was held in New York, beginning Wednesday, when 60 features and the usual lineup of Vitaphone short subjects were announced as comprising the 1936-37 program. Titles of the pictures and convention details appear on page 83.

World Pictures

World Pictures, lining up product for the new season, has acquired "The Street Without a Name,' 'featuring Pola Illery and directed by Pierre Chenal. Irving Shapiro has been named general manager of World, which will concentrate on foreign sales and in the importation of pictures from abroad.

Zeidman

Pathe's new Grand National Distributors will distribute six features to be produced in the new season by Benjamin F. Zeidman, starting with "Angels in White," already completed.

MGM Calls Patent No Cause for Worry

Exhibitors throughout the country playing the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product have received letters from Ralph Gordon Fear warning that the showing of this company's output constitutes an infringement of a patent developed by the engineer, have nothing to fear, according to J. Robert Rubin, head of the company's legal department.

In his letter to theatre owners, Mr. Fear claims that the patent No. 1,891,225, dated Dec. 20, 1932, and dealing with an apparatus for driving film through projectors, is his. The notice orders exhibitors to cease exhibition of MGM films and make an accounting before June 8, 1938. Threats of action in federal courts are made as an alternative.

"MGM has a contract with Mr. Fear by which we have a right to use the machine," Mr. Rubin said. "It was made at our studios."

"We believe the matter will be ironed out shortly. I'm not greatly disturbed about it," he continued.

PARAMOUNT PLANNING 78 FEATURES 113 SHORTS, IS CONVENTION KEYNOTE

Sales Staff To Hear Whether Class A and B Groupings Will Be Dropped in Distribution as in Production

"Elsie Dinsmore" Stories Considered as Screen Material; New "Hop-Along Cassidy" Series; Schulberg To Make 8

Starting its second year under the revitalization of reorganization, Paramount Pictures Corporation, on Friday, will assemble its home office and field sales forces at the Edgewater Beach hotel in Chicago for the annual sales convention, at which 78 features and 113 short subjects will be announced as constituting the program for 1936-37. There will be 40 releases through the first six months.

Paramount's home office delegation left New York Wednesday afternoon, led by Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of sales, and including Joseph J. Unger, Charles Reagan, Robert M. Gillham, Don Velde, Herman Lorber, Arthur Dunne, Jack Roper, Fred LeRoy, and G. B. J. Frawley, and the following eastern district sales managers: Milton Kusell, William Erbb and P. A. Bloch.

In addition, the sales meeting will be attended by District Managers Harry Goldstein, Oscar Morgan, Jack Dugger, J. E. Fontaine, R. C. Libeau, Hugh Braly, M. H. Lewis and Ben Blotcky, and M. A. Milligan, of Canada.

The delegates in all probability will be told whether the distribution division will drop the Class A and Class B groupings in favor of a single category, the studio in Hollywood having decided to combine both classes into one beginning next season.

The reason given for the studio's action, taken by William LeBaron, production general, is that it needs a more elastic policy in order to avoid the difficulties which result when so-called "B" pictures prove to be superior to "A" product, and conversely.

Mr. LeBaron, however, advised that production costs on the new schedule will continue to be based upon the merits of the story, director and cast, but that the personnel will not suffer what he believes to be a preliminary letdown by having its assignment put arbitrarily in the "B" classification as heretofore.

Consider "Dinsmore"

Paramount is undertaking a survey to determine whether the "Elsie Dinsmore" stories would be popular as screen material in the new season. The stories, by Martha Stanley, were considered juvenile "classics" early this century, and if produced in motion pictures, Virginia Weidler, child actress, would be starred in a series for 1936-37 release.

The sales delegates will be told that Harry Sherman again will produce a series of six "Hop-Along Cassidy" pictures in 1936-37, besides two Rex Beach westerns and one musical feature. Completing the sixth of this season's "Cassidy" story, Mr. Sherman this week announced the titles of the 1936-37 releases, all stories by Clarence E. Mulford, as follows:

Return of Hop-Along Cassidy
Trail Dust
Cottonwood Gulch
Roundup
Bring Me His Ears
Rustlers' Valley

Boris Morros, head of Paramount's studio music department, will provide all the music not coming from the outside. The series again will feature William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison and George Hayes. Screenplays for the most part will be written by Doris Schroeder, production on the first starting in July.

PLANE DOOR REMOVED, CREW SHOOTS LINER

Traveling in a great boxlike airship, with no safety belts and a door removed from the starboard side so that a newsreel camera could be projected downward, a Paramount News crew on Monday took off when the Queen Mary, pride of the British passenger fleet, was being edged on by tugs around New York's Battery.

Cameraman Al Mingalone stood by the open starboard adjusting a dwarf tripod with the nonchalance that comes from flying 70,000 miles during his 10 years with Paramount News and surviving a couple of crackups.

"There she is," Mingalone signaled the pilot. Then came the job of maneuvering the plane in position, and Pilot Grevemberg performed practically all the stunts in the catalogue of stunt flyers, part of the time amid a flotilla of escorting planes.

Whether Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur will have any productions of their own on 1936-37 schedules of Paramount was to be determined. Meanwhile they are writing a script for the company.

Three or Four from Lubitsch

Ernst Lubitsch in all probability will make three or four for 1936-37. He is now reading scripts.

Howard Estabrook will be associated with Frank Lloyd in production of four for the new season, one probably in color.

Lew Gensler also is set to produce four, starting with "The Big Broadcast," musical revue, and unselected stories with George Raft and Carole Lombard.

Eight will be forthcoming in 1936-37 from Benjamin P. Schulberg, on a new three-year contract, starting July 1st, and working at General Service Studios in Hollywood. Ralph Kohn will continue as general manager for Mr. Schulberg, who, previously with Paramount, has of late been producing for Columbia.

Emanuel Cohen's new Major Pictures in the new season will start a new producing arrangement. Meanwhile, Mr. Cohen, on June 15th, will begin work on "Pennies from Heaven," starring Bing Crosby, for Columbia Pictures. Victor Shapiro is Mr. Cohen's new press agent, working from producing headquarters at General Service Studios, Hollywood. Mr. Cohen's Paramount contract calls for eight features over a three-year period.

Gladys Swarthout, opera singer, will return to Paramount next season, in "Champagne Waltz," with Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie, Lyda Roberti and Velez and Yolanda, with Edward Sutherland directing.

David Holt will play the title role in "Johnny Gets His Gun," which Sid Brod will produce, with Onslow Stevens supporting, and Stuart Heisler directing.

Robert Florey will direct "Hollywood Boulevard," with C. Henry Gordon, John Halliday and Robert Cummings.

Virginia Weidler, child player, will appear with Bennie Bartlett in Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer, Detective."

Frances Drake and Tom Brown are set for "I'd Give My Life."

Jack Chapin will appear in several in the new season in his new standing of featured player. He has been playing small parts.

A new contract will start Grant Withers in "Murder With Pictures."

Paramount also re-signed E. A. DuPont, director, making "A Son Comes Home."

William LeBaron will produce at least one starring John Boles in 1936-37.

Charles Barton will direct "Lady Be Careful," with Robert Cummings; Elliott Nugent will direct "Wives Never Know," co-starring Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland, and Paul Sloane will direct "Everything for Sale."

International Film Unions

Unions of film workers in Austria and Czechoslovakia have reached an agreement to foster trade unions in the two countries and negotiations are said to be under way to extend the international union membership move to Germany and Switzerland. Under the agreement, any worker wishing to obtain employment in any of these countries, outside his own, could do so only if he were a member of the organization in his own country.

New Miles City Theatre

H. W. Knutson, general manager of the State Theatre Company of Salt Lake City, has announced plans for a new 750-seat house at Miles City, Montana. The new theatre is expected to be opened in August. The company operates houses in Livingston, Harlowton and Big Timber, Montana, in addition to one house in Miles City.

The four serials will conclude the program.

Mayor Kelley, of Chicago, opened the convention with an address of welcome on Thursday morning, W. Ray Johnston, Republic's president, responding. Nat Levine, president of the producing subsidiary, of Hollywood, next outlined the program, and M. J. Siegel, coast studio executive, explained the construction of the production staff in action.

Open Forum on Product

Addresses were delivered by J. J. Milstein, general sales manager; Sam Hacker, contract manager, and Edward Finney, director of advertising and publicity, and were followed by an open forum in which the branch managers and salesmen participated. The last convention day will be devoted entirely to section meetings.

Attending the convention, besides officials already mentioned, are E. H. Goldstein, vice-president; N. K. Loder, treasurer; John S. Harrington, head of prints and accessories; Norton Ritchey, foreign sales director, and Edward Schnitzer, eastern district sales manager.

Guests on hand include: Walter Vincent, of the Wilmer and Vincent Circuit, and chairman of the board of Republic; Sam Smith, manager director of British Lion Film Corporation, in England, and L. E. Kalker, Republic's representative in the British Isles. Both Mr. Smith and Mr. Kalker will return to London after the convention.

Foreign Situated Outlined

The foreign situation as it affects Republic was explained by Norton Ritchey and Mr. Kalker. Domestic franchise holders were represented on the speaker's platform by Herman Gluckman, president of Republic's New York and Philadelphia exchanges; A. C. Bromberg, of the southeast, and Floyd St. John, of California. Oscar Hanson, Republic franchise holder in Canada, and Nat Lefton, of Ohio, also addressed the delegates.

Players and Writers Signed to Enhance Production Strength; Lindsley Parsons to Supervise New Series of Westerns

Before leaving the Hollywood studios, Mr. Levine effected several new contracts in line with his intention to build up the production roster, signing Eddie Quillan and Charlotte Henry for "The Gentleman from Louisiana," to be directed by Irving Pichel as his first for the company; Guinn Williams, John Merton and Robert Warwick were added to the serial, "The Vigilantes," with Mack Wright and Ray Taylor directing; Hamilton McFadden was signed as a writer and director, starting on "Join the Marines," to star Phil Regan; Olsen and Johnson, stage comedians, will work for Republic under a new five-year contract, first appearing in "The Country Gentleman."

Robert Livingston, player, was signed on a long term, taking the lead in "The Vigilantes," as a beginning. Stuart Walker, formerly of Universal, will write, produce and supervise, starting with "The President's Mystery," a Liberty Magazine story. Dorrell and Stuart McGowan, writing team, were given a new contract.

Lindsley Parsons to Supervise

Lindsley Parsons, who in the past year has written 13 stories, was promoted to supervise a series of westerns under Sol C. Siegel. Sam Ornitz is another new writer, assigned to Marion Talley's "Follow Your Heart," for which Larry Ceballos was taken on as dance director.

The first Republic all-color picture, as yet untitled, will be directed by Joseph Kane, signed last week, work to begin in a month. "Billy the Kid" also will be done in color by Republic.

Tracy Knight was advanced to director of writers and writing assignments at the Hollywood studios, taking over the post formerly held by Wallace MacDonald. Harold Dodds succeeds Jack Weiner as casting director. Ed Finney, advertising director, appointed Al Adams as his assistant, and Jack Hardy, assistant on the same staff, was shifted to the post of studio publicity director, succeeding Lindsley Parsons.

Long crowded for space in the Republic executive offices in Rockefeller Center, New York, and with the foreign department already located at 1776 Broadway, the corporation is now enlarging its quarters at the Broadway address to house the offices of President W. Ray Johnston, who henceforth will concentrate on the business management and production contact and financial arragements.

FIRST SCREEN TALKING ACTOR NOW AN EXTRA

Norman Taylor, who made the first voice test for the Thomas Edison experiments in talking pictures 23 years ago, is now in Hollywood working as a bit player in "The Return of Sophie Lang" at Paramount.

Mr. Edison was a friend of the vaudeville team of Taylor and Howard, playing Broadway's Palace in the spring of 1913, when the inventor suggested that they go to Derby, Conn., and aid in the experiment to demonstrate that pictures could talk. For two weeks the Taylors patiently labored over one scene in "The Squaw man."

Though results were crude, Mr. Edison told Taylor: "This type of talking cinema will in all probability be perfected, but I will wager that an entirely different system will be in use within 20 years."

Schultz Adds Theatre

Nate Schultz, president of Selected Pictures in Cleveland and northern Ohio distributor of First Division Pictures, has purchased the Paramount theatre, Akron, from Louis Levine. The sale becomes effective June 1. Mr. Schultz now operates houses in Cleveland and Barberton.

Joins Morris Agency

Mildred Webber, former Warner talent scout in New York, has joined the William Morris Agency, heading a new department designed to discover and develop new stage and screen talent.

69 FEATURES, 100 SHORTS IN '36-37 PLANS OF TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX

Own Studios Will Produce 54 Features; Sol Lesser Six; Five Slated From Abroad; Four Reissues of Will Rogers Films

Four Pictures Will Star Shirley Temple; Educational to Provide the Entire Program of Some 42 Two-Reel Comedies

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, under the management of Sidney R. Kent, president, Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board, and Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production, formally started 1936-37 operations last weekend. At the annual sales convention, held at Chicago's Congress hotel, some 298 delegates heard a firsthand account of the new program, consisting of 69 features, 42 two-reel comedies, 58 one-reel subjects and the usual 104 Movietone News releases.

The company's own studios, under the direction of Mr. Zanuck, will produce 54 of the features; Sol Lesser will produce six; five will be produced abroad, and four will be reissues of Will Rogers pictures.

Of the short subjects, Twentieth Century-Fox will produce the newsreel and six each of "Along the Road to Romance" and "Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman." In addition, 42 two-reel and 46 one-reel subjects will be produced by Educational Pictures, E. W. Hammons, president, and released through Fox.

$250,000 TO "QUINS" FOR THREE FOX FILMS

On their second birthday, the five Dionnes received a present from Twentieth Century-Fox of $250,000, advance for three more features to be made before the end of 1938. But according to Hon. David A. Croll, one of the quintuplets' guardians, when it comes to films, it isn't so much the money as the principle of the thing. Of several offers the Twentieth Century-Fox bid was considered the most attractive, both because of the quarter-million down payment and because the company strictly adhered to conditions for the children's safety imposed during the filming of "The Country Doctor," Mr. Croll said.

Under the contract, the $250,000 is an advance check with no strings attached. Should any or all of the children die before the expiration of the agreement, the money can not be recovered. An additional $50,000 is guaranteed on the completion of the new series and a royalty clause calling for 10 per cent of the net receipts is also included in the contract.

Outstanding among the features promised will be four starring Shirley Temple. Fox's theatre customers also may expect at least one starring the Dionne Quintuplets, the corporation last week having paid $250,000 for the rights to make three with the babies before 1938.

The first Twentieth Century-Fox color film venture, "Ramona," will be an early 1936-37 release, and the first of two musicals by Irving Berlin, "On the Avenue," is on the season's list. Jane Withers will make four features, there will be three more of the Jones Family series, and three Charlie Chan features.

No Delay from Fire

The convention hardly had adjourned on Monday when word was flashed of a divisional studio fire at the Westwood Hills Studio in California. Mr. Kent, however, announced that the blaze caused no serious losses and will involve no production delay. The damage, mostly from water, will not exceed $10,000. No important records were destroyed.

Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck, returning from London a few days earlier, brought word of the consummation of a deal whereby British National, in England, will produce four to six for Fox in 1936-37, borrowing talent from Fox's California supply. These are in addition to the four coming from Fox's own New World Pictures, formed in London a few weeks ago, under Robert T. Kane's supervision. Fox already has assigned some 69 stars and featured players to 1936-37 appearances, drawing its talent from the following roster:

Astrid Allwyn
Don Ameche
Richard Arlen
Lionel Barrymore
Warner Baxter
Thomas Beck
Will Benedict

New Contracts

New contracts given out by Mr. Zanuck at the studios in Hollywood before he departed for Chicago and the convention include those negotiated with Leonard Praskins, writer, signed for one year; Robert Warwick, player, for "Charlie Chan at the Racetrack"; Betty Jane Hainey, for "The Bowery Princess"; Alexis Archangelsky, composer, arranger and musical director, signed for one year; Willis Cooper, radio script writer; Sonja Henie, champion ice skater, signed for five years, starting with "Peach Edition," by Mark Kelly; Douglas Fowley, player; Helen Wood, player; and, Louis F. Moore, who replaces Milton Schwartz as head of the Western Avenue Studio story department.

Presiding at the convention was John D. Clark, general sales manager, flanked on the one side by the home office contingent, headed by Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck, and on the other side by the producing representatives, Mr. Zanuck, and Sol M. Wurtzel.

Mr. Clark welcomed the delegates on Friday, a discussion of short subjects occupying the remainder of the morning, with addresses by Earle Hammons, Educational's president; Jack Skirball, W. J. Clark and W. J. Kupper, western division manager.

Mr. Zanuck opened the session on Friday afternoon with an explanation of the corporation's production plans for 1936-37, followed by an analysis of the entire feature schedule by Mr. Clark.

Stories for 52 Purchased

That stories for 52 of the company's 69 features for next season have been bought and writers assigned to their screen treatment was revealed to the sales forces by Darryl F. Zanuck, who also told the conventioneers that seven features had been finished, or nearly so, and that the company was ahead of schedule. He said that the death of Will Rogers was a box-office loss as well as a personal loss.

"We are not an organization that lives or dies on one picture," he continued. "We are one of the two greatest companies in Hollywood."

In discussing the recent Screen Writers' Guild upheaval and its demands for a closed shop, he said that some of the writers had stayed with the company and that the guild is now a dead issue.

"I am amazed at the strength of our distribution organization," said Mr. Zanuck. "I have been with three companies, but ours is the greatest. When I have asked for more money for pictures Joseph M. Schenck and Mr. Kent have upped the figures. They want product."

He introduced his assistants, William Dover, William Goetz, Jason Joy, and Sol Wurtzel. He also praised Nunnally Johnson, Raymond Griffith, Kenneth MacGowan, Buddy DeSylva and Gene Markey, and predicted that stars who would go places would be Simone Simon, Michael Whalen, Robert Kent and Sonja Henie. He told the salesmen that he had already been offered $50,000 for a loan of Don Ameche for one picture by another company, although Mr. Ameche has appeared in only one film for Twentieth Century-Fox.

Sees Higher Sales in Britain

W. J. Hutchinson, who talked on foreign sales, predicted that the British sales total would be higher than ever before.

Sol Lesser told about three Zane Grey and three Harold Bell Wright stories he will make next season.

William Sussman discussed the need of following through on contracts. Earle W. Ham-

DETAILS OF 45 TITLES FOR SEASON

mons, Educational president; Jack Skirball, sales manager, and William Clark went into detail on short subject plans, both from the production and sales standpoints.

W. J. Kupper, western division manager, accepted the eastern division's challenge in the sales drive.

Charley E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity talked about plans in his department for the coming year. Mr. McCarthy revealed that the advertising budget for newspapers and trade papers would be materially increased and said that present production tendencies warranted this increase.

Following Mr. McCarthy's talk, Harry Brand, west coast publicity chief, told the delegates what the studio press department had in store. Arch Reeve of the home office talked about a new form of press book material and Earl W. Wingart told of the plans for newspaper and magazine publicity service on coming productions. Lee Balsly also told of plans for advertising accessories.

Prize Winners Announced

Herman Wobber, west coast district manager, told the sales force of the work the studios were doing. He praised Mr. Zanuck and other members of production forces and said that the salesmen could rely on the production end to deliver good pictures.

William C. Gehring, in charge of the S. R. Kent sales drive, then announced the prize winners in the last contest. Gehring, incidentally, was elected to head the S. R. Kent drive for the coming year. This drive will start Aug. 1.

No changes in sales policy were promised by Jack Sichelman and Nat Finkler.

The Fox Movietonews division took the rostrum. Truman H. Talley, Laurence Stallings, Lew Lehr, Jimmie Fidler, Ed Thorgersen, Ed Sullivan and Lowell Thomas addressed the delegates in turn. Each told details of his particular phase of the work in making up Fox Movietonews and how the news was gathered.

Joseph Schenck revealed the manner in which the new Twentieth Century-Fox company was formed. His signing of Darryl Zanuck and the progress the company had made under Mr. Zanuck's leadership were told. He gave the inside workings of the merger plans and how they were effected and what they meant.

After Mr. Schenck's address, Mr. Kent took the platform and behind guarded doors, gave a complete picture of the company and its workings. He stressed the importance of the relationship that should exist between the production and the distribution departments and said that he hoped the cooperation that had existed in the past would continue.

Mr. Kent paid particular attention to the foreign sales meeting in Paris several weeks ago. He said that the International aspect of the business was greater than ever before and that special attention should be paid to the company's foreign product. He told of the five foreign pictures which the company would release, which were, or would be, made abroad and told of their relative importance.

Charlotte First in Short Subjects

Charlotte won first place in the short subject division in the third Sidney R. Kent Drive, prizes for which were one of the features of the Twentieth Century-Fox convention.

In the short clasification, the winners were:

1.—Charlotte: Phil Longdon, manager.
2.—New Orleans: E. V. Landaiche, manager.
3.—Washington: Sam N. Wheeler, manager.
4.—Atlanta: Paul Wilson, manager.

FILM CHURCH SERVICE IS HELD IN LONDON

Choirs, organs and preachers may vanish from church services and give place to motion pictures if an experiment tried in London is successful, according to a special dispatch to the New York Post.

At a large hall in a London suburb representatives of all churches attended a demonstration of a new kind of talking film and the first talking film service. The picture combines prayer and worship and the demonstration was arranged by the Cinema Christian Council to introduce it to religious bodies.

Hymns and prayers were thrown on the screen, the audience joining in, led by the unseen organ and leader.

It was explained afterwards that it was hoped to produce a full service of films for use in churches and Sunday schools.

Dividing the $5,000 offered by Sol Lesser, producer of action pictures for the company, were these:

1.—Minneapolis: Moe A. Levy, manager; first prize, $1,500.
2.—Pittsburgh: Ira H. Cohn, manager.
3.—Salt Lake City; Charles L. Walker, manager.
4.—St. Louis: Ben Reingold, manager.
5.—Oklahoma City: Raymond A. Higdon, manager.
6.—Dallas: Herman R. Beiresdorf, manager.
7.—Des Moines: Stanley J. Mayer, manager.

In the ad sales department, winners were:

1.—Salt Lake City.
2.—Oklahoma City.
3.—Memphis: Tom W. Young, manager.
4.—Denver: R. James Morrison, manager.
5.—Des Moines.

Prizes in the S. R. Kent drive for the various exchanges resulted in the following classification:

1.—Atlanta.
2.—Charlotte.
3.—San Francisco: George H. Ballentine, manager.
4.—New Orleans.

As district manager of the Atlanta division, Harry Ballance won a special prize of a watch as a personal gift from Mr. Kent. In the foreign field, J. Steedman of Singapore was the winner of a similar prize and his award will be sent to him by C. V. Hake of the foreign department who accepted for Mr. Steedman.

Others Attending

In addition to those already mentioned, executives at the convention included: Felix A. Jenkins, Jack Sichelman, William Gehring, Nat B. Finkler, Edward H. Collins, Clarence A. Hill, Martin Moskowitz, Roger Ferri, Jack Bloom, Harry Mersay, Isidore Lincer and Dean DeTitta. All but Mr. Jenkins are from the executive sales department at the home office.

Production also was represented by William Goetz, William Dover, Colonel Jason Joy, Joseph Moskowitz and Joseph Pincus.

Arthur Dillenbeck was an additional representative from advertising and publicity, while the foreign department sent Walter J. Hutchinson, Irving A. Maas, Clarence V. Hake, Maurice L. Ahern and Anthony S. Santos.

Elliott McManus, Jerry Novat, Paul Allison, William Caldwell and Don Reed were additional ad-sales delegates.

Guests included: George Skouras, Sol Edwards, Jack Skirball, Harvey Day, Irving Berlin, Irving Caeser, George Weeks, Sol Lesser, Paul Terry, Arch Bowles, Elmer Rhoden, Rick Ricketson, Harold J. Fitzgerald, Lon Cox, Howard E. Jameyson, Harry A. McClure, Ed Shanberg, Leo J. McCarthy, E. W. Holmberg, Percy Heiliger, Sam Fox, Leonard Greene and Hettie Grey Baker.

The Feature Program

The feature program analyzed for the delegates detailed 45 titles of story properties already set, as follows:

The Road to Glory, co-starring Fredric March and Warner Baxter, with Lionel Barrymore, June Lang, Gregory Ratoff, Victor Kilian, Paul Stanton, John Qualen and Julius Tannen. Howard Hawks is director.

Ramona, all-color romance of old California, with Loretta Young and Don Ameche, supported by Jane Darwell, John Carradine, Pauline Frederick, Kent Taylor and William Benedict. Henry King is director.

Sing, Baby, Sing, musical comedy, with Adolphe Menjou, Ted Healy, Alice Faye, the Ritz Brothers, Patsy Kelley and Gregory Ratoff. Sidney Lanfield is director.

Girl's Dormitory, presenting Simone Simon, French importee in her American film debut, heading a cast including Ruth Chatterton, Herbert Marshall, Constance Collier, J. Edward Bromberg, Shirley Deane, Dixie Dunbar and John Qualen.

To Mary—With Love, co-starring Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, with Ian Hunter, Claire Trevor and Jean Dixon featured. John Cromwell is directing.

On the Avenue, Irving Berlin's musical, for which he wrote the story, music and lyrics. Waiting casting.

Love Flight, starring Lawrence Tibbett. Slim Summerville and Arthur Treacher have featured roles.

King of the Khyber Rifles, starring Victor McLaglen, in a story of that historic British Army detachment which guarded the Khyber Pass.

Singapore, also starring McLaglen, in an adventurous film of a salvage operating off the coast of China.

Shirley's First of Season

The Bowery Princess, Shirley Temple's first for the season. Frank Morgan, Robert Kent, Delma Byron, Julius Tannen, John Carradine, Stepin Fetchit and the Hall Johnson Choir are in the cast.

The Stowaway, Sunbonnet Sue and a picture as yet untitled will complete Shirley Temple's quota.

Lloyds of London has Don Ameche in the lead.

Pepper is Jane Withers' first picture, with Irvin S. Cobb, Slim Summerville, Dean Jagger, Muriel Robert, Ivan Lebedeff and Delmar Watson. A musical film and two as yet untitled pictures will complete Jane Withers' quota.

Mark of Zorro, operetta, based upon the romantic comedy in which Douglas Fairbanks starred in silent days. Waiting casting.

The Holy Lie, featuring Jane Darwell, Claire Trevor, Arline Judge, J. Edward Bromberg, Paul Stanton and Astrid Allwyn.

Zanucky to Supervise 36

Thirty-six of the feature pictures will be produced under the personal supervision of Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production. Sol M. Wurtzel, executive producer, will supervise eighteen.

42 Two-Reels, 58 Singles

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation will distribute 42 two-reel comedies and 58 one-reel subjects during 1936-37, it was announced Monday at the convention. Educational Pictures will, as usual, furnish the entire program of two-reel comedies, while Educational and Fox-Movietone will both contribute to the one-reel line-up.

Educational's comedy stars already signed and working on next year's product include: Buster Keaton, Buster West and Tom Patricola, Bert Lahr, Tim and Irene, Pat Rooney 3rd and Herman Timberg, Jr., and Jefferson Machamer. Machamer and the Rooney-Timbenrg team are the latest to be signed. The Educational comedy product will be distributed in series as follows:

6 Buster Keaton comedies
6 Buster West-Tom Patricola comedies
10 Musical comedies, including four "Gags and Gals" pictures, written by Jefferson Machamer and featuring this writer-artist with his company of girls.
6 Tim and Irene comedies
8 All Star comedies
6 Novelty comedies

Three two-reel comedies for early fall release have already been completed and Al Christie, working at the Astoria (New York) studios, will finish camera work on three or four more before the summer studio vacation, Mr. Hammons told the convention.

Six Writers at Astoria

The recent addition of David Freedman to Educational's writing staff gives this organization the largest line-up it has had at the beginning of a season in many years. Six writers are now contributing story material for production at Astoria including, besides Mr. Freedman, Charlie Williams and Marcy Klauber, collaborating; Arthur Jarrett and William Watson, working together, and Mr. Machamer.

The one-reel productions will be divided into five series. Educational will furnish three of these series as follows:

26 Terry-Toons by Paul Terry
10 Treasure Chest Productions
10 Song and comedy hits

The remaining two series will come from Fox-Movietone. They will be:

6 Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman, produced by Truman Talley and edited by Lew Lehr.
6 Along the Road to Romance on the Magic Carpet of Movietone, produced by Truman Talley, edited by Lew Lehr, narrated by Ed Thorgensen.

The Terry-Toon cartoon series is being produced by the recently reorganized Paul Terry unit which will, within a few weeks, introduce several new cartoon characters to be featured during the new season.

The Treasure Chest productions will offer a variety of subject material, including several "Krazi-Inventions," by Miss Juliet Lowell, originator of the Dumbell Letters; one release featuring women in sports, and several subjects featuring animals.

The Song and Comedy Hit series will continue to combine music and humor, featuring such names as Henry King and His Orchestra; Dario and Diane, dancers; the five Cabin Kids.

Harry Thomas Forms New Distributing Company

Harry Thomas, in New York, has formed the Mutual Motion Picture Distributors, Inc., as the company to handle the various independent releases he has signed for next season.

Negotiations have been consummated for distributing 12 James A. FitzPatrick productions and 14 pictures to be produced by Maurice Conn. Another deal for 16 pictures is pending. Mr. Thomas is now closing contracts with state rights distributors to handle the product throughout the country.

Tryout Theatre For Managers Is Dropped by WPA

The managers' tryout unit of the WPA federal theatre project in New York has been discontinued, with no official explanation except that "it did not work out." On Broadway it was said, however, that it died for want of play material.

The tryout theatre was launched last fall with the intention of providing a proving ground for Broadway managers who wanted to see their plays acted before investing in a commercial production. The arrangement was on a cooperative basis, with the Government paying the actors.

Several plays were staged in Brooklyn, and the League of New York Theatres was supposed to cooperate, but the managers generally felt that if they had a play they believed merited production, they would not hazard it to possible mishandling by the WPA.

The Government now operates nine theatres in greater New York. These are the Symphony and Majestic in Brooklyn, the Adelphi, Daly's, Manhattan, Biltmore, Public in Manhattan, the Lafayette in Harlem, and the Provincetown Playhouse in Greenwich Village. At the Provincetown the WPA also is conducting a training school for directors and other technical courses.

The federal theatre open air shows which attracted more than 2,000,000 persons to New York public parks last year will be repeated this summer, beginning late in June. Six sites have been chosen, with capacities ranging from 2,000 to 20,000. The repertoire will include vaudeville bills, legitimate plays, musical comedies, circuses and operettas.

The WPA indoor circus which has been showing in various parts of New York since September closed last week after having played to a record number of customers—500,000.

Semi-light opera will be given in New York this summer at prices ranging from 25 to 75 cents.

In New Orleans plans are being drawn for an open air theatre to be built through the WPA at a cost estimated at a maximum of $60,000. Plans call for an amphitheatre seating 3,000, to be used for dramatic performances, concerts, and the like, at admissions scaled from 10 cents to $2. If the plans are approved by the administration, the project will be ready for use by next summer.

Al Rackin Rejoins Radio

Al Rackin, formerly in charge of Radio studio publicity, and more recently with Eckles and Ford, argents, returned to the studio in Hollywood this week. He will work under Howard S. Benedict, publicity director.

WARNER LISTS FULL 60 FEATURES OF 1936-37 PROGRAM AT CONVENTION

Will Continue to Produce Two-Hour Specials of Type of "Dream" and "Pasteur," Says Jack L. Warner in Interview

Twenty Warner Stars Assigned; More Than 50 Featured Players, 7 Associate Producers, 19 Directors, and 39 Writers

The combined Warner Brothers-First National-Cosmopolitan interests evidently have made the greatest progress among all the producers in rounding out product plans for 1936-37. To the eastern sales convention, in New York, Thursday and Friday, was announced the nature of all of the 60 motion pictures scheduled.

Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, called it "the most ambitious program in the history of our affiliated companies," in a statement from his Hollywood headquarters that was read to the delegates. He added that the company will continue to produce two-hour specials of the type of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "The Story of Louis Pasteur."

Of the 60 subjects announced, eight are from Broadway stage plays, 18 are from books and stories, seven will be based on "newspaper headline" fabrications, six are of the biographical genre of "Pasteur," six will be westerns, and the remaining 15 of varied nature.

Twenty "Warner Stars" have been assigned to the program, including:

Joe E. Brown
James Cagney
Marion Davies
Bette Davis
Errol Flynn
Kay Francis
Olivia Havilland
Leslie Howard..
Josephine Hutchinson
Sybil Jason
Al Jolson
Boris Karloff
Ruby Keeler
Paul Muni
Pat O'Brien
Dick Powell
Claude Rains
Edward G. Robinson
Rudy Vallee
Yacht Club Boys

In addition to Warner's own stars, the company will have other stars for use in an occasional production, as follows:

Madeleine Carroll
Claudette Colbert
Henry Fonda
Clark Gable
Fredric March
Robert Montgomery

Featured players under contract to Warner or its affiliated companies who will be available for the 1936-37 program number some 55, including:

George Brent
Joan Blondell
Ricardo Cortez
Guy Kibbee
Margaret Lindsay
Hugh Herbert
James Melton
Ian Hunter
Frank McHugh
Ross Alexander
Anita Louise
Ann Dvorak
Glenda Farrell
June Travis
Paul Graetz
Donald Woods
Hobart Cavanaugh

YOUNGSTERS INVITED TO TRY FOR SCREEN TEST

Warner Brothers has just concluded a tieup with Paul Whiteman's Radio Program, sponsored by Woodbury soap, for a national quest of talented youngsters, the most promising of whom will be given a screen test by the company. In association with the Whiteman enterprise, Warner will arrange to make one screen test a week of the most talented child. This will a full length test at the Brooklyn Vitaphone Studios, under the supervision of Sam Sax.

As part of the plan to encourage child talent, Warner will make a number of shorts, with casts composed entirely of children. The first of these shorts, directed by Joseph Henabery, was completed this week and will be released in conjunction with the opening of the Paul Whiteman search for child talent on the air.

Seven associate producers will create the 1936-37 feature program, working with Jack L. Warner and with Hal B. Wallis, associate executive with Mr. Warner in charge of production at the studios in Burbank. The producers are:

Robert Lord
Sam Bischoff
Henry Blanke
Bryan Foy
Harry Joe Brown
Lou Edelman
Earl Baldwin

Nineteen directors are on the California staff, as follows:

Max Reinhardt
Mervyn Le Roy
Frank Borzage
William Dieterle
Marc Connelly
Michael Curtiz
William Keighley
Lloyd Bacon
Archie Mayo
Raymond Enright
Busby Berkeley
Bobby Connolly
William McGann
Frank McDonald
William Clemens
Louis King
Nick Grinde
Noel Smith
"Breezy" Eason

The original stories for 1936-37 will be written, and the books and plays scenarioized by Warners staff of writers, which now numbers 39, including:

Sheridan Gibney
Laird Doyle
Casey Robinson
Delmer Daves
Seton I. Miller
Commander Frank Wead
Norman Reilly Raine
Warren Duff
Frank Craven
William Wister Haines
Jules Epstein
Earl Felton
Lillie Hayward

Sig Herzig
George Bricker
Harold Buckley
Barry Starr
Brown Holmes
Dalton Trumbo
Charles Kenyon
John Lloyd
Abe Jacoby
William Jacobs
William Ulman
Anthony Coldeway

Predicating his assertion on the belief that "the general average of motion picture has risen," and that "this progress will continue," Harry M. Warner, president of the corporation, told the delegates that "the 1936-37 production season will prove to be the finest," not only for Warner Bros. but for the industry as a whole.

The convention in New York of the affiliated companies is being presided over by A. W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian general sales manager. A convention of the western and southern sales organization will be held in Chicago at the Blackstone Hotel, June 15th, 16th and 17th, and will be presided over by Gradwell L. Sears, western and southern general sales manager. Mr. Smith and Mr. Sears are both vice presidents of the Warner distributing organization.

Actively participating in the New York meeting are H. M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; Major Albert Warner, vice president in charge of distribution; Sam E. Morris, vice president in charge of foreign distribution; Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Brothers Theatres; S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, and a vice president of the distributing organization; Norman H. Moray, executive in charge of Vitaphone shorts and trailers; Sam Sax, head of the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio, and many other executives and representatives of all branches of the Warner business both in this country and throughout the world.

The Combined Program

Following is Warner-First National's and Cosmopolitan's combined program of 60 pictures for 1936-37, the first group being those properties which are to be based on stage plays from Broadway.

Green Pastures, from Marc Connelly's Pulitzer Prize play; directed by Mr. Connelly, in association with William Keighley. Rex Ingram plays "De Lawd," central character. An all-colored cast, as well as the Hall Johnson Choir. Now ready for release.

Three Men on a Horse, from the play by John Cecil Holm.

Call It a Day, from the Broadway and London play by Dodie Smith.

The Desert Song, in Technicolor, the light opera by Otto Harbach, Oscar Hammerstein II and Frank Mandel; music by Sigmund Romberg.

White Horse Inn, from the London musical play, to be produced on the screen by Erik Charell.

A Slight Case of Murder, from the play by Howard Lindsay and Damon Runyon.

The Fortune Hunter, by Winchell Smith. To star Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler.

Give Me Your Heart, from the play "Sweet Aloes," by Joyce Carey. Starring Kay Francis. Now in production. Directed by Archie Mayo.

The sixteen features adapted from books and stories are as follows:

Anthony Adverse, from the best-seller by Hervey Allen, with Fredric March in the title

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE, from the poem by Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Starring Errol Flynn with Olivia de Havilland, and directed by Michael Curtiz. Now in production.

THE GENTLEMAN FROM KIMBERLEY, original story. Written by Sheridan Gibney. This will probably be a vehicle for Paul Muni.

ANOTHER DAWN, an original story by Laird Doyle, in which Bette Davis will be starred with Errol Flynn.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1937, starring Dick Powell in another musical.

SUBMARINE 262, written by Commander Frank Wead.

STAGE STRUCK, a musical show with Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Warren William, the Yacht Club Boys, Jeanne Madden and others. Now being edited.

Mr. Warner announced that Marion Davies's next Cosmopolitan starring vehicle, following "Cain and Mabel," in which she co-stars with Clark Gable, would probably be entitled LA MARSEILLAISE.

Other subjects announced by Mr. Warner for 1936-37 were:

LET'S PRETEND, a comedy with music, with Ruby Keeler and James Melton.

MISTRESS OF FASHION, a story with a Parisian setting. Starring Kay Francis.

MISTER MELODY, a musical comedy with a radio background.

POLO JOE, starring Joe E. Brown.

READY, WILLING AND ABLE, co-starring Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler.

THREE-A-DAY, a comedy of Broadway and the sticks. With music.

In addition there will be two pictures featuring Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson and two pictures teaming Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell.

Six Westerns, with Dick Foran and other popular players.

An increase to 24 features to be made by Warner Brothers at its Teddington studios in England is announced for next season.

Sam E. Morris, Warner vice-president, left New York Wednesday for Hollywood, where he will confer with Jack L. Warner and Irving Asher, in charge of Teddington production, on the forthcoming British schedule.

Norman Chaney Dies; Was Fat Boy of Our Gang

Norman Myers Chaney, for four years the fat boy in Hal Roach's Our Gang succeeding Joe Cobb, the original, died last weekend at his home in Baltimore, Md., of a glandular ailment with which he had been suffering for years. His weight, from 300 pounds, had shrunk to 135. He had recently undergone an operation. He outgrew the gang two years ago and has been living with his family since.

Supply Dealers Meet on Friday

The three-day session of the directors of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association got underway Tuesday at the Edgewater Beach hotel in Chicago prior to the opening on Friday of the sixth annual convention of the association. All 37 members of the organization were scheduled to be present for the opening of the convention. There will be close to 40 exhibits by manufacturers, the largest number in the history of the association's conventions.

New officers are to be elected as well as two new directors. B. F. Shearer of Seattle, president, will preside.

The annual banquet and entertainment will be held Saturday night.

The program of the convention is as follows:

Friday, the opening day, will be devoted especially to examination of the new equipment,

The convention will be called to order by Mr. Shearer, president of the association, at 11 a. m. Friday, and a closed session will ensue until 1 o'clock. During this session a minute of silence will be observed in memory of Clem Rizzo and E. E. Oliver, former members and officers now deceased.

Friday evening will be devoted to an open forum in the Grand Ballroom of the hotel. This session will be address by Nathan D. Golden, chief of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; A. Wienke, who will talk on a new model Motiograph projector; by Charles R. Schatten, whose topic is "The Silent Salesman"; O. F. Neu, "What the Manufacturer Expects from His Dealer Representative"; A. J. Levin, "Accounting for the Theatre Supply Dealer," and J. J. Finn, who will discuss the relationship of supply dealer and projectionist.

At 8 a. m. Saturday members and manufacturers will meet for individual conferences, with the regular business session opening at 10. At this session will be heard the addresses of E. A. Williford and S. M. Zinner.

At an open session Saturday afternoon, beginning at 1:30, Capt. John W. Gorby will give an address on standards and the value of a testing bureau. He will be followed by J. B. Kleckner, after whose talk the meeting will be closed for a business session.

On Saturday evening will be held the annual banquet and entertainment, in the Michigan Room of the hotel.

The hours from 11 o'clock to 1 o'clock Sunday morning will be devoted to hearing reports of committees and new business. In the afternoon will come the annual election

The program for the final day, Monday, calls for a closed business session from 10 o'clock to noon. The hours immediately after luncheon have been set aside for further visits to the equipment exhibits, following which a final business session will be held, at which the 1937 convention city will be decided. The convention will adjourn at 6 p. m.

Assisting the president in conduction of the convention will be J. E. Robin, executive secretary; and K. R. Douglas, vice-president.

ZEHRUNG PREDICTS SCREEN UNIVERSITY

A traveling university with an enrolled student body of more than 20 million is predicted within the next few years by George J. Zehrung, director of the Motion Picture Bureau of the Y. M. C. A. Courses, taught entirely or supplemented by educational films, will go regularly, at nominal expense, to groups of students, no matter where they live. It is conceivable that every course now given at any university, from archaeology to medicine, can be included in the new university's curriculum, Mr. Zehrung declared.

"Several correspondence schools are now experimenting with courses supplemented by films," he said. "And there are 20 state universities which have extension divisions, through which film courses could be distributed. It is estimated that these units serve now about 30,000 organizations —largely schools and clubs. The Motion Picture Bureau of the Y. M. C. A., the largest single non-theatrical distributor in the country, reaches about the same number."

National Decency Legion's Current Film Classification

Of 13 new pictures reviewed, the National Legion of Decency, in its classification for the current week, lists seven as unobjectionable for general patronage and six as unobjectionable for adults. The new pictures and their classification follow:

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "The Last of the Warrens," "Love Begins at 20," "Nobody's Fool," "Rio Grande Romance," "Rogue of the Range," "Trouble for Two," "Three of a Kind." Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults": "Bullets or Ballots," "The Case of the Velvet Claws," "Human Cargo," "The King Steps Out," "Reckless Roads," "Reckless Way."

Jay Emanuel Feted By 200 Exhibitors

Two hundred exhibitors and film men attended the luncheon to Jay Emanuel at the Hotel Warwick in Philadelphia Monday. The speakers pretended to represent the countries which he is to visit on his European trip, with amusing results. The affair was climaxed by the presentation of a gift.

Out-of-towners included Isidore Rappaport of Baltimore and Sig Wittman of the Universal home office. Wires were received from Ned E. Depinet, George J. Schaefer, Jules Levy, William F. Rodgers and others.

Kamen Takes Mickey Mouse Paper

Kay Kamen, who handles Walt Disney's commercial enterprises, has closed a deal with Hal Horne and Cuneo Press whereby he will publish the Mickey Mouse Magazine, starting with the July issue, which goes to press this week. Horne has been publisher of the magazine since its first issue.

Kennedy Report Still Awaited

Broadway awaits with more than passing interest the report on Paramount's affairs which will be forthcoming shortly from Joseph Patrick Kennedy, who was retained by the corporation as special adviser. Mr. Kennedy returned last week to the home office at Times Square from a study of the studio in Hollywood.

The general impression is that Mr. Kennedy's recommendations on financial and other corporate policies of Paramount will be ready sometime late next week, and a special directors' meeting would be called for the purpose. The annual stockholders' meeting is set for June 16th.

There has been absolutely no intimations as to the nature of Mr. Kennedy's findings, but elsewhere it was held likely that Mr. Kennedy will favor the retention of Adolph Zukor, board chairman, as active head of production in Hollywood, where Mr. Zukor is now presiding.

The report on Paramount's theatre policies and operations, now being prepared by John J. Ford, on assignment from Mr. Kennedy, are not expected to be forthcoming for at least another month. Specifically determined will be the extensions and terms of partnership operations with Wilby and Kincey, Lucas and Jenkins, Hoblitzelle and other affiliated theatre circuits. The present arrrangements with the three circuits mentioned expire July 1st.

Meanwhile Paramount and RKO have pooled their five theatres in St. Paul, effective June 26th. Involved are Paramount's first run Riveria, Tower and Paramount theatres, and RKO's Orpheum and President.

At last week's meeting of the Paramount directors in New York, Henry R. Luce resigned from the board. Mr. Luce, president of Time magazine, became a Paramount director last year with the reorganization. He gave as the reason for his resignation an overlapping of duties.

Rogers Fund Is Near $300,000

The total of collections for the Will Rogers Memorial Fund, which completed its seven-day drive last week, is expected to reach $300,000, it was estimated Monday by the fund committee on the basis of incomplete returns from independent theatres and circuits. An earlier estimate had placed the total at $250,000. The Music Hall alone, in New York, collected $3,863.

Among reports received at headquarters in New York was one from Pittsburgh's zone chairman, John H. Harris, which estimated a total of $15,000 for the drive. New Haven collections are expected to amount to $5,000, with $2,300 collected by first run houses alone. A $20,000 total is expected to be received from the state of Connecticut. Frank Drew, general chairman of the Cleveland area, reported that Loew's led the local circuits with a total of $4,000, with RKO houses reporting more than $3,000.

Stratification

With the steady multiplication of vocational organizations, inevitably popular in a community composed largely of natural born joiners, the more or less serious business of earning a living in the production branch of the motion picture industry has acquired a new and not invariably gratifying complexity. Time was when a personable young fellow might start in as office boy and wind up as star, director, writer, even company president. Of course it still can happen, theoretically, but the eager formation of and earnest devotion to professional guilds, societies and so on have induced a stratification that makes the progress of the gifted neophyte a giddy series of mental hurdles not often cleared without mishap.

Of course nobody cares very much about neophytes and their progress, but there has been plenty of indication lately that vocational stratification is not regarded in high places as an unadulterated boon. Steps have been taken and things have happened. The huddling has abated somewhat, or moved into secret session, and the issuance of group declarations has fallen off noticeably. But nobody on either side of the employer-employee relationship is altogether happy about the recent past.

It is tacitly agreed that events moved a little too swiftly and abruptly to harmonize completely with the conception of composed serenity becoming a major industry which all parties wishfully believe to be prevalent. There is a measure of apprehension lest there be born a suspicion that the conflict exposed an eventuality against which it had occurred to no one to provide a policy. Such a suspicion would be hard to dispel.

With or without relation to any of the foregoing, Columbia has raised four of its scenarists to the rank of director. They are Howard J. Green, Edward Chodrov, Jack Kirkland and Sidney Buchman. It is the season of promotions and no unusual significance need attach to the incident. But to Thomas Mitchell, New York stage author and actor, Columbia has given the remarkable official status of writer-actor-producer. No doubt Mr. Mitchell is every inch the triple-threat talent the title implies, and no doubt it was accorded him solely for reasons resident in his record, but it must be evident, even to that office boy in the first paragraph, that this recruit to the studio colony hasn't much chance of getting himself hopelessly stratified. Whether or not knowingly, Columbia appears to have supplied at least a rough outline of what that missing policy might one day turn out to be.

S. S. Van Keuren has been appointed production manager of Hal Roach studios with Lawrence Tarver as assistant. L. A. French will continue in charge of Laurel and Hardy. . . . Thyra Samter Winslow has signed a long term contract to write for RKO-Radio. . . . Peter Lorre will appear in the Hecht-McArthur production of "The Monster" for GB and the matching is generally regarded as perfect. . . . Stewart Heisler, film cutter, has been made story supervisor and director for Sol C. Siegel. . . . Paramount has taken up its option on Grant Withers and Twentieth Century-Fox has taken like action in regard to Arline Judge. . . . Al Rackin, after an absence on other duties, is back in the publicity department of RKO-Radio under Howard S. Benedict. . . . MGM has given Maureen O'Sullivan a new contract. . . . Ruby Keeler has replaced Joan Blondell in the cast of First National's "Let's Pretend." . . . Charlie Chase and Hal Roach have ended their 17-year association by settlement of contractual agreement.

Product

Four pictures were started and six were finished during the week. Invincible launched "Easy Money" under direction of Phil Rosen with Onslow Stevens, Kay Linaker, Noel Madison, Barbara Barondess, Salmer Jackson, Robert Homans, John Dilson, Alan Woods and Barbara Bedford.

RKO-Radio started production of "Mummy's Boys" with Fred Guoil directing the Wheeler-Woolsey duo supported by Barbara Pepper, Moroni Olsen, Frank Thomas and Willie Best.

Twentieth Century-Fox started studio work on "Charlie Chan at the Race Track," having completed background shots on location. Warner Oland continues as Chan and the cast includes Keye Luke, Alan Dinehart, Helen Wood, Thomas Beck, G. P. Huntley, Jr., and Gavin Moore. H. Bruce Humberstone is directing.

"Hollywood Boulevard" was put into production at Paramount with Robert Florey directing John Halliday, Robert Cummings, Esther Ralston and C. Henry Gordon.

Universal completed "My Man Godfrey" with William Powell, Carole Lombard, Alice Brady, Eugene Palette, Gail Patrick, Mischa Auer, Alan Mowbray, Jean Dixon, Robert Light, Pat Flaherty and Grady Sutton directed by Gregory LaCava. Two others finished by the same company are "Ride 'Em Cowboy," in which Buck Jones, Luana Walters, George Cooper, Donald Kirke, J. P. McGowan, Joseph Girard and Charles LeMaire were directed by Lester Shumway, and "Two in a Crowd," directed by Alfred Green, with Joel McCrea, John Bennett, Elisha Cook, Jr., Alison Skipworth, Reginald Denny, Henry Armetta, Andy Clyde, Nat Pendleton, Donald Meek, Bradley Page and Billy Barrud.

MGM finished two. "We Went to College" was directed by Joseph Santley with Walter Abel, Una Merkel, Edith Atwater, Hugh Herbert, Charles Butterworth, Charles Trowbridge, Edgar Kennedy, Leila MacIntyre, Mahlon Hamilton, Maude Allen, Virginia Brissac, Billy Dooley, King Baggott and Don Barclay in the cast. "Women Are Trouble" presents Stuart Erwin, Florence Rice, Paul Kelly, Margaret Irving, Raymond Hatton, Kitty McHugh, William Tannen, Robert Livingstone, Jack Gray, Florence Lake, John Harrington, Frank Lackteen and Alex Melish. Errol Taggart directed.

Sol Lesser completed "Border Patrolman," the last picture in which George O'Brien will star for him. Other personalities are Polly Ann Young, Roy Mason, Mary Doran, William P. Carleton, Smiley Burnette, Tom London and Al Hill. It was directed by David Howard.

May and Perhaps

David O. Selznick may produce "Julius Caesar." . . . MGM may pair Frank Morgan and Billie Burke in "Picadilly Jim." . . . Paramount may produce Martha Stanley's "Elsie Dinsmore" stories as a series for Virginia Weidler because they liked her so well in "Girl of the Ozarks," but she has two more assignments already scheduled, "Three Married Men" and "Tom Sawyer, Detective." . . . MGM may lend Francine Larrimore to Paramount for "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," which would be her first picture. . . . Perhaps the following pictures will be roadshown—"The Green Pastures," "The Good Earth," "Anthony Adverse," "The Garden of Allah," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Road to Glory," "Beau Geste," "The Lost Horizon"—but that's what they say about all the pictures.

Construction

J. L. Warner has announced completion of plans for erection of a five story office building at the Burbank plant which will include a thousand seat theatre. Other features will be a complete laboratory, a well equipped makeup department and two sound stages.

It has also been revealed that the new Twentieth Century-Fox administration building, which it is hoped will be ready for occupancy by September 1st, will contain 221 rooms, a gymnasium, a Turkish bath and other features conducive to effective exercise of administrative functions.

Personal

Louis B. Mayer arrived in Hollywood Monday by plane. . . . John Boettiger of the MPPDA left for New York last weekend after a business stay. . . . The Carl Laemmles, senior and junior, will go to Europe on the second return voyage of the Queen Mary for an extended vacation. . . . D. W. Griffith has written two plays and is working upon a third.

European Producer Signed by MGM

Gregor Rabinovitsch, formerly head of production for UFA and one of the ace European producers, has been signed to a contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He reported this week from Hollywood that he is acquainting himself with all angles of American production before starting on his first picture.

Mr. Rabinovitsch was signed by Carl Laemmle in Europe and was brought to Hollywood by Universal about four months ago. His Universal contract has been cancelled by mutual consent, it is understood.

Lightman Radio Maestro

M. A. Lightman, former national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and present circuit operator with headquarters in Memphis, is now acting as master-of-ceremonies each Sunday afternoon over Memphis' radio station, WMC, during an amateur hour. Winners of the various awards on the radio program are then banded into units and tour the Lightman theatres.

Hanbury Made Board Chairman

Ralph Hanbury has been elected chairman of the board and managing director of Radio Pictures, Ltd., of England, according to Phil Reisman, vice-president of the RKO Export Corporation and general foreign sales director. At this meeting held in London recently, W. C. Dawson was also elected a director of Radio Pictures, Ltd.

Too Many Films in South America: Day

With approximately 500 features released annually, the greatest problem of the film industry in South America is "too many pictures," John L. Day, Jr., general manager for Paramount for the past 21 years in that territory, stated last week upon his arrival in New York. There are a limited number of first runs in the various key cities and because of the great supply of output it is difficult to get playing time, he said.

In Buenos Aires there are 18 first runs and in Rio de Janeiro there are about five. If a picture is held over a second week, another attraction, usually from the same exhibitor, is sacrificed, according to Mr. Day. Preference in the Latin-American countries is for American pictures with superimposed titles. Dubbed films receive mild response. About 15 pictures are produced in the Argentine yearly, the Paramount representative said.

New theatre building continues all the time, he continued. Three or four structures are now being erected in Rio de Janeiro and a 1,000-seat house is in the final stages of construction at Buenos Aires. MGM is building four theatres in South America which are expected to be ready for opening in September.

Approximately 95 per cent of the Paramount product released in America is handled in South America, Mr. Day said.

Griffith Adds Men In Expansion Move

Three former southwestern distribution executives have joined the Griffith Brothers circuit organization to direct its future expansion activities, L. C. Griffith, head of the circuit, who is in New York from Oklahoma City for the current Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America conferences with distributors on national sales policies, revealed.

The men are E. R. Slocum, formerly Oklahoma City branch manager for Warners; F. L. Stocker, former Dallas branch manager for Columbia, and R. I. Payne, former Dallas branch manager for Universal. The three men have been placed in charge of the newly organized Griffith Realty Company, which was formed to buy and build new theatres for the Griffith operating companies. The operating companies now have 129 houses in Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico.

Allied Cash $2,114,569

Allied Owners Corporation, which owns the Brooklyn Paramount, Loew's Pitkin, Valencia and Kings, and theatres at Birmingham, Ala., Fremont, O., and Glens Falls, N. Y., reported cash on hand as of April 1 amounting to $2,114,569.

Operations for the month of March resulted in receipts of $78,292, disbursements of $62,699, or a profit of $25,593 for the month. Allied Owners is just completing its reorganization under Section 77-B.

Koppleman to Philadelphia

Moe Koppelman, head of Universal's print department in New York, is now in Philadelphia to take over the assistant managership of the company's exchange there.

Managers Attempt to Appease Film Backers of Stage

With instructions that their first duty was to reach an agreement with the Dramatists' Guild that would meet the objections of the motion picture companies, representatives of the managers were appointed late last week to sit on the joint committee which will advise the negotiator on the sale of film rights to plays.

The group was instructed by members of the League of New York Theatres and independent managers to use every means to reconcile the viewpoints of the managers and playwrights with those of the motion picture "backers."

Those appointed were Brock Pemberton, Marcus Heiman, Lee Shubert, Warren P. Munsell and Herman Shumlin, with Max Gordon, James R. Ullman, Lawrence Langner, Arthur Hopkins and L. Lawrence Weber as alternates.

The Dramatists' Guild named its representatives to the joint committee as Sidney Howard, Howard Lindsay, Owen Davis, John Howard Lawson and Kenyon Nicholson.

The theatre league's board of governors empowered Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive adviser, to sign the recently approved agreement on behalf of 59 of its members who formerly had pledged themselves to stand by whatever form of contract the League eventually acknowledged. Eighteen independent managers also signed the new basic agreement.

From Hollywood came word this week that Warner Brothers have informed Brock Pemberton, Alexander Yokel, who produced "Three Men on a Horse," and other managers who have received the company's backing that no further financing will be forthcoming until the present agreement is changed. Warners have discontinued discussions with several producers, as has Paramount, and Twentieth Century-Fox is understood to have abandoned plans for its own stage production.

AT&T Used Films in Rate Drives

American Telephone and Telegraph Company was disclosed as one of the most extensive users of industrial films, in testimony given in Washington on Tuesday in the Federal Communications Commission $750,000 investigation of the utility's affairs.

E. S. Wilson, vice-president in charge of public relations, told of the production of films as part of the company's campaigns to "influence public opinion" while rate cases involving higher telephone costs to subscribers were pending.

Evidence was introduced to show that the company had given free performances in the course of which these films were shown. The commission attorneys said the films are offered to theatres as entertainment, and are sometimes used as "special features" by smaller theatres throughout the country.

CBS Plans Broadcasting Center on Park Avenue

Columbia Broadcasting Company has announced the purchase of a plot of ground on Park Avenue, New York, from 59th to 58th Street. It is planned to build a new broadcasting building to house the engineering equipment, studios and offices to serve station WABC, key station of some 100 outlets.

"Letty Lynton" Plea Is Denied

Attorneys for the plaintiffs in the "Letty Lynton" plagiarism suit on Wednesday submitted the decree in the case to the federal district court in New York, and the court was expected to appoint a special master to decide the amount of damage due to Margaret Ayer Barnes and Edward Sheldon, who obtained a decision on their claim that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plagiarized their play, "Dishonored Lady," in making the film.

The circuit court of appeals on Monday denied the motion of Loew's and MGM to reverse the decision on constitutional and other grounds. The defendants also sought to have the recovery of damages limited to the United States and possessions, and to have the case dismissed against all defendants but the distributing company.

Judge Woolsey, overruling all motions, announced he would disqualify himself from further jurisdiction of the case as his wife some time ago purchased 100 shares of Loew stocks. The case may now go before Judge Knox.

Composer Society Adds 30 Members

Thirty new members were admitted to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers at the monthly meeting of the board last Thursday, these consisting of 20 authors and composers and 10 publishers, it was announced by E. C. Mills, general manager of the Society.

Mr. Mills said that protests had been lodged by four or five publishers against the present method of determining their catalogue availability status, which is a factor in deciding the amount of their royalties from ASCAP.

While it has been decided that the system of determining catalogue availability shall remain unchanged, it was agreed that grievances may be submitted for review in individual instances.

The protests were from so-called standard publishers who claim discrimination in that their ratings do not give due consideration to copyrighted arrangements of works which are in the public domain, free from copyright.

Joseph R. Fliesler, who had charge of press contacts for ASCAP, has resigned, and the publicity department has been abandoned.

Poster Dealers Will Not Fight Paramount Plan

Directors of the National Poster Service Association decided to call off the three-day emergency meeting planned to be held in Cleveland this week. No reason was given for the move.

Although nettled no end when Paramount announced its poster rental service, the attitude of the renter services is said to have changed when it was learned none of the other distributors is going for the same plan. This is said to be the reason for calling off the Ohio meeting.

Paramount's poster rental plan may suffer a temporary setback in the New York area when it goes into effect this week as scheduled. Although it is stated at the distributor's New York branch that several small accounts and one or two independent circuits already have signed the special contract for the new service, it was revealed that the Independent Theatre Owners' Association has a 10-year contract with all of the poster service renters whereby the organization receives 50 cents for every theatre which joins its membership and begins to do business with the renters. The pact was entered into last January 1.

Bernerd Continues GB Sales Director

In order to clear up "misapprehensions" concerning his status as distribution executive of Gaumont British sales activities, Jeffrey Bernerd, now in New York, this week issued the following statement from GB's American headquarters on Broadway:

"My contract with Gaumont British charges me with the responsibility for sales in England and the United States. Because of the expansion of our plans, the increase of our production budgets, and the international value of our pictures, I decided to spend at least half of my time each year right on the spot, here in America; and the other half in England. This is to be my policy from now on.

"I shall return to London at the end of August for conferences and a survey of conditions, and shall then return here.

"The United States is too important a market to be served from long distance. Hence my decision to spend at least half my time here.

"There are no changes in the sales setup planned either here or abroad. David Ostrer continues as head of the overseas department—which in this country is comparable to the foreign department—in charge of Gaumont British sales in all countries except England and the United States. During my absence in this country, he also assumes titular supervision of sales in England. Arthur A. Lee and George W. Weeks continue in their respective capacities as vice-president and general manager; and general sales manager over here."

Virginia Owners Meet; KMTA To Hold Meet in June

Aside from the annual Allied States convention in Cleveland, organized exhibitor activities this week were comparatively quiet, concentrating on the convention of Virginia's MPTO, decision of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Owners to hold their convention this month, and arrangements in Seattle for holding a meeting of Washington's MPTO on June 15th.

Expressions of better business outlook, with a greater number of new theatres and more liberal legislation were voiced at Monday's midsummer-meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia at Virginia Beach's Cavalier Hotel. Speakers included President Morton G. Thalhimer; Edwin S. Reid, head of the Virginia censorship division, who reported an increase in fees due chiefly to a large number of duplicate prints; Winder R. Harris, managing editor of the Norfolk Virginia-Pilot, who praised the motion picture theatre as a community asset; Charles A. Somma of Richmond, who read the legislative report; Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and others.

The annual meeting of the organization will be held in January when officers will be elected.

The KMTA convention has tentatively been set for the last week in June, according to R. R. Biechele, secretary, in Kansas City. The organization's officials have been waiting in the hope that Ed Kuykendall could be secured to talk at the annual meeting.

Monday, June 15, has been selected as the date for the next regional meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington, and Spokane has been chosen as the locale. Executive Secretary James M. Hone of Seattle is arranging the day's program.

Frels Loses Round In Anti-Trust Suit

Jefferson Amusement Company, East Texas Amusement Company, J. G. Long and major distributors have won the first step in their defense against an anti-trust law complaint filed by Ruben Frels. Judge Atwell in the United States district court in Dallas has sustained a demurrer of the defendants.

Mr. Frels charged he was unable to get first-run product for theatres at Victoria, El Campo, Yorktown, Bellville and Columbus, all in Texas. Mr. Frels sought $547,000 and counsel fees.

The court pointed out that there was "no attempt in the present case to complain of any fixing of prices, nor a refusal to sell. There is not sufficient basis alleged to show the deprivation of the public of any commodity controlled by the defendant. In truth, it clearly appears that the public had unusual advantages as to opportunity to view a variety of films."

Mr. Frels has filed notice that he will appeal.

First British Television Broadcasts Only Tests

It will not be necessary for British exhibitors to shut up shop on July 1st just because television broadcasts begin that night, nor on July 15th, more likely of the two dates announced for the premiere of program broadcasting. It is a fact that broadcasting will commence on or about one or the other of those dates, but nobody will know much about it, except what he reads in the newspapers, because nobody but the engineers in charge of the extremely infant industry will have receiving sets.

Fulfilling the letter of widely published announcements, material selected by Gerald Cock, M.V.O., Director of Television, will be put on the air. Engineers of the Baird and Electrical Musical Industries laboratories will receive it on sets developed for the purpose and, guided by results, will proceed to evolve jointly a standard type of set for general use. It is considered probable that sending apparatus will require certain modifications also. Until these tests and revisions can be completed, which may take months, and until receiving sets can be manufactured and placed on the market, British showmen and plain citizens will continue to read digressive reports of progress made and to view each development fearfully or hopefully as the case may be.

Meanwhile, information from BBC, trickling through the defenses of silent Sir John Reith, is illuminative by negation. There can be no photographs of apparatus because designs will be changed. There are no blueprints available because revision is constant. There is, in fact, no information on the subject save the polysyllabic nothings contained in the regular periodic releases, wherefore the world premiere of television broadcasting will be in the nature of a "sneak preview".

Operators' Board Tackles Issue of New York Control

With the operators' situation in New York City one of the main problems to be ironed out, the executive board of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators convened in Kansas City on Monday for a week of sessions preliminary to the annual convention which opens June 8th. The conflict between Local 306 and the Independent Theatre Owners Association, which involves two independent unions and concerns control of the New York situation, continues at an impasse.

George E. Browne is expected to be reelected as president, in recognition of his efforts in obtaining the closed shop agreement at the Hollywood studios last January and the awarding of jurisdiction to the IATSE over certain crafts formerly held by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Leading projectionists of eastern Canada are attending the convention, and a special conference for the Canadian delegates was scheduled for Friday.

The deputation from the Dominion is headed by W. P. Covert of Toronto, international vice-president of the IATSE, and Charles Dentlebeck, supervisor of projection of Famous Players Canadian Corporation and president of Local 173, Toronto, for many years. Among other delegates are Arthur Milligan of Toronto, C. H. Perry, Sudbury, Ont., and William Hartnett, Ottawa.

William Fox Says He Is Bankrupt; New Suit is Filed

William Fox, who sold his Fox Film holdings to the Chase banking interests for upwards of $15,000,000 in cash, this week filed a petition in bankruptcy—and was so adjudged. In another court he was held liable on a claim for $1,000,000. Thus, Mr. Fox's already complicated court activities become even more intensified.

Mr. Fox, now classified as a resident of Atlantic City, N. J., filed his suit and was adjudged bankrupt by Federal Judge William Clark at Camden. He listed his liabilities as $9,535,201, his assets as $1,590,100 and stated that his cash on hand amounted to exactly $100. He listed all lawsuits pending against him as liabilities.

Bankruptcy referee Robert E. Steedle, however, said in Camden this week that he would appoint a creditor's committee and start holding hearings within two weeks on the assets and liabilities of Mr. Fox.

Meanwhile, a second action was filed against the former head of Fox Film in the United States district court in New York by the Capitol Company, lessors of the Fox, San Francisco, in which a judgment of $210,000 is asked.

Mr. Fox was further held liable for a $1,000,000 judgment in favor of the Chicago Title and Trust Company in a final report filed with the New York supreme court Monday by Referee Sol Stroock. The report held, however, that Mr. Fox is entitled to a judgment in a like amount against Fox Theatres corporation.

SERIALS FOR ADULTS

URGES SERIALS MADE FOR THE ADULT PATRON

To the Editor of the Herald:

From where we sit it appears that the motion picture producers have been overlooking a very good bet. Every magazine on the stand—Cosmopolitan, American, Red Book, Ladies Home Journal, Saturday Evening Post, etc.—carries serials. These serials are a big factor in maintaining and increasing their circulation. They appeal to the adult mind and retain their interest.

In our experience with serials in the picture business, each one was written and directed by two-year-olds. The hero gets killed at the end of each episode only to bob up unharmed the following week. The situations are so ridiculous and the direction so haphazard that the film seems ludicrous, not only to adults, but even to children.

I believe that 'there's gold in them thar hills" for some producer to make serials that would appeal to adults. The stories and the general makeup could and should be the same as magazine serials. It is not necessary for the hero to end each episode getting killed. A good story, interestingly told, would sustain interest until the final episode. I suggest that a story similar in content to the "It Happened One Night" type made into a serial would be the answer to the exhibitor's prayers. If some producer will make it, we and a lot of other exhibitors will buy it.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont.

A LITTLE CAMPAIGN FOR QUILLAN FILMS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Colonel Jenkins states in the Herald issue of May 2nd, "What a lot of exhibitors want is to put Eddie Quillan in a lot more pictures."

I am informed that Colonel Jenkins is in touch with many exhibitors and he knows what he is talking about.

I am sure that in this territory we found Quillan to be a good box-office attraction. He was a great favorite in his Pathe pictures and then he stopped making pictures. Later same were reissued. He came back in "Gridiron Flash" for RKO, that was most welcome. We almost lost sight of him for over a year. He returned strong in "Mutiny on the Bounty" and following the trade and newspapers found that he received great praise and was awarded honorable mention from the Screen Actors' Guild.

I know that Colonel Jenkins is correct when he writes that a lot of exhibitors would like to see him in more pictures.—C. J. Fourgis, Grand Theatre, Mount Pleasant, Pa.

To the Editor of the Herald:

In your issue of May second Colonel Jenkins states in his column, "What a lot of exhibitors would like to see 'em do is to put Eddie Quillan in more pictures than they do."

This fact is significant inasmuch as Colonel Jenkins is in personal touch with hundreds of exhibitors throughout the middle west. But even more significant is the fact that in Herald reports "What The Picture Did For Me," exhibitors, on several occasions, have asked for more Quillan pictures.

There should be no mystery about Quillan. The popularity of his past and present performances in pictures stands as worthy testimonial to his rare ability as a comedy and dramatic star. Proof of this statement may be gather from the fact that several of Quillan's old Pathe pictures have been reissued. MGM's "Broadway to Hollywood," featuring Quillan, was one of the season's big hits. Quillan's latest sensational role in "Mutiny on the Bounty" won him unprecedented praise from the tradepapers, critics and officials, and an honorable mention for the best performances of the year from Screen Actors' Guild.

It is the duty of all tradepapers, critics and exhibitors to advocate the best pictures and best stars for their patrons. May I say: don't fail to give Quillan a boost and bring him back to this eager and anxious public.—P. Mikalarias, Orpheum Theatre, Connellsville, Pa.

Doubt Americans Plan to Take Over Mexican Theatres

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

Owners of cinemas and other places in Mexico City which they believe can be adapted to cinematographic purposes do not have a great deal upon which to base their expectations of palming them off to Americans, in the opinion of veteran foreign showmen. Their hopes have been inspired by scouts of an American amusement enterprise, said to have its headquarters in Chicago, who have been in Mexico City to study the situation firsthand. Up to this writing, nothing has come of this inspection.

Rumors have been current that American interests are dickering to take over the Cine Principal, née Teatro Principal, which up to three summers ago had been a stage theatre for more than two centuries. It was America's oldest playhouse. Since its conversion to the modern trend in Mexico, the Principal has been doing pretty well showing pictures. Foreign film circles say the reports are but dreams, even though the Principal people are noncommittal. American picture men assert that no Yankee showman who knows his way about would think of taking over a barn like the Principal. These observers contend that the American with all his buttons on would not consider buying or leasing any Mexico City cinema, with the exception of the new Teatro Cine Alameda, for he certainly would want a house in complete accord with his own ideas. It would be quite costly to renovate a cinema in accord with modern American showmanship methods. It is therefore held that if Americans come to the Mexican capital as cinema operators they will build to suit themselves.

There is only one cinema here, the large Cine Olimpia, that is directly owned by Americans. The Jennings family built the house in 1921 and have operated it since then themselves, excepting the time it was leased to Paramount as a show window.

The cinema building spurt is still on in the Mexican capital, with the trend rather toward the downtown business section. Mexican interests are building the latest cinema, the Cine Rex, a 1,000-seater that is to aim at high class downtown patronage. It is nearing completion in Avenida Madero, Mexico City's Fifth Avenue. The house will have the latest equipment and patron comfort facilities. It is scheduled to open this summer. When this house is inaugurated, it will bring to 67 the total of cinemas in the Federal District, which includes Mexico City.

Further proof that horror pictures of a mystery nature and with smart detectives doing their stuff to rescue a pretty gel at the last minute are very popular with Mexicans, is afforded by the hit "El Baul Macabro" ("The Horror Trunk"), the work of Pezet Producciones, a native producing company, is making at the Cine Principal, here. The picture has all the tried elements of the film shocker, but with some new angles, and concerns a trunk murder mystery and a comely miss who the good looking detective gets out of a jam. It is of feature length and a talker, in Spanish.

American crime and detective pictures go over very well in Mexico.

The classy new Cine Teatro Alameda is going in for elaborate and high grade stage shows. It had just booked the Balet Espagnol of Madrid, which has performed in the United States, for a fortnight's engagement, starting November 27. The ballet is to come here after an engagement at the Guild Theatre, New York. This is the first time in many years that a local cinema has booked an attraction of this magnitude for its stage show. The action is seen as establishing a new precedent in local cinema-stage entertainment.

In line with the popular demand for crime-police-mystery pictures, a nine-reel feature, "Marihuana" ("Mexican Opium") is being produced by a local company. The story deals with the methods of the Mexico City police in combatting the narcotic evil, both consuming and peddling. The cast is headed by two noted Argentine actors, Barry Norton and Jose Bohr, and Lupita Tovar. Several Chinese students at Mexican universities figure in the sequences. Technical details of police work are being supervised by Ted Gonzalez, finger print expert of the department, who did detecting for a while in New York.

Trouble over wage assessments has started between Mexican screen players and the cinematographists' union. The union is demanding three per cent of the players' gross salaries, an amount which the assessees say is far too high as wages for playing in pictures in Mexico are not as regular as Saturday night, for there is not so much work to be had, but the union insists that if the players want the protection the organization affords, three pesos per hundred is not too much to pay for it.

PROFIT REPORTED BY WARNER, PATHE, PARAMOUNT AND 20th CENTURY-FOX

Grand National Applies for Registration on New York Curb of 200,000 Shares of $1 Par Value Capital Stock

Substantial profits and dividend payments reported this week reflected continued upturn in motion picture business.

Warner Brothers Pictures, for 26 weeks ended February 29, 1936, earned a net profit of $2,406,245, after all charges, except federal income taxes, compared with $119,736 for the same period in 1935.

Paramount Pictures reported for the first quarter of 1936 a net profit of $718,922.

Twentieth Century - Fox earnings are running from 40 to 50 per cent ahead of 1935, when the company reported a net profit of $3,563,088, according to Joseph M. Schenck, board chairman, in the Wall Street Journal.

Twentieth Century - Fox declared a second regular dividend of 37½ cents on the preferred stock.

Pathe Exchange reported for the 12 weeks ended March 21, 1936, a net profit of $41,277, after all charges, compared with $16,120 profit for the same 12 weeks in 1935.

B. F. Keith Corporation in 1935 totaled $6,250,814 on admissions and with its subsidiaries $9,038,895, according to the company's report to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum declared a dividend of $1.75 per share on preferred stock.

Columbia declared a quarterly dividend of 25 cents on the common stock of the company, payable July 1st.

The Warner net profit of $2,406,245.52 is subject to deduction of federal income taxes leaving a net operating profit of $1,976,245.42. During the period $1,013,111.46 was credited directly to deficit account, representing $703,627.41 discount realized on redemption of optional 5 per cent convertible debentures and bonds of subsidiary companies and $309,484.05 adjustments of federal income tax liability to and including the fiscal year ending August 31, 1929.

There was charged to deficit account $303,725.28, representing $120,000 provision for flood losses, estimated total property damage, $25,600 provision for federal income taxes on discount arising from purchase of debentures and bonds of subsidiaries during the period, $158,125.28 loss on disposal of capital assets and cancellation of leases.

The consolidated balance sheet as of Feb. 29, 1936, showed total current assets of $21,433,035.34, including cash of $3,575,491.30, and current liabilities totalled $16,058,519.97.

Paramount Report

The Paramount report showed that $800,000 of the $2,500,000 reserve set up at the end of the last fiscal year for amortization of pictures had been used for that purpose. Operating earnings, after applying this item, were given as $1,058,627. Dividends from non-consolidated subsidiaries were quoted at $174,749. A credit of $21,767 was derived from foreign exchange adjustment. Federal income taxes were placed at $143,677 and interest on debentures of Paramount Pictures, Inc., at $392,544.

Twentieth Century - Fox

Joseph M. Schenck issued a statement, on his return from Europe, that the earnings of Twentieth Century-Fox are running from 40 to 50 per cent ahead of last year's showing. For 1935 the company reported a net profit of $3,563,088, which was equal to $1.24 per share of common stock after preferred dividend requirements had been met.

A second regular dividend of 37½ cents on the preferred stock, payable June 30 to holders as of record at the close of business June 13 was declared at the board meeting held last week. Fox Film Realty Corp. 6 per cent sinking fund hold bonds due January 1, 1942, in the amount of $8,800 have been drawn for redemption for the sinking fund, July 1, 1936, at 101½ per cent of their principal amount.

Pathe Film Corporation

Pathe Film Corporation, formerly Pathe Exchange, Inc., reported for the 12 weeks ending March 21 a net profit of $41,277 after depreciation, interest, federal income taxes and minority interest. This is equal to a dividend of 5 cents on the common stock after requirements of $8,043 no-par shares of $7 cumulative convertible preferred stock.

Profit from laboratory operation was stated as $36,358.46. Income from film rentals, less distribution allowances and producers' participation, included estimated provisions from unrecouped advances to producers, was $79,456.30. Non-operating income, including dividends from Du Pont Film Manufacturing corporation, was $46,047.74.

Last week the Securities and Exchange Commission announced that Grand National Films, Inc., owned by Pathe and the medium through which Pathe Exchange re-enters the motion picture industry actively after five years, has applied for the registration of 200,000 shares of capital stock, $1 par value, on the New York Curb exchange.

Keith Theatre Receipts

Box-office admissions of the B. F. Keith Corp. last year totaled $6,250,814 and those of Keith and its subsidiaries totaled $9,033,895, according to the company's annual report to the Securities and Exchange Commission, made public Tuesday.

KAO, also filing a report, showed admissions collected by six subsidaries as $1,448,287.

The B. F. Keith report showed a total income for the company and its subsidiaries of $9,974,650 and for itself along of $7,236,905. Film service and production expense were $2,291,190 for the group and $1,718,537 for the parent company, while artists' salaries were $730,547 for the group and operating expense and theatre overhead $3,576,666, of which $2,678,596 was incurred by the Keith company alone. The net profit for the year, after allowance for income taxes, was $361,376 for Keith and $464,644 for Keith and its subsidiaries.

The company paid RKO Service Corporation $223,535 during the year for management service and RKO Film Booking Corporation $21,584 for booking service, it was stated.

The KAO report showed income of $1,187,009 and expenses of $36,308, with a net profit after taxes of $499,101. A report on the six subsidiaries showed they received booking fees of $112,709. Film service and production cost were $298,979; artists' salaries $142,300, and operating expense and theatre overhead $611,844. The net profit after taxes was $112,611.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum

The board of directors of Keith-Albee-Orpheum corporation declared a dividend, out of capital surplus, of $1.75 per share on the 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock for the quarter ended March 31, 1932, payable on July 1, 1936, to stock holders of record at the close of business June 15, 1936.

Columbia Dividend

The Columbia dividend announcement was made by A. Schneider, treasurer, following a meeting of the board of directors on Monday. The dividend is quarterly, amounting to 25 cents a share on the common stock of the company and is payable July 1st to stockholders and voting trust certificate holders of record at the close of business on June 18th.

Novia Scotia Unit Of Exhibitors Formed

Independent exhibitors of the Province of Nova Scotia have organized Allied Exhibitors Association of Nova Scotia, which is concentrating its attention on a move to secure a reduction in the amusement tax.

Officers of the association were elected as follows: President, A. J. Mason, Springfield; vice-president, R. J. Macadam, Halifax; secretary-treasurer, T. J. Courtney, Halifax; directors, W. H. Cuzner, Sydney Mines; N. W. Mason, New Glasgow; S. M. Bartling, Liverpool, and Meyer Herschorn, Halifax.

Rochester Picked for SMPE Fall Convention

The Hotel Sagamore, Rochester, N. Y., has been selected for convention headquarters for the fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held Oct. 12-15, according to W. C. Kunzmann, vice-president in charge of conventions. This will be the first convention of the society in Rochester since 1922.

Theatres Use Test Reels

Standard test reels distributed by SMPE engineers have had distribution in 21 countries, with theatres in the United States purchasing 167 prints of the sound reel and 52 prints of the visual reel for the purpose of checking sound and projection. The reels were produced under the direction of the Projection Practice Committee in cooperation with RCA, Photophone division.

Church Women Launch Move for High Type Films

A program for obtaining films that will express "the highest standards of Christian principle and the best in dramatic art" has been launched by the department of motion pictures of the National Council of Federated Church Women.

The guiding spirt in the movement is Mrs. Arretus F. Burt of St. Louis, chairman of the department and long an active worker for higher standards of film taste, reports The Motion Picture and the Family, publication of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Among the major objectives of this department, organized only a year or two ago and already foremost in the field, are to awaken church women to a sense of their responsibility in securing motion pictures that will retain the high ideals of the church; to urge patrons of the motion picture theatre to plan their cinema entertainment as intelligently as they would an evening at the opera or the symphony; to patronize only pictures of the higher type and to protest emphatically to producer, artist and exhibitor when high standards are lowered.

The church council is not neglecting the problem of proper pictures for children but is urging parents to put thought and guidance into their children's selection of films, choosing for them not only pictures which are beneficial from an entertainment standpoint but from an educational and character building standpoint as well. In common with other film groups the council will further the organization of classes in cinema appreciation. It will also urge the formation of better films councils in communities.

One of the most practical phases of the council's endeavor to date has been the formulation of an outline on appreciation of dramatic and musical films which is being widely circulated to the young people of the churches.

In addition the council has given these young people 15 standards for judging a motion picture, which embrace not only its artistry and entertainment value, but its social and character-forming content.

Cinema Appreciation League Sets Convention for July 24

The second annual convention of the Cinema Appreciation League of the University of Southern California, founded by teachers from 24 states in a move to bring together the industry and the public, will be held July 24-28 on the college campus. Under auspices of the American Institute of Cinematography, the program will feature several speakers from the industry, including Walt Disney, Howard Estabrook, Natalie Bucknall, Jean Muir, Col. Jason Joy, Jack Conway and William Dieterle.

"SHORT FORM" STANDARD CONTRACT DRAFTED BY MPTOA FOR DISTRIBUTORS

Simplified Contract Placed Before Companies With Only References to Provisions Less Frequently Invoked

Committee on Trade Practices Has Yet to Meet With Gaumont British, 20th Century-Fox, United Artists, Warner

[The complete text of the so-called "Short Form" of the Standard Exhibition Contract, as proposed by the MPTOA to the distributors, appears on the following pages.]

Reaching the industry just before Wednesday's opening of the Cleveland convention of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, the competitive organized exhibitor association of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on Monday suddenly announced a new and simplified standard exhibition contract for the consideration of distributors for use in the new season.

The impression had been given out during the MPTOA's recent conferences with distributors, on a set of fair trade practices, that a short and simpler contract, as requested by the MPTOA, could hardly be effected at this time because of the amount of legal work involved, and, more important, because of the wide differences in the contractual requirements of the various companies.

During the past several weeks the MPTOA's special trade practice committee, headed by Edward L. Kuykendall, of Mississsippi, president, and composed of Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia; Oscar Lam, Rome, Ga.; L. C. Griffith, Oklahoma City; Charles Williams, Omaha, and Jack Miller, Chicago, have met with Columbia, MGM, Paramount, RKO and Universal, for preliminary discussions on the ten-point program adopted by the MPTOA at its winter directors' meeting in Miami.

These meetings were all held with the individual sales heads, and out of the meeting chambers there came a favorable reaction to the adoption of at least some of the requests of the MPTOA for establishing harmonious relations between exhibitors and distributors, and for setting up the machinery for self-government. The principal sympathies of the distributors to the MPTOA's program are generally understood to be in favor of:

(1) At least a 10 per cent unconditional cancellation privilege;

(2) Adoption of local conciliation boards in all exchange centers for adjusting contractual and other disputes; and

(3) Possible modification, if not elimination, of the score charges which some companies levy on film rentals.

The preliminary meetings with the five distributors ended two weeks ago, and Mr. Kuykendall's committee and the individual distributors rested to give further study to the proposals and counter-proposals. They will resume the individual conferences within the next few days for the purpose of laying the concrete foundations for acceptable practices.

With this in mind, Mr. Kuykendall returns late this week to New York from his home in Columbus, Miss.

The committee has not yet met with Twentieth Century-Fox, GB Pictures, United Artists or Warner Brothers. John D. Clark, general sales manager of Fox, and George Schaefer, holding a similar position at United Artists, were both out of New York at the time of the preliminary conferences. Both corporations are now expected to participate with the MPTOA to hear their proposals. Warner Bros., however, at the outset had flatly declared it would not listen to the exhibitors, "on the advice of counsel." Regardless, the feeling along Broadway is that the company eventually will go along with the others.

MPTOA exhibitor sentiment, as voiced by the MPTOA of Eastern Pennsylvania, is that the local conciliation boards "will unquestionably do away with the hue and cry that is set up by certain groups of exhibitors demanding court action." They feel that litigation "has never, in this country, proven itself profitable to any of the parties concerned; it is costly, and in almost all cases, long drawn out without immediate relief."

Meanwhile, some of the anti-MPTOA exhibitor organizations, principally Allied States and the Independent Theatre Owners of New York, have vigorously condemned the manner in which the MPTOA arbitrarily has shut out from the conferences all organized theatre owners' associations not affiliated with it. There has been some talk in the "anti" camps of either seeking a high court ruling on the matter, or else appealing to the Department of Justice, or some other federal agency.

Short Contract Form Explained

The events leading up to the drafting of the new short form of contract as drafted by the MPTOA, under date of June 1st, and an explanation of the new agreement, were outlined by the MPTOA in an official statement released on Monday from the headquarters in New York, as follows:

"One of the ten important trade practice complaints and proposals which the MPTOA undertook to work out by negotiation with the distributors was to secure the general or at least optional use of a simplified and understandable standard form of exhibition contract, reduced in a short form to essential clauses. This would involve a general revision of the present Optional Standard License Agreement.

"To revise the contract obviously would take long and tedious negotiations between the many interests involved, which does not seem practical at this time but will eventually be necessary. However, we believe it is possible for any distributor to adopt and use a short form of exhibition contract without the further delay that would be inevitable in attempting to negotiate a general revision at this time.

Submitted to Distributors

"Several distributors have asked us for a definite plan or proposal for such a simple short form contract. In compliance with this request we are submitting to each distributor such a short form of contract which we recommend that they adopt for immediate use in dealing with the members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and any or all other exhibitors who prefer such a short contract.

"The condensed form is based entirely on the Optional Standard License Agreement (1933) which was specified in the NRA Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry as approved by President Roosevelt. After the discontinuance of the motion picture code this form continued to be generally used. In effect, this form of exhibition contract was approved by over 9,000 exhibitors who filed written and unqualified assents to the code with the Code Authority. The important contract provisions of this form, as well as the terms and conditions that are agreed upon by bargaining and are ordinarily written into the 'schedule,' are all in the proposed short form, which may be signed by the parties. For all ordinary purposes the short form is a complete contract.

Reference to Other Provisions

"The numerous contract provisions that seldom need be referred to in the actual performance of the contract and which provide for remote contingencies and possibilities are incorporated into the short form by reference and are just as much a part of the agreement as though printed therein. Inasmuch as these are completely standardized provisions, the exhibitor would need but one copy of the complete long form of contract to go with all of the numerous short form contracts which he signs. This saves cluttering up each contract with a large number of clauses that are seldom if ever referred to, avoids the use of a clumsy and confusing form of contract and should save time, printing, inconvenience, expense and confusion in practical use.

"In other words, the active provisions are all set forth in a short form, the standardized trade customs are omitted but are set forth in the long form and definitely made a part of the short form by reference. This step is urged as a beginning towards a simpler contract; at least it overcomes the cumbersome physical features of the present exhibition contracts and is an immediate step towards economy and convenience."

F. K. Speidell Named President of Audio

Frank K. Speidell has been named president of the Audio Productions, Inc., as successor to William A. Bach, who has been named managing director of Western Electric Company, Lt., London. Mr. Speidell has been with the company since its formation three years ago.

Mr. Bach is familiar with the London market as he was sales manager there for First National for a number of years.

Yaeger Takes Over Nine More Theatres

Nine theatres have been added to the string of C. U. Yeager, Denver Bank Night owner, as a result of a partnership with Charles Klein of Deadwood, S. D. The Klein theatres are operated by the Deadwood Amusement Company. Mr. Yeager already operates seven Colorado houses, is in partnership in two Denver houses, and so now has interests in 18 in that territory, Fox Intermountain being the only group with a larger number.

SHORT FORM EXHIBITION CONTRACT

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this week drafted for presentation to distributors—with immediate adoption in mind for the new season—a new "short form" exhibition contract for purposes of simplification. It does not eliminate any of the clauses in the present, long and complicated instrument, which clauses would continue in effect in the new form "by inference." The text of the new short form follows:

Short Form Exhibition Contract (Incorporating by Reference the Standard License Agreement). Endorsed by Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. June 1, 1936. Individual Distributor sales policy provisions may be inserted in the Schedule hereof but shall not be contradictory of any provisions of this Short Form nor of the Standard License Agreement.

Agreement of license under copyright made in one or more counterparts between ...., a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Distributor), party of the first part, and the Exhibitor, (hereinafter named and referred to as the Exhibitor, operating the theatre hereinafter designated), party of the second part,

Witnesseth: The parties hereto agree as follows:

License

First: Subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter stated and those specified in a Standard License Agreement bearing date June 1, 1936, endorsed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, hereinafter referred to as the Standard License Agreement, and which by reference thereto shall be deemed incorporated in and made a part hereof as if herein fully set forth in one complete and single instrument, the Distributor grants the Exhibitor and the Exhibitor accepts, a limited license under the respective copyrights of the motion pictures designated and described in the Schedule hereof and under the copyright of any matter included in any sound recorded therewith, to exhibit publicly said motion pictures and to reproduce for public performances such recorded sound in synchronism therewith, but only at the said theatre for the number of consecutive days specified in the Schedule and for no other use or purpose; provided that the reproducing equipment in the said theatre will operate reliably and efficiently to reproduce such recorded sound with adequate volume and high quality; and provided further that if copyrighted musical compositions are included in such recorded sound, the Exhibitor will have at the date or dates of the exhibition of each of such motion pictures a license from the copyright proprietor thereof or from any licensee of such copyright proprietor to perform publicly the said copyrighted musical compositions. If more than one theatre is hereinafter designated the said motion pictures are licensed for exhibition at only one of such theatres unless otherwise in the Schedule specifically provided in writing.

Term

Second: The term of this Agreement shall begin with the date fixed or determined for the exhibition at the said theatre of the first motion picture deliverable hereunder and shall continue for a period of one year thereafter unless otherwise in the Schedule provided. The Distributor agrees during said term to deliver to the Exhibitor, and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit at said theatre during said term upon the date or dates herein provided for, a positive print of each of said motion pictures except such as may be excluded as provided in Clauses Fifteenth and Seventeenth of the Standard License Agreement.

Payment

Third: (a) Exhibitor agrees to pay for such license as to each such motion picture the fixed sums specified in the Schedule at least three (3) days in advance of the date of delivery of a print thereof at the Distributor's exchange or of the date of shipment to the Exhibitor from another exhibitor, unless after the acceptance of this application by the Distributor such payment shall be otherwise agreed to by the Distributor in writing signed by an officer of the Distributor. All payments hereunder shall be made to the Distributor at the City in which is located the exchange from which the Exhibitor is served.

Percentage Bookings

(b) If the rental of any of such motion pictures is to be determined either in whole or in part upon the admission receipts of said theatre or any part thereof, the Exhibitor agrees to pay such rental immediately after the last exhibition upon the last date of the exhibition of each such motion picture or if requested by the Distributor at the end of each day's exhibition.

Delivery and Return of Prints

Fourth: (a) After each of said motion pictures is generally released for public exhibition and becomes available for exhibition hereunder by the Exhibitor, and Distributor agrees to deliver as hereinafter provided, a print thereof to the Exhibitor.

(b) The Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each of said motion pictures in the order of its general release by the Distributor in the exchange territory in which said theatre is located.

(c) The Distributor shall make deliveries hereunder to the Exhibitor or to the Exhibitor's authorized agent, by delivery at the Distributor's exchange, or to a common carrier, or to the United States Postal authorities.

(d) Exhibitor agrees to return immediately after the last exhibition on the last date of exhibition licensed, each print received hereunder, with its reels and containers, to the exchange of the Distributor from which the Exhibitor is served or as otherwise directed by the Distributor in the same condition as when received, reasonable wear and tear due to proper use excepted. Exhibitor agrees to pay all costs of transportation of such prints, reels, and containers from the Distributor's exchange or the last previous exhibitor having possession of the same, and return to the Distributor's exchange; or if directed by the Distributor, to ship such positive prints elsewhere than to the Distributor's exchange, transportation charges collect.

Selection of Playdates

Fifth: Unless otherwise agreed upon or unless definitely specified or otherwise provided for in the Schedule, the exhibition date or dates of each of said motion pictures shall be determined as provided in the Standard License Agreement.

Clearance and Run

Sixth: The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "clearance period" if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified.

Acceptance by Distributor

Seventh: Until accepted in writing by an officer of or any person authorized by the Distributor and notice of acceptance sent to the Exhibitor this instrument shall be deemed only an application for a license under Copyright, and may be withdrawn by the Exhibitor any time before such acceptance. Unless such notice of acceptance is sent the Exhibitor by mail or telegraph within fifteen (15) days after the date thereof, if the said theatre of the Exhibitor is located East of the Mississippi River, and within thirty (30) days after the date thereof if located West of said river, said application shall be deemed to have been withdrawn. The deposit by the Distributor of any check or other consideration given by the Exhibitor at the time of application as payment for any purpose or the delivery of a print of any of said motion pictures shall not be deemed an acceptance hereof by the distributor.

Changes in Writing

Eighth: This license agreement is complete and all promises, representations, understandings and agreements in reference thereto have been expressed herein and in the Standard License Agreement. No change or modification hereof or in the Standard License Agreement shall be binding upon the Distributor unless in writing signed by an officer of the Distributor, excepting in an emergency and only then, a change or modification may be consented to in writing but only by the representative of the Distributor managing the Distributor's exchange out of which the Exhibitor is served provided such change or modification does not change or modify the run, and/or clearance period, or decrease any rental, or eliminate any motion picture specified in the Schedule.

Privilege of Exclusion

Ninth: The Exhibitor shall have the privilege to exclude not to exceed .... (....%) per cent of the total number of feature motion pictures licensed hereunder provided that the Exhibitor shall give to the Distributor written notice of the Exhibitor's election to exclude, without payment therefor, any of said feature motion pictures within seven (7) days after the available date thereof. In computing the number of feature motion pictures which may be excluded hereunder, fractions of more than one-half (½) shall be regarded as one (1). Upon the exclusion of any feature motion picture, the license thereof and all rights thereunder shall terminate and revert to the Distributor. Upon the termination of this license agreement by the Distributor for a breach thereof by the Exhibitor, the privilege of exclusion herein granted shall be deemed revoked.

Pictures Not Generally Released

Tenth: If any of the said motion pictures described in the Schedule, excepting those, if any, which may be roadshown by the Distributor, shall not be generally released by the Distributor for distributor in the United States during the period beginning ———— and ending ———— each such motion picture shall be excluded from this license as provided in the Standard License Agreement.

Optional Arbitration Clause

Eleventh: OPTIONAL CLAUSE: The following Clause Twelfth is optional with the parties hereto. If it is desired to make such clause a part of this license, the Exhibitor and the duly authorized representative of the Dis-

Music Performers Protest Canada's New Legislation

With Canada's proposed legislation covering music performing rights in its final stages before the House of Commons at Ottawa, Leslie A. Boosey of London, chairman of the British Performing Rights Society, has arrived in the Canadian capital to protest. He is also a member of the council of the cartel of European performing rights societies, which includes the French, German, Austrian, Italian and Spanish as well as the British.

Mr. Boosey predicted the breakup of the Canadian Performing Rights Society (already indicated in a New York news story in the Herald of May 2nd) in event the regulatory legislation goes through. His statement did not, however, reveal that the Canadian Performing Rights Society, jointly owned by the British society and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, is facing an internal breakup. For publication, Mr. Boosey pictured the composers as being in turmoil at the idea of Canada scaling down fees by law.

"I am afraid the findings of the Parker report (Canadian Royal Commission investigation which decided the fees were inequitable) have produced a very bad feeling among composers and authors in Europe and the United States," said Mr. Boosey. "We feel the report has given to the music-using interests everything they asked for and is as far removed from our ideas of arbitration as could possibly be imagined.

"I am afraid if the inadequate fees recommended in the report are prescribed, it will lead to the disintegration and eventual winding up of the Canadian society," he said. "The result would be a drift into the inevitable chaos which must come about under modern conditions when music users do not know to whom to turn to obtain the rights they must have if they want to perform modern programs. In this connection, it is interesting to note that even the Parker report admitted the absolute necessity of a central society, not only to the authors and composers but also to the music users."

Canadian theatre managers who recall the correspondence and conferences which preceded their payments for licenses and the later boosting of schedules will be interested in Mr. Boosey's comment that the society is "not a monopoly."

"In the strict meaning of the term, we are not a monopoly," he declared. "There is a vast amount of music material which is non-copyright and therefore open to the use of any music user free of charge."

The practical difficulties in the way of utilizing these free numbers was admitted, however, when Mr. Boosey added that the interlocking groups represent "the whole of the modern music composing interests of the world" and that "we have always recognized the difficulty any music user would have in attempting to give reasonable programs without the use of our repertoire."

Political observers in the Canadian capital doubt that the efforts of the British spokesman will alter greatly the course of the legislation at this late date. They point out that if the copyright owners feel the rates are too low, the same relief is open to them as to music users who complain that they are too high. There will be a tribunal with power to hear such cases and to set tariffs. The fact that music publishing interests of both Warner Brothers and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer may operate outside the CPRS pool through their own collection agencies has not received official government consideration as yet. The unofficial belief is that anyone dealing in such licenses will come under the law, but that is still an open question.

Theatre interests have not been as active as some other interests in the present Canadian battle over the matter. They presented their case in full to the Royal Commission and, to a considerable degree, left it at that. The small music user, such as the restaurant with a radio, the village hotel, public hall operated by a fraternal order, and the like have strenuously protested music fees during the whole proceedings. The idea of paying a lump sum annually for music rights came to these interests as a severe shock, and many of them rushed at once to the nearest member of Parliament. A large percentage of the users in this class still think it is an imposition if music is not available free.

Luise Rainer Voted Honors By Guild for "Ziegfeld"

Luise Rainer annexed first honors from the Screen Actors Guild for the best performance during April according to the vote of membership for her portrayal in "The Great Ziegfeld." For the first time in the Guild's history two actors tied for first honorable mention. William Powell for "The Great Ziegfeld," and C. Aubrey Smith for "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Henry Stephenson received second mention for "Little Lord Fauntleroy." William Anthony McGuire won top honors for "The Great Ziegfeld" as the best screen play of April. Hugh Walpole won first honorable mention for "Little Lord Fauntleroy" with Herbert Fields and Gertrude Purcell, who did additional dialogue on "Love Before Breakfast" and Nunnally Johnson for "Prisoner of Shark Island" tying for second mention.

Warners Planning Radio Search for Child Talent

Warners has inaugurated a plan in conjunction with Paul Whiteman and his Woodbury Soap radio program for a national radio quest of talented children, the most promising of which will be given screen tests. The new plan was announced in New York last week over station WJZ.

Children from all over the country were invited to appear and the company will make one test a week for the most talented child.

Pick Beecroft Trustees

Admission Tax Receipts Gain

Internal Revenue Bureau figures give admission collections for April as $1,266,425, which compares with $1,157,970 for the same month in 1935 and with $1,255,393 for March of this year. Receipts for the first four months of 1936 amounted to $5,386,350.

PRECARIOUS LEGISLATIVE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA

Legislators Would Increase Censoring Fees, Bar Varying Admissions, Tax Tickets, Circuits

Upsetting the quiet that followed the storm of adverse legislation directed at the motion picture during the winter and spring months of state and federal legislative sessions, the State of Louisiana acted this week to saddle the industry with measures which motion picture folk said would virtually make it impossible to operate within economic reason within the confines of the commonwealth.

Acting with all appearances of complete abandon, Louisiana's legislators moved to (1) increase censoring fees from 25 cents per 100 feet of film to $10 per 1,000 feet, an increase of $8.50 per 1,000 feet, or some $51 increase per six-reel feature; (2) prohibit all theatres in the state from charging different admission prices for shows at different hours on the same days; (3) tax chain or affiliated theatres $100 for each theatre up to four, $250 per theatre from four to twenty, and $500 per theatre when the total is more than 20; (4) tax admission tickets 10 per cent; (5) tax vaudeville and stage shows $100 yearly; (6) tax film and other traveling salesmen $50 yearly; (7) prohibit amusement places from selling standing room; (8) abolish giveaways at theatres by including Bank Nights at film houses under the definition of the state lottery law; (9) compelling theatres, exchanges and others to grant a day off to workers.

The record shows that Representatives Hand and Burke, working as legislative collaborators, and Representative Fink and Senator Carbajal, acting individually, are responsible for the wholesale priming of legislative guns on the motion picture industry.

Senator Carbajal, sponsoring the measure to increase censorship fees, would have the added revenues applied to the public school system. The late Huey Long set up the original censoring charge.

Representatives Hand and Burke introduced the bill prohibiting other than a single admission scale during the day.

Aims at Corporations

Representative Fink's proposal to tax chain theatres is aimed at corporations whose headquarters are in the state, principally Saenger Theatres and United Theatres, Southern Amusements and the circuit interests of Lazarus, Higgenbotham, Berenson and Crim.

Independent owners already are up in arms over the ban on chance games, as introduced by Representatives Hand and Burke.

Louisiana appears to be the only state of the 48 where really serious legislative worries exist for motion pictures.

Denver passed an ordinance providing for a $3,000 fine on any persons convicted of manufacturing, selling or using stench bombs, this following the throwing of a large number of the liquid containers in Denver theatres. The Rocky Mountain States Theatre Owners Association sponsored the bill.

Governor Chandler, in Kentucky, reminded theatre and other amusement operators that the new state amusement tax will go into effect at midnight on June 7th, and asked that applications for permits and blank bonds be sent at once to the State Division of Excises, Department of Revenue, in order to avoid penalties.

Sales Tax Case Up

In New York, the motion of the local United Artists exchange for a preference on the appellate division's court calendar for its appeal from the city's sales tax, was granted and the case was ordered to trial Thursday. The exchanges, acting through United Artists, on a test case, contend that they are not subject to the two per cent sales tax on shipments made outside of the city limits. In addition, exchanges in virtually all other sections of the country where sales taxes have been questioned, are watching the outcome with a view to protesting if the New York branches are victorious.

Revival of the amusement tax proposal appeared probable in New Jersey, since legislators there seemed unable to raise needed revenue either through a general sales tax or income levies. Attempts already have been made this session to effect an admission tax.

Ohio theatres stand in jeopardy of new taxation, which would levy a tax of one and one-half cents a foot on all film examined by the state censor. The distributors threaten to pass on the tax to theatres.

The Sunday closing law was questioned in the courts of South Carolina, bringing a decision from Police Judge Brooks that Sunday shows operated for profit do not constitute a "reasonable necessity."

Spanish Films Gain In Central America

Spanish product, produced in Mexico, Spain and Argentina, looms more seriously than ever before as competition to be reckoned with in the Central American market, in the opinion of Harold Sugarman, United Artists manager in that territory. Mr. Sugarman is in New York for conferences on sales policies and new product. With headquarters in Cristobal, C. Z., Mr. Sugarman has supervision over the north and west coasts of South America, and all of Central America.

As a result of generally improved business conditions throughout the world, theatre business in the territory has had a good season, and he looks forward to a better one next year, since practically all of the activity of the area is connected with the export business. American product still dominates the market, Mr. Sugarman said, but he pointed out that an improvement in Spanish films, and the use of the right stories for the native audiences, has brought a considerable interest in that product. Contrary to the general belief, Mr. Sugarman said that these audiences prefer heavy drama on the screen, the heavier the better.

The use of dubbing in American films in the market is coming back, he said. For some years they have been unacceptable to native audiences and superimposed titles have been used on the original versions.

Mr. Sugarman plans to leave New York in about a week and stop off in Hollywood on his return to Panama.

BOOK REVIEW

HOW TO USE YOUR CANDID CAMERA, by Ivan Dmitri. New York: The Studio Publications, Inc. $3.50.

In browsing through this volume of reproductions devoted to the latest "rage" of amateur photographers, the miniature, one cannot help getting an impression of cinematography. This is perhaps inevitable. As the title indicates, the miniature camera has been herein applied candidly, which is to say, aimed at Life in its natural attitudes, without camera-consciousness, ostensibly or actually unpremeditated, essentially in movement. Of such is the cinematograph.

For that reason it may be that the author overemphasizes deliberate composition as a factor in making an interesting photograph. When Life is in an interesting mood, it is likely to strike its own pose, and the job of the so-called candid camera is to catch it, sincerely, while the fleet moment lasts.

But this is not a book of thoretical discussion. It is a demonstration of technique, consisting (except for a very brief foreword) in instructions for the use of the miniature camera, and reproductions of pictures taken by the author with such equipment.

These reproductions constitute the main body of the book, and the plan of presentation is a good one. For each subject, the picture is reproduced in its original size and as enlarged, with a brief notation of the technical conditions of the exposure. There are 56 of these subjects, among which are a dozen or so of striking pictorial quality.

Incidentally, this volume is one of the publisher's "How to Do It" series, and in format and photoengraving it maintains a high standard already established.—G. S.

Feiber & Shea Addition

Feiber & Shea has taken over the Paramount theatre at Newport, R. I. Alterations were made preliminary to opening the house this week. Paramount operated the house until May 1st, when the circuit dropped it and made the Strand a first-run situation.

French Playwright in U. S.

Tristan Bernard, one of France's leading playwrights, and president of the French Society of Dramatists, Authors and Composers, returned on the Normandie Tuesday after a brief visit. He dedicated the liner's playhouse on its incoming voyage.

Barnett Returns

The Ile de France arriving in New York June 9th will bring George Barnett, president of Modern Film Sales Corporation, home from an extended trip abroad. While in Europe Mr. Barnett sold all his product for the United Kingdom and the entire Continent.

Field in Hollywood

Arthur Field, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer home office representative in Europe, arrived in Hollywood last week to visit the studios.

FRENCH TEMPORARILY SUSPEND RIGOROUS CENSORSHIP REGULATION

Application of Decree to American Companies Dependent on Interpretation of Trade Treaty Already Signed Application Awaits Clarifying of Provisions by Government Officials; Minister of Education to Name Cinema Comn.

The rigorous French censorship decree for control of world showings of films regarded by that Government as inimical to its interests has been suspended pending clarification of its terms by Government officials, according to word received from Paris by the foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Further, it is believed that application of the regulations with respect to American companies will depend substantially on their interpretation in the light of the Franco-American trade treaty, which was ratified May 6, two days before the decree became official. The treaty gave the assurance that "the present treatment will be continued and no new measures will be taken to place American films in a position less favorable than that now enjoyed in comparison with French films or other foreign films."

Whether any amelioration may be expected from this source is considered unlikely, however, since the decree makes no discrimination against American films that is not imposed on all others. The decree threatens a regulation which is claimed in New York to be more drastic than that existing in Germany, Russia and Italy.

What makes the outcome of present representations with the French Government somewhat uncertain, according to New York distributor opinion, is that the Socialists are due to gain power this month and the party leaders are on record as favoring a policy of strict control of the industry as a medium of political propaganda.

Our state department, through the embassy in Paris, is credited with suspension of the decree at least as far as American export business in France is concerned, and further negotiations are in progress.

Important to Americans

The decree is important to American distributors in that dubbing, titling and printing is done in France for a number of Continental countries, such as Belgium, Switzerland, Rumania and Turkey, and the French colonies. Films not produced in France, but merely processed, also are subject to the regulations, which provide for Government approval as a condition to export. Outside of France proper, the degree is applicable to Algeria and the territories of Alsace-Lorraine, unless they are in contradiction to special rulings in effect there.

The genesis of the new law is said to be the displeasure felt by French officials over the export of two or three pictures made by French companies which were considered to have reflected on the French and which caused an unfavorable reaction.

Though newsreels are not mentioned specifically, they are included in the decree by virtue of the fact that the Government wants to prevent a recurrence of the furore caused by the reported smuggling out of France of films of the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslavia in Marseilles, after their official suppression.

Placing the approval of films in the control of the minister of national education, the decree provides:

Control by Minister of Education

"A visa may be rejected to films imported from abroad, even though they deserve a visa, in the case where it is established that the depositor or the producer has participated in the representation in public outside of French territory, films contrary to the national interests of France."

American film men concede that France has the right to impose censorship on all films shown within its territories, but resent the broad terms of the decree which permit the censors to refuse visas to any picture if the individual or company offering it has exhibited something elsewhere to which the French object.

Ten to Represent Industry

In addition to provisions outlined by Pierre Autré, Paris correspondent, in the Herald of May 23, it is provided that the "commission of cinematographic control" which is created under the Administration of Fine Arts shall be named by the minister of education and shall consist of two representatives of the presidency of the council, three of the interior ministry, three of the department of education, and one each from the departments of foreign affairs, justice, war, marine and air.

In addition, the minister of education shall name 10 members representing the various branches of the motion picture industry, and where deemed necessary by the nature of the film, representatives of other Government departments may be added to the commission in an advisory capacity.

A representative of the ministry of affairs for Alsace-Lorraine shall be added whenever the commission examines a German language film destined for that territory.

The director general of fine arts, the chief of the state police and the head of the music and theatre departments of the ministry of fine arts are made ex-officio members of the commission.

Title Changes Restricted

It is provided also that a statement of approval and the number of the visa shall be shown at each exhibition immediately following the title. No titles may be changed without approval of the censors.

Films must be submitted at least eight full days before the first public exhibition. Certain categories of films may be excluded from the regulations, at the discretion of the president of the council, the minister of interior and minister of national education.

The decree shall in no way interfere with police measures with respect to film censorship, such as those regulating the taking of newsreel films.

With regard to export, a special visa must be obtained which must be submitted to the customs and contain full information as prescribed. Those applying for an export visa must declare that they will not distribute or exhibit any version other than that approved, and that French versions will be shown in French territories where that language is either the principal or auxililary one, unless versions are available in the national languages of these territories.

Designation of French Films

A special decree is to be promulgated covering the application of a "French mark" which is to appear on all French films sent abroad.

In event of violation of the decree with respect to imported films exhibited domestically, an export certificate may be refused temporarily to such distributors or producers. A second offense of this nature may permanently bar export to such companies.

Penalties under Article 628 of the customs laws shall be applied against films sent abroad without fulfilling the export visa requirements.

CHINESE CONFISCATE TOURISTS' FILMS

The wave of nationalism engulfing the world has cropped up in China in the form of restrictions on the taking of films by tourists who want to bring home a camera record of their travels.

American tourists who unwittingly have taken pictures prohibited by military regulations or of things considered "prejudicial to the racial dignity of the Chinese nation" have been escorted to police headquarters, questioned and their films confiscated.

The Chinese officials object to the filming of beggars, coolies at work or other scenes involving local color which the Chinese consider bad advertising. Foreigners desiring to take motion pictures must apply for permits, and must ask for officers to supervise their work. The films must be submitted to censorship before exported.

FOUR ADDITIONS TO BARCELONA THEATRES

Three of Four Houses Opening Are New, Fourth Is Converted from Legitimate

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER

in Barcelona

Four picture theatres opened in Barcelona recently—three brand new and one taking over for films an old-established legitimate house—to bring the total of cinemas within the city limits to 116. The latest is the handsome and admirably equipped New York on the Calle Gerona at Rosellon, situated in a high-class residential neighborhood, which opened recently to an audience of enviable quality and character for what is designed as a second-run house. The new theatre seats 950 and is thoroughly modern in construction and installation. It is planned to show there daily two feature pictures and, at times, three, following the usual policy of second-run cinemas in this city. The price level is 0.80 pesetas (about 11 cents in U. S. currency) on ordinary week-days and 1.50 pesetas (about 19.5 cents U. S. currency) on Sundays and holidays.

The opening bill consisted of "Indomita" ("Reckless"), with Jean Harlow, and "La Llama Eterna" ("The Eternal Flame"), starring Norma Shearer, with an animated cartoon and a comic thrown in for good measure and rounding out a three-hour performance—three and three-quarters including the lengthy admission characteristic of the Spanish and Catalan cinema theatres.

V. A. Habib, distribution manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the Region of Catalunya, who was on hand for the opening to represent the MGM Iberica organization, pointed to the fact that Metro pictures had been selected for the initial performance and would be featured by the new house and that, of Barcelona's 116 picture theatres, not less than 85 were currently showing his company's product. The New York's situation may fairly be said to correspond with those of the second-run houses along Broadway in the Eighties in the city for which it is named. The proprietor is Jose Maria Borda.

Another opening of less than a month ago was that of the Cinemar, occupying the site of a former cabaret on the lower Rambla, adjacent to the Principal Palace, old-established and dual "legit" and cinema, with the two auditoriums under one roof. It has 400 seats and charges one peseta on weekdays and 1.65 pesetas holidays and Sundays, and offers one feature picture and a brief program of shorts, with Metro films prevailing. The proprietor is J. Marti.

The Eden, on an important downtown cross thoroughfare, corresponding somewhat to that of the Cinemar in character, has two classes of sittings—179 "preferencia," in the balcony—many Barcelona theatres have their higher priced seats upstairs—and 528 "general" on the ground floor. These are priced respectively at 1.50 pesetas week-days, and 2 pesetas holidays and Sundays, and 1 peseta and 1.50 pasetas. Two feature pictures and two shorts compose the program and Metro full-length films are regularly billed under the proprietorship of M. Casaponsa.

The three houses named are all equipped with Orpheo-Sincronic sound recording and acoustical system, a Barcelona product.

The Poliorama theatre, on the Rambla de Floras, long a popular house for spectacular shows, both dramatic and musical, and seating 1100, opened with picture projection this week, the equipment being Tobis-Klangfilm. The bill was composed of the Soviet "revised version" of "Potemkin" companied with the Warner offering, "En Pos de Ventura," starring Dick Powell. Across the street from the Poliorama, at the Capitol, one of the city's chief first-run houses, the newest Soviet release, "Tchapief, El Guerroro Rojo" ("The Red Warrior") opened to good business coupled with the Columbia feature "Alas de la Muerte" ("Wings of Death.")

Paramount will produce one experimental film in Spain, with production scheduled to get underway in September, according to John W. Hicks, Jr., vice-president of the Paramount International Corporation, and Frederick W. Lange, general foreign representative in continental Europe for the company, who have arrived in Barcelona.

Presumably, if the initial production venture proves successful, Paramount will set plans for additional Spanish pictures to be made here.

Trillo has closed a deal, effective in September, for the showing of Radio products exclusively as second run at the Progresso Theatre following first run at the Avenida.

Urging Spanish Loan

Reports are current and persistent in business and financial circles here and in Madrid that American motion picture and automobile interests in the United States are actively supporting a New York banking group which is negotiating with the Spanish Government a loan sufficient to meet a Spanish obligation of 350,000,000 pesetas, long overdue.

Under the terms asked by the United States group, the deposits of at least a portion of the heavy Spanish gold stocks in London is necessary. An inducement is the surprisingly low interest rate of one and one-half per cent asked by the group.

The reason for the activity of the film and auto interests in the matter lies in the fact that conclusion of such a loan automatically would bring about the favorable termination of negotiations for the American-Spanish reciprocal trade agreements, which only awaits signatures. The chief obstacle to the signing of the treaty is the question of dollar export.

It is understood that negotiations with the Bank of France for a similar loan collapsed when the French asked a virtual monopoly of the Spanish and Spanish Moroccan market for French cars.

Twentieth Century-Fox pictures had impressive openings at two first run local houses last week. "Thanks a Million" had its premiere at the Fantasio, with many of the city's society figures in attendance. "It Had to Happen," with "Charley Chan's Secret" on a dual bill, opened at the Capitol, following several successful films booked at the large downtown house recently by Hispano Fox Film, S.A.E.

Fox Midwest Drops Novel Copy in Ads

Fox Midwest managers for the most part have ceased using Screen Reporter newspaper advertising, begun in Kansas City last year as a novelty. Elmer C. Rhoden, president and general manager of the circuit, adopted it as a means of bringing theatre advertising out of the usual routine. The plan was originally to be used at the discretion of the managers.

The decreasing use of the method is attributed to two factors. One is that it required considerable time on the part of the managers and the other is that the novelty of the plan has worn off.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 26.—(A) What is a watt? A kilowatt? What do they represent and how are they used? (B) What should be the limits of projection distance? Name the objections to a projection distance too short or too long.

Answer to Question No. 19

Bluebook School Question No. 19 was: (A) If a 110-volt light bulb uses 0.5 of an ampere, what is its resistance in ohms? (B) Name one reason why the reflector type of arc light source produces a hotter spot per watt of energy expended than does an arc with which a plano-convex condenser is used. (C) What is a "space charge?"

The following made acceptable answers (by acceptable is meant that whereas the answer may not be wholly correct, it does show the sender has studied the subject and has at least a fairly good comprehension of the matter under discussion): S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; B. De Vietti; W. C. Brown; A. L. Cooper; R. A. Hooker; P. and L. Felt; T. F. Bochert; C. L. Loft; Nic Granby; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; J. R. Prater; W. Limmroth; C. Champney; W. Lohrinburg; W. Edmons; H. B. Smith; F. W. Gumbel; D. Pollock; H. T. Granger; B. L. Shaw; H. K. Abernathy and R. Tomkins; L. Henderson, J. McGuire and H. V. Nathan; L. A. Keller; J. W. Holmes; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; H. and T. Edwards; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; F. C. Nalor; L. B. Hardy; E. R. Muller; R. R. Bobins and H. Winkle; W. Burns and T. R. Fanning; C. Jones and C. Gumbel; T. T. Harper; K. D. Cohn; G. W. Scott; C. Hawkens; L. and F. H. Klar and T. H. Morton; R. and K. Wells; P. Hagerty; J. W. Ruther and M. L. Lawrence; F. L. and N. Savlor; H. L. Heggen and L. Marks; O. L. Harris and S. Myers; S. D. Singer, E. N. Quinn, H. T. Bell and L. Nathan; W. D. Samuels; L. H. Morgan and W. J. Larcher; H. D. Lally; A. M. Moss and R. T. Tracy; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; W. W. Williams; L. D. Long; M. and J. Devoy, H. H. Langtry; R. Haugan; D. Emmerson; J. L. Sharpe, R. Holmes and C. J. McCabe; N. T. Brown and T. N. Powell; J. R. Perkins and R. Mills; G. D. Jones; O. F. Daniels; G. Thompson; R. L. Norton; N. R. Tomlinson; S. E. and C. Gay; J. Ferraro; N. G. Kilgen and P. Redman.

(A) D. Danielson replies, "Using the formula $R = E \div I$ and substituting, we have $R = 110$ $\div$ by $0.5 = 220$ ohms, our answer."

W. C. Brown says the same thing a bit differently, as follows: "By applying Ohm's law we get $R \div E = I$, or $110 \div 0.5 = 220$ ohms."

R. A. Hooker says, "According to Ohm's law, voltage divided by amperes gives resistance, therefore we have: 110 volts divided by 0.5 amperes equals 220 ohms resistance which the lamp must offer to pass 0.5 of an ampere.

(B) F. Bochert answers, "The mirror causes less light loss through reflection than does a plano-convex condenser, and there is no glass condenser to absorb a portion of the heat rays."

J. R. Prater says, "The reflector type arc produces a hotter spot per watt of energy applied than does one using a plano-convex condenser because (1) it collects and sends forward to the spot a much wider angle of light than does the 4.5-inch diameter condenser, (2) there is no condenser to absorb a percentage of the heat rays and reflect a further considerable percentage of both light and heat rays."

H. B. Smith says, "Because the mirror causes less light loss through reflection than does the condenser; also the condenser absorbs a considerable proportion of the heat rays."

(C) Evans and Rau answer thus: "In a vacuum tube, when the filament is heated to incandescence, it emits negatrons which fill the immediate surrounding space. When there is no direct path for these negatrons, some are returning to the filament, while others are leaving it. Others travel as far as the space will permit, and the space surrounding the filament is charged with them, such charge being termed a 'space and charge'."

B. DeVietti says, "The term 'space charge' is applied to the condition existing in a vacuum in which is placed a filament heated to incandescence by an electric current. Under this condition the filament becomes an emitter (thermotic emission) and is surrounded by a multitudinous number of negatrons, forming a negative charge that is known as a 'space charge'."

H. Edwards replies, "In a vacuum tube, the space surrounding the filament is filled with negatrons when the tube is in operation, and it is this cloud of negatrons that is known as a 'space charge'."

William Allenbeck, of Belfast, Ireland, writes interestingly as follows:

"Honored Sir: Through a bit of good luck last year I read a MOTION PICTURE HERALD which a friend of mine had and came across your Bluebook School, which seems to me to be a good bit of all right, if for no other reason than that it caused me to buy a copy of your Bluebook of Projection when I was across the water visiting my father last summer in Liverpool.

"Mr. Richardson, even with the drawback that it does not treat of the equipments over here, it is a grand book. From it I learned in two months much more than I had learned in five years of projection work. So last month I got a copy of your new one and want to compliment you. It is a great big bit of all right. I do not exaggerate when I say I would not take £5 for it if I could not replace it. I wish we had a Richardson over here to stir things up a bit."

I did edit a projection department in the Bioscope of London for a couple of years, along about 1930, but your European trade paper policies are not suited to the conduct of the kind of a department that is really needed, or at least that I regard as necessary. Also, prices are so very much lower over there that they were unable to offer any payment proposal that seemed to me reasonable, so finally the whole thing was dropped.

CRITICISM OF RIVAL QUOTA PLANS BARRED

British Board Will Not Publish "Cases" Before Committee Has Taken All Evidence

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

There is already criticism in the trade, which seems likely to become more intense, of a decision announced by the Board of Trade not to publish the various "cases" submitted by sectional interests to the Departmental Committee on the Films Act until after the Committee has completed the taking of evidence.

Obvious is a strong inference, though not an absolute certainty, that criticism of any of the various nostrums put up to the Committee will be rendered impracticable by this decision. Exhibitors who want a reduction of the quota will be able to read, but not to answer, the arguments of the producers, who want an increase, and vice versa.

Inasmuch as it is probable that the facts, as well as the arguments, of one and all of the groups which have submitted cases will be challenged by other groups, the B. O. T. decision, unless it is modified by a later announcement, will inevitably reduce the respect due to the Departmental Committee as a judicial body. No doubt it is perfectly capable of weighing the evidence as between two contradictory claims, but it is felt that the right of criticism, and of cross-examination, should have been extended to those who have a vital interest in the Committee's ultimate decisions. It is probable that representations to this effect will be made to the Board of Trade, and to the Committee, which during the next week will receive the important "cases" of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association and of the Kinematograph Renters' Society.

Fox-British National Deal

Following the deluge of rumors that accompanied the visit of Joseph M. Schenck and Sidney R. Kent to London, rumors that ranged all the way from a Twentieth Century-Fox plan to buy control of Gaumont-British to a giant merger including G-B, Associated British Pictures and London Films, the air was clarified somewhat this week with the following statement of a "working alliance between British National Films Limited and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation," announced at a gathering of the Press at the Savoy.

The agreement, which runs for a term of years, was signed by Mr. Kent and Mr. Corfield the night before Mr. Kent sailed for America, and provides for the production of a series of pictures for world distribution by Twentieth Century-Fox. The pictures will be produced at the new Pinewood Studios, and the first is to be delivered by the end of 1936.

"British National Films Limited are to receive, under this contract, the fullest cooperation and support of the vast Twentieth Century organization in Hollywood. Among other things, provision has been made for the training of British National personnel in Hollywood and for the loan to them of Twentieth Century players and writers.

"This important development in British picture production is a direct outcome of the recent visit here of Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox. While he was here he expressed his intention of doing all in his power to foster and encourage the making of first-class British pictures for exhibition not only in the best cinemas of this country but also in America and all parts of the world. It may be said to be another step towards that genuine cooperation between Hollywood and London which experts agree is essential if British pictures are to compete in the world markets.

"'I regard this agreement between the two companies as a very important step towards the continued improvement of British production," said John Corfield, a director of British National Films. "It has largely been made possible by Mr. Kent's vision and cannot but enhance the prestige of British pictures throughout the world.

"'The facilities offered for training our personnel in Hollywood and the access British National has to the efforts of the best American writers can only prove of the greatest value. We can now borrow well known players, purchase stories hitherto not available and take advantage of the unique production facilities and organization such as Twentieth Century-Fox possess. In short we shall really work in cooperation for the benefit of British pictures.

"'The first subject to be produced under the agreement will be selected from several important stories owned by British National and/or Twentieth Century-Fox.'"

The Robert T. Kane unit, New World Pictures, will make nine pictures, drawing on Hollywood for stars and, presumably, working with resources drawn at least partly from Twentieth Century-Fox.

B.&D.-Pinewood Studio Deal

British & Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., was to place before an extraordinary meeting of shareholders a plan whereby the company would acquire a half share in Pinewood Studios, Ltd., and undertake management of that company.

The circular letter said that, after considering the alternatives of rebuilding the Elstree studio recently destroyed by fire, or by allying themselves with other studio interests, the directors had decided to recommend an agreement with Pinewood Studios whereby that company's existing capital would be increased from £150,000 to £300,000, of which £150,000 would be taken up by B. & D. The present shareholders of Pinewood would undertake to raise a further £300,000 of loan capital.

To the present directorate of Pinewood Studios, Ltd., J. A. Rank and Charles Boot, would be added the B & D directors, G. Ronald Crammond, C. M. Woolf, Herbert Wilcox, Capt. the Hon. Richard Norton and W. H. Cockburn.

Capt. Norton would become managing director of Pinewood Studios, Ltd., applying part of his remuneration to the reduction of his remuneration from B & D.

British & Dominions would be appointed to manage the Pinewood Studios for ten years, its investment to confer 50 per cent voting rights and 50 per cent of profits.

It was stated that insurance claims in regard to the Elstree fire either have been settled, or a basis of settlement has been agreed, and that a Loss of Income policy will cover the period of enforced inactivity since the fire.

All B & D activities would be transferred to Pinewood Studios, which in their complete form are to consist of five stages, costing in all £600,000, including provision for working capital.

Brooklyn Paramount Deal on Percentage

Details of the sale or leasing by Allied Owners of six theatres to Paramount and Loew's were made public this week with the filing of a confirmation report on the transactions in the United States district court at Brooklyn by the retiring trustees of Allied Owners Corporation in connection with the latter's reorganization.

The Brooklyn Paramount is leased to Paramount Pictures, Inc., for 20 years at a guaranteed minimum annual rental of $100,000, plus a percentage of weekly gross receipts. If the house is operated on a straight film policy, Allied Owners is to receive 12½ per cent of the gross in excess of $20,000. If operated on a stage show policy or on a combination film and stage show policy, Allied Owners is to receive 12½ per cent of the gross up to $20,000; 15 per cent of the next $5,000 and 20 per cent of everything in excess of $25,000.

Office space in the building is not included in the lease; the operation of that phase of the building to remain with Allied Owners. The report discloses that an offer to purchase the theatre for $150,000 cash and a first mortgage of $1,575,000 was received from Si Fabian and was rejected some months ago although it was the best of several purchase offers received.

The Brooklyn Paramount has incurred a total net loss of $1,573,000 since its opening, the report states.

Loew Circuit Changes

Several changes in the managerial and assistant managerial lineup in the Loew theatre circuit were made this week. Harry Crull, manager of the Valencia, Jamaica, L. I., has resigned and George Oshrin, manager of the Gates, Brooklyn, has succeeded him. Bernard Zelenko, assistant manager of the State on Broadway, has been promoted to take charge of the Gates. Irving Ginsberg, assistant manager of the Orpheum in Yorkville, takes over Zelenko's former post as Leo Sidowsky, assistant at the Woodside, Woodside, L. I., has been transferred to the Orpheum with the same title.

Jack Daily to Monarch

Jack Daily, former Detroit theatre manager, has joined the Monarch Pictures staff as booker and city salesman.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended May 30, 1936, from 98 theatres in 17 major cities of the country was $889,000, a decrease of $159,530 from the total for the preceding week ended May 23, 1936, when 103 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $1,048,530.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

CALLING OF DAN MATTHEWS, THE: Richard Arlen, Charlotte Wynters—This program picture offers above average entertainment even though Harold Bell Wright would never recognize his popular story in its present mutilated and modernized screen version.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT: Peter Lorre, Edward Arnold—A morbid but highly absorbing film with adult appeal. Women and children disliked it, but men found it to their taste. It was part of a double program with "Frankie and Johnnie"—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DON'T GAMBLE WITH LOVE: Bruce Cabot, Ann Sothern—A better picture than most reports had led us to expect. Nothing big, but will get by nicely and please generally, although it is of doubtful box-office strength. Played May 12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GRAND EXIT: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—The most entertaining picture Edmund Lowe has appeared in during the past six months. The only complaint with the film could be its somewhat deceptive title. Arson investigation is the subject and it is presented in an enlightening manner.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IN SPITE OF DANGER: Wallace Ford, Marian Marsh—A good action picture that your audience will enjoy. Not a big picture, but will get reaction on your midweek shows. Played April 28-29.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY OF SECRETS: Ruth Chatterton, Otto Kruger—Columbia announces they will present the screen's first lady, Ruth Chatterton, in a rousing play! Yet with this talented dramatic star in their possession, they give her a play as old as Methuselah! This one creaks in every joint. Ruth does her darndest to hold it together, but looks pretty tired of it all. Someday, somewhere, someone will star Miss Chatterton in a real play again and will have a big hit on their hands. Played May 6-7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ROAMING LADY: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Nothing to it; simply a waste of film. Business rotten. When will Columbia wake up? I have not played one good one in this season's output. Played May 15.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MEN OF ACTION: Roy Mason, Frankie Darro, Barbara Worth—Unintentional burlesque. The villain leers, the heroine simpers, and the hero wins out against all odds. The crudities of this picture bar it from important playing dates for it appeals only to those patrons, mostly juvenile, who like their action raw and plentiful.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

First National

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise—A nice program picture with an abundance of humor. Business below average, perhaps due to several local affairs. Played May 7.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Haviland—Good action picture with a good story that will do plenty at the box office. Don't be afraid to give this picture plenty of advertising and then set back and watch them flock in. Played May 2-3.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Erroll Flynn, Olivia De Haviland—I do not know whether I can give an unprejudiced report on this or not. In the first place, I do not like that kind of show, and in the second place, it did not pay expenses. It is no doubt a wonderful show, but is not the type for a small town. Think those who came liked it very much, but it would have been better if I had not run the trailer. Most people do not like the torture scenes and a good many stayed away because they saw the trailer. Errol Flynn gives a wonderful performance. In fact, the entire cast is good. The sea battle is especially good. Too high priced for the small town. Running time, 119 minutes. Played May 15-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—Much ado about nothing, but it seemed to please. Business above average. Played April 30.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—A funny comedy that should please. Small draw for us, though. Played May 13-14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd—A good western that pleased the action fans. Played May 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—The speed and gayety of this English musical makes it the best of the British importations for American consumption. GB has produced better pictures, but none with more popular appeal. It is an out-and-out comedy, embellished with attractive musical numbers which are well staged. Best of all, it has Jessie Matthews. The audience response was very good.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

KING OF THE DAMNED: Conrad Veidt, Helen Vinson—Certainly somebody was trying to make a picture, but how much better it would have been for the exhibitor if his wasted, no-account idea had been scrapped. Attendance at its worst and everybody displeased. Played April 28-29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

Liberty

ONCE TO EVERY BACHELOR: Marian Nixon, Neil Hamilton—For double bills only. Our patrons regarded it as a slow sixty minute time-killer and saved all their praise for its companion feature "Harmony Lane."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—We expected this picture to be of the type that appeals only to the musically literate, yet our patrons' unanimous enthusiasm for its proved us in error. If the producers had only seen fit to cast it with stronger box office personalities, we would have given it better than a mid-week date. Be assured, however, that it is a major company picture from an independent producer.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Business above average. The comedians are properly handled and care has been taken to not have them make the picture top-heavy. Typical Laurel and Hardy comedy with liberal selections of beautiful music and some drama; that spells entertainment. Beat "Magnificent Obsession" two to one and then some. Played May 16-18.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF ELDORADO: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—A fine production from every angle. When it comes to elaborate outdoor pictures, the majors do deliver the goods. Played May 9-11.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—When you hear Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy sing "Indian Love Call," you'll understand why people are raving so about this picture. Many of our patrons came back a second time to see it. Running time, 113 minutes. Played May 7-8.—O. T. Kirby, Palace Theatre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—One of the best pictures of the year, or any year; good story, beautiful scenery, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy at their best, but I struck three rainy nights with impassable roads. Think this one pleased everyone who risked drowning to come but, unfortunately, that was not enough to pay the bills. The Indian dance and Song of the Mounties are the highlights of the picture. Running time, 113 minutes. Played May 8-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—A picture that drew above average and pleased everybody. This Taylor guy is a handsome fellow and MGM should lose no time in signing him up for a long term contract. Janet Gaynor never was better; the whole cast was A1. This is another picture that licked "Magnificent Obsession" two to one, showing my patrons are averse to stark tragedy. Played May 19-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—This is a swell little picture and one that is certain to please. Robert Taylor has taken one more step towards the top and he's going strong. Running time, 106 minutes. Played May 21-22—O. T. Kirby, Palace Theatre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—For historical and an interesting background, MGM has produced a picture that is alive and makes the French Revolution a story that captivates the audience appeal and makes a page in the world's history understood by all. Running time, 115 minutes. Played May 22-23.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper—This one proves an action thriller de luxe! All the thrills of an old time silent picture play. This should satisfy action fans. We wish more people had come in to see for themselves what a great show we had. They don't turn out like they should and consequently miss some real good times. Played May 8-9.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—Another film in the gang cycle. Entertaining, but not outstanding. Excellent audience response. Fair business.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—A strong cast of marquee names and as a result business was above average. Played May 5-6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman, Charles Ruggles—Good, but nothing more than an elaborate program picture. Our patrons liked it although they did not attend in very encouraging numbers.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—An average western distinguished for its good photography and marred by amateurish acting. Satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Ned Sparks, Frances Langford—This picture has enough of everything to please a family patronage or a more sophisticated clientele. Tuneful and humorous.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CORONADO: Johnny Downs, Betty Burgess, Jack Haley—This nameless little cream puff gave us a pleasant surprise. From several sources we had received information to the effect that it was not all that it should be, so precaution led us to take an advance peek. To have such a pathetically weak story it is amazingly good, and it rates a little above average when compared with the usual run of program pictures. The film's strongest asset is its youthful cast and the vigor with which the leads, Johnny Downs and Betty Burgess, enact their dancing and singing assignments. Young Downs is the personification of pep itself. An audience of mostly teen age patrons found it clever entertainment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Tom Keene, Buster Crabbe, Katherine DeMille—One of the most entertaining westerns we have ever seen. Both the director and scenarist joined forces to produce a plausible story of intrigue on a cattle ranch on which a drift fence is being built. Tom Keene made a decided impression and we are confident he would develop a strong following among our patrons if he would appear oftener. He has what so many western stars of today lack, youth.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PREVIEW MURDER MYSTERY: Gail Patrick, Reginald Denny—A very interesting picture and as everything takes place behind the scenes at the studios, it gives one an intimate conception of the mechanics of the moving picture making. It is all very well done. Business good three days last part of week on a double bill.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TOO MANY PARENTS: Frances Farmer, Colin Tapley—Paramount has in this season's group put out several program pictures which have been very good but which have absolutely no drawing power. They seem to have gathered a studio full of players without name value and this will not get patrons in the theatre. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray—This picture means to the movie industry today what sound meant several years ago. The colors are beautiful. We didn't have a single unfavorable comment. Running time, 106 minutes. Played May 14-15.—O. T. Kirby, Palace Theatre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

Republic

FRANKIE AND JOHNNIE: Helen Morgan, Chester Morris—Three years too late. Had this picture preceded "She Done Him Wrong," "Barbary Coast" and "Frisco Kid," it would probably have created a mild sensation, but today it impresses as being an unexciting composite of these rough-and-ready dramas. As program pictures go, this is an entertaining film which cannot bear critical scrutiny. The ingredients for a successful picture were there but the cook, in this instance Director Chester Erskine, mixed them up badly. The sound is extremely poor, especially in the recording of Helen Morgan's songs, and the photography is under average. And a tipoff on the film's age is the appearance of the late Lilian Tashman as Nellie Bly. We must admit, however, the picture is good box office.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda—Lily Pons does not need her lovely voice to be a success in pictures. This diminutive songbird can act and give just the proper timing to a comedy line. Radio would do well to assign her a role of greater mass appeal. Her initial picture venture has the inevitable opera numbers which frighten away many prospective patrons who might otherwise find the film to their liking.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Here is a good small town picture. Lots of entertainment for your Rogers fans. Good box office on this one. Played April 28-29.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

TWO IN THE DARK: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—A dandy picture. Holds interest, steadily building to a swell ending. Alas, however, our house was woefully small. Good as Walter Abel is, the fans don't rally as yet. He and Miss Grahame make a fine team. Your folks will like this if you get them in. Played May 5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WE'RE ONLY HUMAN: Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt—No draw here; was fair entertainment, but it takes more than this to get 'em in.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Supreme

DESERT PHANTOM, THE: Johnny Mack Brown—A fairly entertaining western of the independent variety. Producer A. W. Hackel could greatly improve his productions by spending a little more on sets. The sound and photography are adequate.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RIDER OF THE LAW: Bob Steel, Gertrude Messinger—Fine, even recording. Too bad the small independents have a monopoly of the best sound engineers. They make the majors sound like tin nickles and this goes for 50 per cent of the Fox and MGM recording. Business above average and the western fans cheered. Played May 8.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, "Pat" Paterson—Charlie Chan pictures always go good in our town. This picture is just as good as his former pictures. Played this on bargain nights and the customers were well pleased. Played May 5-6.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—This one pleased okay, even though there's not much footage devoted to the Quintuplets. Interesting story. Played May 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Two-thirds of our patronage on this picture was feminine, and business was big. The film also drew a lot of patrons who seldom come to a show, especially the aged. Everyone was well pleased.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—A pleasant picture, but business below average. Perhaps the hot weather was to blame. However, I find that the cast is the most important factor in drawing power of a picture. On the screen the stars plus the play are the things. This picture is as clean as a hound's tooth, not a preachment but a moral that stands out as conspicuous as a wart on a nose, yet those who yelp for clean, wholesome entertainment were conspicuous by their absence, and I'll bet it is the same the world over. Played May 2-4.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—A domestic comedy drama. Not up to the rave reports the producers circulated. Of doubtful value also on a continued series set-up. The cast does nicely, however. Played May 15-16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin—Not a special, but with a lot more entertainment than some of the specials. Little Jane Withers is running Shirley Temple a close second, and this picture of laughs and tears is mighty good entertainment. No complaints about this one. Running time, 76 minutes. Played April 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero—Very good story of the kidnaping racket that seemed to click. Good acting and lots of thrills. Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—Another of Horton's "lamb turns lion" roles which follows a too familiar pattern to incite a great deal of patron enthusiasm. Fair box office strength.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Edward G. Robinson, Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Edward G. Robinson in an unforgettable performance of San Francisco in the gold rush days. Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea are very good, but Robinson dominates the show, as he always does. An excellent picture. Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 13-14.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oheron, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—Excellent. What I call a perfect cast, together with an interesting story pleased my patrons. Merle Oheron gives a wonderful performance. A little sad but entertaining. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young—This picture would have been a stronger box office attraction had it been titled differently, as our patrons prefer explanatory titles that hint of romance, action and comedy. Since her expert performance in "Annie Oakley," Barbara Stanwyck has recovered much of her lost popularity and the attendance on this Reliance picture was entirely due to her. The film offers a good entertainment of a somewhat routine type.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

DANGEROUS WATERS: Jack Holt, Robert Armstrong—Jack Holt is his usual self and he steps right into this just like old times. It's a pleasure to see Jack hold his own. The picture is very good and will take well with patrons that like real good interesting action fare, well directed and well produced and ranks high with present day releases. Business good three days last half week on a double bill.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

DON'T GET PERSONAL: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A light, frothy comedy that is at least good entertainment. Most audiences will like it. Played May 8-9.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—Everybody disgusted and the box office shriveled up and died. By all means, cancel this. Played May 14.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—The very kind of patronage that this picture is made for, (perverted minds, so called sophisticated ones) walked out on this. Opened good Sunday to average business to below average next three days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—A triumph. This film deserves a showing in every town and hamlet in the land, as the spiritual quality of the story is far more impressive than the most fervent pulpit sermon or the obvious intent of the average religious drama.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Warner

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Jack Oakie, Joan Blondell—Just as others have reported, only fair for such a grand cast as this picture has. There are two excellent dance numbers, however, by Keeler and Draper and quite a large amount of comedy. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 24-25.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Fanchot Tone—An excellent picture in which Bette shows us how she won the 1935 Academy award. Tone is very good in this one. Good for any day of the week. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WALKING DEAD, THE: Karloff, Marguerite Churchill—All of their advertising leads patrons to believe that it is a horror picture. The trailer has nothing in it except horror and even goes so far as to entirely misrepresent one of the best scenes in the picture. Karloff plays the role of a grossly wronged man who was brought back to life through no efforts of his own. At no time after his return, does he show any signs of wishing to harm anyone except to bring to his enemies, the men who wrongfully sent him to the chair, the realization of their misdeeds and their stricken consciences brought about their own deaths.

Karloff was a kindly man and, in his own way, loved his nurse, whom the trailer led us to believe was in terror when he was around. Patrons no doubt have been thoroughly in accord with what happened to his enemies. Please be more careful with your trailers, producers Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 22-23.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

GIV'IM AIR: Joe Cook—Awfully bad. Cook is a silly comedian.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GOLD BRICKS: Star Personality Comedies—This comedy is not too bad. Gets several good laffs across. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

DESERT DEATH: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Fair melodrama lacking in action and relying mostly on dialogue.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PINCH SINGER: Our Gang—This one is a riot. The only objection was they did not let Alfalfa finish singing "On The Road to Californey." A number stayed to see this one the second time. This Gang is plenty good. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

COLLIE, THE: Paramount Varieties—Some fine pictures of collie dogs and their usefulness to man.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

I FEEL LIKE A FEATHER IN THE BREEZE: Screen Songs Series—Okay for anytime. Would help though if they repeated the bouncing ball audience chorus a second time. The old time funny cartoon antics over the titles is better as a finish to these reels than the way now used.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IT'S EASY TO REMEMBER: Screen Songs Series—Another okay screen song cartoon with Richard Himber and orchestra.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MOVIE MELODIES ON PARADE: Headliners Series—This is the way all these band acts should be, making no unnecessary effort to create a story background. Just let one snappy number follow after the other and a peppy time will be had by all. A good pattern is this fine reel.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NOT NOW: Betty Boop Cartoon—A swell cartoon number.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STAR REPORTER, THE: Headliners Series—An excellent dance band single reel highlighting dancing and solo singing.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RKO Radio

HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—The usual topnotch comedy from Kennedy. We notice some report adversely on these comedies, but our folks enjoy them and always welcome them.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MELODY IN MAY: Radio Musical Comedies—Entertaining and good, clean fun. Nice vocals by Miss Etting.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE BILTMORE BOWL, A: Musical—Although old, it will do better and please your folks a lot more than some of the newer stuff. It's okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WED-TIME STORY, A: Lew Fields—Something different in comedies. Original story idea provides good fun. Okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Vitaphone

BROADWAY BALLYHOO: Owen, Hunt and Parco—Excellent. More entertainment in this than in some features. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FLOWERS FOR MADAME: Merrie Melodies—This is one of the most beautiful colored cartoons I ever ran. Advertise this one like a feature. It can't fail to please. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

JACK DENNY AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Excellent. Good music, dancing and singing. The number "Flowers for Madame" is especially good. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Another fine Melody Master. This series is always good. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SLIDE, NELLIE, SLIDE: Big V. Comedy—Why can't we have more 2-reel subjects like this one? Not so silly, with a fair story and some excellent soft ball playing by some easy-to-look-at girls. Running time, 20 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN TOYLAND: Gus Edwards' Stars of the Future—This is excellent. More favorable comments from the audience than on any short recently played. Vitagraph should make more like it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

'WEE' MEN: Singer's Midgets—Great entertainment. The Wee Men give a perfect performance. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Planning Burlesque Party

The Burlesque Artists Association, national organization of burlesque performers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, will hold its first annual dance and entertainment June 14, at the Manhattan Opera House. The proceeds will be used for a benevolent fund.

Three to Fox West Coast

Fox West Coast has taken over the Crest in Provo, and the Egyptian and Ogden in Ogden, Utah, from the Peery interests. Inter-mountain Theatres, Inc., has purchased the Isis in Preston, Idaho.

Angelo to England

Sid Angelo, formerly special publicity representative for Columbia out of Boston, has been made sales representative for the company in England.

Republic Expanding Home Office Space

Republic Pictures is adding to its home office space at 1776 Broadway, New York, and President W. Ray Johnson will take enlarged offices at the new quarters. The United States sales, contract and publicity departments will remain in the RKO building, Rockefeller Center.

Canada Film Society Elections

Lord Tweedsmuir has consented to be honorary president of the National Film Society of Canada, organized last year to promote study, appreciation and use of films as educational and cultural factors, it has been announced. Sydney Smith, president of the University of Manitoba, is president of the society, which now has branches in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and Vancouver.

Mentone to Rockefeller Center

Mentone Productions, Inc., producers of short subjects for release through Universal, has leased office space in the RKO Building, Rockefeller Center. Present quarters in 152 West 42nd St. have been occupied for the past three years.

Film Council Election

Mrs. Wayne F. Shaw, Kansas City, has been appointed chairman of the Better Films Committee of the Kansas Council of Women. Mrs. Adelaide Morse, Emporia; Mrs. W. H. von der Heiden, Newton, and Mrs. W. R. Stubbs, of Kansas City, who is a member of the Kansas Censor Board, were also chosen members of the committee.

WARNERS' IN CHICAGO PLAYING UP GIVEAWAYS

It's Everything from Autos to Thousand Dollar Bills; Miller Testimonial Dinner June 26

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

A chance to win a new automobile, radiobar or a substantial cash award is given to theatre patrons of the Warner Brothers theatres in this territory. In a widespread drive for business the Warner houses have gone into the giveaway business on a large scale. Varied are the plans they use and the ways in which they are handled are many.

For instance, new Fords, Chevrolets, Plymouths and Lafayettes are being given away in the following Warner houses: Capitol, Grove, Paramount, Symphony, Avalon, Frolic, Parthenon and Jeffrey. The theatres also have Bank Nights, Screeno or Broadway handicap drawings, with prizes ranging from one to a thousand dollars.

At the Warner Bank Nights now the top-prize is $1,000. When the award builds to that amount without being drawn, a new award is started and two drawings are held. This gives the house a chance to start a new account and get it up to a big figure in a short time. For the benefit of those who cannot attend the evening of the drawing the all-day Bank Night plan is used. In case the picture runs two days, one of which is a Bank Night, the double-registration plan is used. In this way one can win if not present at the time of the drawing but if he was present when the picture shown on Bank Night was running. This plan, a new one, is being tried out in two houses before being put in all the Warner houses.

The automobile proposition is a cooperative tieup plan. The theatre manager promotes a car at cost from the auto dealer and then splits the cost of the car with a merchant, or group of merchants.

Headed by Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, a group of about 20 theatre owners and managers took a special car to the Allied convention in Cleveland. They included Van Nomikos, Henri Elman, Harry Lubliner, Jack Rubin, Max Gumbiner, Max Sachs, Joseph Burke of Batavia, Ill; Jack Rose, Tippy Harrison, Alex Manta, Verne Langdon, Ludwig Sussman, Ben Lasker, Charles Cooper and Eddie Zorn of Pontiac, Ill.

Irving Mack of Filmack, Inc., and Dick Sachel of the Re-Nu Screen Resurfacing Co., were also in the party.

"The Great Ziegfeld" is playing its eighth and final week at the Erlanger. It was booked for a three weeks' engagement.

Downstate the picture has not found such smooth sailing. Eleven dates have been canceled and the roadshowings halted. The smaller towns did not respond to the $1.10 admission price for the three-hour show despite good notices and good word-of-mouth advertising.

The testimonial dinner for Jack Miller will be held Friday night, June 26th, at the Palmer House, unless present plans are changed. The affair, to be attended by all local theatremen of prominence, will be a stag affair. Full details will be announced by Chairman Aaron Saperstein next week.

Failing to click in a substantial way at the boxoffice, "Dancing Pirate" was taken out of the Palace and "Showboat" rushed in two days in advance of schedule. The stage revue with Ed Sullivan and his "Dawn Patrol" played out the remainder of the week. The star, Charles Collins, was here for stage appearances Friday, Saturday and Sunday but business fell off badly the first of the week. Reviews were favorable.

Ted Husing, Columbia broadcaster, was a visitor here over the weekend. He dropped in to visit several friends after having broadcast the Indianapolis 500-mile Sweepstakes. Husing said he will take a vacation from radio work this summer and attend the Olympic games. It's just like a radio sports announcer to take a vacation by attending 30 days of sports events.

Louis B. Mayer and Howard Strickling stopped over at the Blackstone for a few hours before leaving for Hollywood on the Santa Fe Chief. Mayer has been in New York for a number of weeks getting medical treatment.

The loop was the scene of a running gun battle the other night when police chased a man suspected of tampering with cars down Randolph street and around to the site of the Chicago theatre, where he was captured. Persons leaving the theatre found the affair very exciting.

Gladys Swarthout, en route to Hollywood, stopped over for a few hours here before taking the Chief to the coast. She said she will start work on a picture as soon as she returns. It will be for Paramount.

Charles "Buddy" Rogers, after a successful week's engagement at the Oriental, left for Hollywood to look over two stories RKO has for him. If he finds one that suits him he will make a picture, if not he plans to resume his stage tours and confine his efforts to orchestra work until spring, when he returns to England to make more films there.

"Well, it's spring and Cantor is always glad to get a new suit."

With this remark Eddie Cantor, whose week with Bobby Breen at the Palace grossed within $1,000 of the highest the house ever had, passed off the news that he had been sued in federal court here by a booking agent. The suit was filed in United States District Court by attorneys for Joseph Hyman, theatrical agent. Named with Cantor was Bobby Breen, who, it is alleged, was under contract to Hyman, the contract not expiring until 1937. The agent is asking for 10 per cent commission of all Breen's earnings, which are listed as being near the $30,000 mark.

Colvin Brown, vice-president and general manager of Quigley Publications, spent the Memorial Day weekend in Elgin, Ill., visiting with relatives. He returned to New York Monday.

General B. H. Markham, chairman of the American Petroleum Institute and an oil industry representative, is making a protest to Paramount Sound News against the showing of the release which has scenes showing alcohol-gasoline manufacturing and tests at Atchison, Kansas, and Ames, Iowa. The petroleum industries are opposed to the manner in which the subject is presented, saying it is unfair to them.

For the first time in many months a Paramount picture is playing at the United Artists theatre. B & K rushed "The Princess Comes Across" into the house when "One Rainy Afternoon" did not hold up for its intended run. The Lombard-MacMurray picture has been doing very good business but leaves the Chicago theatre in a spot, as it was previously scheduled for the house, which is experiencing a dearth of product. "Under Two Flags" was held over at the Chicago for a second week.

Opinion along film row is that double features will not return unless the summer slump is bigger than expected. A run of poor pictures and bad business may send B. & K. into the dual policy in the outlying houses. If double features are not started this summer, it is doubtful if they will start at all, as the fall business is usually much better and with new product ready for release the duals will look less attractive.

Murray K. Ross and D. A. Ross, of Ross Federal Service, were Chicago visitors the first of the week. They conferred with Walter Brown of the local office. Claude Saunders, company executive, also was present.

Universal Pictures In Veterans Hospitals

Universal Pictures has been awarded a contract to supply features, short subjects and newsreels for 82 veterans' hospitals and soldiers' homes by the United States Veterans' Administration in Washington.

The contract, closed by Herman Stern of Universal's nontheatrical department, is effective July 1st for one year. This is the sixth consecutive year that this business has been awarded to Universal.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

TRULY, THE MEETING PLACE

Appointed by Interstate Circuit headman Karl Hoblitzelle on a mission to sell the Texas Centennial Exposition in various parts, Round Tabler Louie Charninsky, skipper of the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, stopped off recently in Kansas City to talk up the cause at the annual convention of the American Medical Association and also to renew old acquaintances. Naturally, Louie met up with a lot of long-time pals and he also called upon Ralph Lawler, manager of the Newman Theatre. To hear our correspondent, K. Force, tell it, here is what happened:

> Both men thought they had met before and greeted each other like old friends. Chatting, however, they discovered that the only place they had ever met before was in the Managers' Round Table section of Motion Picture Herald.
> "I feel I know you as well as though I had worked with you," exclaimed Lawler.
> "I was sure we had met half a dozen times," Charninsky asserted.

Thus is recorded yet another of the many instances wherein members of ye Round Table become known intimately to each other through contributions to this department. It is safe to say that those who through the pages avail themselves of the opportunity of meeting up with brother-showmen may use these activities as an "open sesame" to a hospitable welcome from theatremen in most every part of the world.

PLAYING THE SUMMERTIME HOST

The toughest opposition that presents itself in the summer months is not in itself the great outdoors and all its accompanying attractions. What must be recognized as keen competition to be met is the general tone of warmth and lure that permeates so much of resort and vacation advertising and publicity.

Now, the papers and magazines are fairly rife with the most cordial of summer copy beseeching, cajoling, complimenting and flattering readers. Resort folk plead only for the pleasure of playing host. Travel ads fairly crackle with cordiality and the two vacation weeks of the most modest worker in the ranks is bid for with no less solicitude than accompanies the selling of royal suites on the best boats. Even a day's outing is invested with the same glamour.

Granted that physically and otherwise the motion picture theatre today is sufficiently equipped to hold its own, to satisfy most generally the average patron's wants and comforts in the summer months. Good product, efficient cooling plants, appropriate seat coverings, proper lighting and all the other necessary requisites to compete with outdoor attractions and to hold hot weather boxoffice attention are now in order. Few indeed at this writing are the theatremen who are not fairly well set to combat the added opposition brought on by the open season.

All of this, however, is insufficient unless the manager prepares himself to be much more the host than at any other time of the year. Theatre copy perforce cannot vie with vacation advertising as such but the manager by all means can see to it that the house staff functions as amiably, as eagerly as the personnel in any spot famed for its service.

Warm weather brings a desire for ease of mind and relaxation that is capitalized upon most strenuously and ingeniously by the resorts. The same desire has always been the theatre's to satisfy and nothing must be left undone to hold off these summertime boxoffice raids.

More so than at any other time the demands of the season place a premium upon the manager's ability in making the folks at home. The theatreman who does the best job of summertime hosting has much less to fear from the lure of the outdoors.

NOT READY TO DISCARD

Stamp unwise and hardly far-visioned the manager who sees no point in putting over an idea merely because the slant is aged and familiar through repeated use. It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the best of exploitations were born years ago, their histories traced over a long stretch.

Thus of great interest has proven to be the publication in this and previous issues of the "best" exploitations—ideas forwarded by members requested to give details of the most effective boxoffice slants put over during their years in show-business. The results are indeed gratifying and more of the same is intended in following issues.

Smart stunts are never allowed to die—not while there are skilled doctors of showmanship about and in attendance to breathe precious ticket-selling life into exploitations that too many theatremen are ready to discard

Albertson's Teaser Window Attracts on "Times"

Described recently in Manager Jack Albertson's campaign on "Modern Times" at the Indiana, Indiana Harbor, Ind., was a teaser window idea that ran a week ahead and during the first day of the date. Attached photo shows the completed window with the Chaplin accessories.

Seven days ahead, only the black velvet unit was shown, and two days later, the shoes were added. Three days ahead, the Chaplin cane was added, the derby the day after, and day before opening and on first day, the full window illustrated with theatre copy brought the curious who wondered what it was all about.

Interest was kept high as the window usually displayed a lot of merchandise and the absence of material during the week helped build up the stunt.

Kansas City McManus Goes Foreign Legion

Turning his staff into Legionnaires with the addition of Foreign Legion sun hats, for "Under Two Flags" John McManus, of Loew's Midland, Kansas City, had the personnel in parade formation marching to the theatre. On arrival of the "legion," an intricate series of maneuvers was put on during which the French national anthem was played over the theatre p.a. atop marquee. Manoeuvers were gone through each day at regular intervals and McManus reports the stunt highly successful with many passersby stopping to see what it was all about. Sentinels in full Legion costume with rifles were also stationed at each side of the front.

Assistant manager, John A. Hardgrove, was credited with drilling the staff performing in the same manner each day of the date and did an excellent job of it.

Leap Year Contest Proves Ace Builder

Encouraging the local girls to do a bit of leap year proposing for prizes is reported by Manager Oliver F. Menke to have proven one of the greatest business builders in recent years at the Cinderella and Michigan Theatres, St. Louis.

The stunt held at the theatres is arranged by rounding up the various couples and Menke advertises that if girls without boy friends want to try their skill, the necessary male will be furnished by the theatre management. Best proposal of course wins the first prize, in one instance, a diamond wedding ring and all entrants are suitably rewarded.

Tiein with neighborhood merchants furnishes all the prizes and in addition should any of the couples have the marriage knot tied in the same public manner, Menke furnishes a gift of cash and household gifts also obtained from the cooperating stores.

Newspaper publicity, lobby and screen advertising, displays in the stores are employed to keep up interest and says this Round Tabler, "besides being a business builder, the audience is in an uproar during the entire contest."

Dairy Cooperates On "Milky Way"

On "Milky Way," John Johnson, Gillioz Theatre, Springfield, Mo., passed out Lloyd goggles at all grade schools, and for lobby display Johnny used a giant Lloyd cutout placed on oversized milk bottle surrounded with dairy products. Dairy also ran ads offering free admissions to each youngster presenting ten milk bottle shoulders at box office. All dairy trucks were bannered and street parade headed by band and police escort covered city and surrounding towns, winding up in front of the theatre where they played a few tunes.

For "Country Doctor" refrigerator company tied in week ahead covering surrounding towns with heralds. Window display of Quin dolls was planted in department store and lobby display consisted of fence and playground effect with cutouts of the babies.

MURAL DISPLAY. For his lobby display at the Paramount, Springfield, Mass., George Laby created this lifesize cutout of Cooper and Harding with interior illumination, measuring 30 feet.

Soriero Celebrates Marquee Unveiling

To signalize the installation of the new theatre marquee, Round Tabler Tom Soriero, skipper of the United Artists' Theatre, Los Angeles, organized a proper celebration in which the neighborhood merchants of the Ninth Street and Broadway area where the house is located, participated. Occasion was put on during Soriero's Spring Festival drive when light poles and cross wires for two blocks were decorated with bunting, banners and flags.

The event was also tied in to the opening of "Dancing Pirate" for which Tom had as guests the championship American Legion fife and drum corps of San Gabriel, the corps outfitted in Spanish costumes parading to the theatre. Accompanying photo shows the Legionnaires out front with Soriero at extreme left. In appreciation of Soriero's initiative in that sector, the merchants presented him with a wrist watch, the actual presentation made on the stage by Charles Collins, star of the picture. Further tieups were made for the occasion whereby favors were distributed to all patrons.

Rotsky Ties Exhibit To "Captain January"

With the Montreal Industrial Exposition current, George Rotsky, Palace, Montreal, secured cooperation of the management who permitted an attractive exhibit on Shirley Temple in "Captain January." George reports that the reported daily admissions at the Exhibition were about 3,000.

Outstanding tieup was with baking company, Rotsky selling them idea of making a special cake in honor of the starlet's birthday, all trucks were bannered and drivers called on customers plugging sales of the birthday cake.

For "Country Doctor," department store featured window displays of the Quin dolls together with two dolls representing Dr. Dafoe and a nurse. Store featured the dolls in toy department with theatre mention. Large cutout of the babes was planted out front with rave newspaper notices mounted and across cutout in bold red ink was written "The whole world is raving about the Dionne Quintuplets."

Orphans Entertained By Simons for "Fauntleroy"

A theatre party for orphans and crippled children was one of the highlights of Jack Simon's "Fauntleroy" campaign at the Roger Sherman in Hartford, Conn. Chamber of Commerce sponsored the affair, promoting cake and ice cream for the kiddies and assigned its own publicity man to contact papers, engaging bannered busses to convey children to theatre.

Simon engineered an effective commercial tieup with department store which ran a "Bartholomew double" contest, distributing clothing and guest tickets as prizes and using large newspaper ad.

Warren's Covered Wagon

For the reissue of "Wagon Wheels," Nick Warren, Criterion Theatre, Anderson, S. C., used an old fashioned covered wagon, bannered on either side with picture and playdates. Nick reports this bally served as a fine attraction getter.

Joe Salmon Creates Neat "Flags" Program

Another of those effective house programs featuring "Under Two Flags" is received from Joe Salmon, at the Riverside, New York City, the flash in blue and white being die-cut in shape of a book, front page carrying theatre, title and copy, etc.

Inside two pages carry further plugs on the date plus display for next attraction with back page for coming attractions. Joe holds down the cost with press book mats and reports quite a demand for the unique piece of advertising.

"Sock" Campaign Used By Adams for "Love"

With largest department store in Regina conducting annual hosiery bazaar, Jim Adams of the Metropolitan Theatre jumped aboard and promoted full page ad plugging "Love Before Breakfast" and using large cut of Lombard decorated with black eye.

All merchant's ads and window displays carried the "sock" copy and Jim forwards photos of seven of the store's fourteen windows which were devoted to picture. Accompanying shot shows one of the windows. In addition large cutout was planted inside of store entrance and live models displayed hosiery, masked so that only their limbs showed. Peep holes were arranged and at intervals, Adams says the models would peep out at the crowds, each displaying a nicely blackened eye.

Roving Photographer Snaps 'Em on "I Married a Doctor"

Danny Pearlstein of Sid Dannenberg's department, Warner's Theatres, Cleveland, is credited with a novelty street gag for "I Married a Doctor." Two boys covered main street, one carrying a camera and the other a knapsack filled with cards which were handed to passersby as their photos were shot (?).

Card carried copy reading, "We really didn't take your picture, but how about seeing a real picture," etc., etc. Card was printed in red on both sides, so that message was easily read even when cards were discarded.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Letters From New York Aid Local "Dream" Date

Letters mailed from New York to a selected group of important organizations, members of the clergy and school teachers helped Jack Campbell at the Capitol, Brampton, Ontario, to sell "Dream." Window cards were posted in surrounding towns and heralds distributed house to house. One sheets were posted in rural postoffices and window displays planted in town consisting of stills and literature on the picture.

Attractive Lobby Display Sells "Pine" for Harris

On a balcony constructed at entrance of lobby, Marvin Harris, Orpheum Theatre, Springfield, Ill., for "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" planted his display (see photo) measuring 32 feet in length and 20 in height. Display depicted scene from picture, using life sized cutouts of Sidney, Fonda and MacMurray. Scene represented a sundown and was illuminated with appropriate sound effects of various birds. Entire title was also lighted.

For his front, Marvin used trees for atmospheric effect and title letters were spelled out in eight-foot letters. Atop marquee were cutouts of the three leading stars. Bannerettes were worn by entire staff and co-op page planted in Illinois State Journal, page in color and entirely paid for by merchants was highly productive.

Davis' Male Personnel Put Over "Strike Me Pink"

Back a while was reported the activities of the girls on Walt Davis' staff at the Capitol in Regina and now follows a campaign by Walt's male staff on "Strike Me Pink" put on by R. C. Gerber, C. Baird, J. W. Parsons and G. A. Grant. Boys circularized every Greek resident in town, sending government postcards with picture message signed by Parkyarkarkus.

Commercial flyer covered 20 adjacent towns dropping "pink" heralds, special "pink" match scratchers with theatre and picture copy were planted in all tobacco shops. Entire front and lobby was decorated in same color scheme even to changing all lamp shades and spotting pots of pink flowers.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Hasselo's "Times" Bally

Happy Hasselo, Palace Theatre, Alton, Iowa, for "Modern Times" promoted merchants for a co-op tieup, offering tickets to those finding misspelled words in various ads. Happy promoted a tractor which he bannered and had his operator pilot through streets, Hasselo himself following in the rear with a baby carriage and band. As the curious gathered, heralds were distributed.

"Are you prepared for summer?"

Simmons Sells "Obsession"

To sell "Obsession," Tom Simmons, Dunlap Theatre, Clarksville, Ark., circularized all ministers and doctors with personal letters selling the picture. Numerous window displays were secured, book marks distributed in schools, libraries and newsstands and box was used on front page of weekly paper with scene still and brief outline of picture with theatre and playdates.

Salt Lake City Grosses Aided By Tourist Trade

Visitors' Patronage Said to Aid in Overcoming Resort Opposition

by J. WILLIAMS
Salt Lake City Correspondent

Most fortunate are the theatres of the Utah metropolis in so much as they are well patronized at all hours, meet with no difficulties in parking and are further favored in other respects. Also is to be reckoned, according to the information set down here, the influx of tourists in great numbers which brings to the boxoffices a satisfactory share of the outside spending money and helps to stand off what otherwise might be serious opposition. The Salt Lake City article continues the Showman's Travelogue series, now current.

Abraham Lincoln said: "Utah is the Treasure house of the nation," and well he may have so declared, not only in-so-much as the natural resources are concerned, which fact perhaps in his day predominated his mind in this relation, but now it may be said that the resourcefulness of this cosmopolitan community, the generally acclaimed open-mindedness, progressive, wholesome spirit which predominates the atmosphere here, makes for a great all-round feeling of uplift and successfulness for both residents and visitors, according to numerous and continued tributes paid this unique city by many of our foremost figures in the theatrical world and others.

Eddie Golden, well known film executive, not long ago, upon visiting Salt Lake City for several days, during a convention over which he presided, said: "You have a something, a quality here, which we in the east need more of," and his words may have sprung from the fact that there is much of space, fresh mountain air and the huge magnificence of the near-by mountains themselves, to refresh one even while pursuing the most technical of daily routines.

'Tis also such a safe place here; so little of disaster of flood, wind or other ravages. This lends a sense of security, in the upbuilding of a magnificent theatre. It is also claimed officially to be one of the most healthful communities of the world.

Termed Center of Scenic Beauty

The "Center of Scenic America" is Salt Lake City; so publicized the world over because it is the key point to 62 national parks and monuments. One day's ride takes you to the famous Zion, Bryce, Cedar Breaks, Yellowstone and Teton parks. The farthest south glacier in the United States is located within 25 miles of Salt Lake City. The drive over the Divide between Provo and American Fork canyon, about 20 miles out of Salt Lake City, unfolds scenery in and about the aforesaid glacier points, unsurpassed the world over, but as yet little publicized, only because the width of the canyon road has not yet been completely broadened throughout, but this is under way.

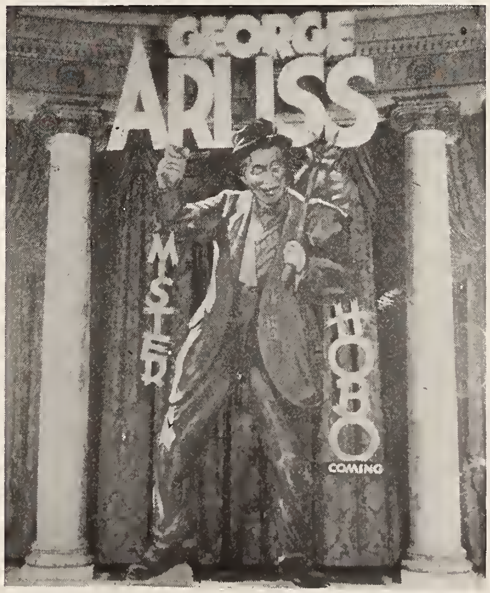
All of this, with the camping facilities in and about the city arranged to appeal to families of every income, tend to make the tourist travel, and subsequently, the theatre patronage a summer delight, and is growing by leaps and bounds now-a-days.

The population of Salt Lake proper is about 175,000 but with the theatre drawing area may be said to be approximately 200,000.

This is a livestock, poultry producing, agricultural area as well as being the foremost mining community in the world. Utah metal mines have produced more than $1,750,000,000 in wealth since 1870, there being 210 known minerals in the state.

Salt Lake City is the world's largest smelting center. (All of the smelters are within 50 miles of the city.) Utah has a greater variety of raw materials for manufacturing than any other state in the union. More than 170 national firms have distributing branches here.

Ninety-nine per cent of the population is white with about one per cent negro, it is recorded here. Amongst the white population, however, is a great cosmopolitan variety. Every nation is well represented in the numerous and varied industries. Mining, agriculture and stock raising draw from all sources, while necessary accompanying trades call for a host of "white collar workers," and it may be said the classes thus specified are about equal in number.



GIANT CUTOUT. To sell George Arliss in "Mr. Hobo," Howard Knevels, Capitol Theatre, Ottawa, Canada, constructed this mammoth cutout display. Title letters at sides can be easily detached.

Some of the world's finest universities are located in Salt Lake and surrounding cities. Utah public school's system ranks among the highest in the Union, which is perhaps an important factor in the recorded claim that this city ranks lowest in illiteracy among all the cities in the United States. Every religious denomination is represented here, it is claimed.

Skilled labor may be termed to be in lesser numbers than the unskilled, but this may be doubtful too, since more and more are the workmen of the various industries named above becoming required to be highly skilled in their manual tasks.

The average skilled worker, such as the carpenter, receives about $1.00 per hour, with the unskilled running around about $4.00 per day.

The average admission charge in Salt Lake City to first run theatres is around 26 cents matinees to 40 cents evenings, with subsequents in the city proper averaging from 10 to 25, according to the size and style of the house.

Theatres Well Patronized

Seldom is a Salt Lake theatre seen when it is not well filled, from the smallest to the largest and most pretentious houses. The parking situation after six o'clock here is unlimited, thus aiding in attendance, and the matinee patrons have various parking lots, both free and otherwise, free lots being supplied by local merchants and department stores. The street car situation here is known to be of the best in the country, Salt Lake pioneering the way in the matter of the newest type buses in this regard. The neighborhood houses, which are patronized in a highly satisfactory manner in and about here, find the limitless parking due to the wide streets, a great help, no doubt.

As to the city being theatre-minded, it may be remembered that one of the first buildings to be erected along with the log cabins, was the historic and much beloved old Salt Lake Theatre, and from one end of the world to another it will be told of to you as an edifice of magnificence, with acoustic powers unsurpassed in any theatre ever built. Now, of course, the sound picture calls for a new form of acoustics and in the razing of the old Salt Lake Theatre, upon whose boards the greatest artists of all time have played, they say the new theatres which have been built are done so in the same spirit. Not merely as a theatre, somehow, but as monuments to the history of the community which in this at least, demanded the best. So it is in the choice and presentation of pictures shown. The first run productions reach this key city pronto, and being found especially elevating and helpful play the subsequent runs as though they were in a city twice the size of Salt Lake, it is reported.

Newspapers, naturally, growing up with this same idealistic attitude, cooperate 100 per cent plus with all theatrical forces. Tieups are redolent. Regular reviews are publicized for each and every presentation, first run or otherwise by the three outstanding papers here. Hollywood columns are also often syndicated.

Competition Handled Satisfactorily

The greater part of competition met with by exhibitors here has been dealt with to the satisfaction of all concerned, it is believed, in that the schools and churches which were rife with moving picture performances—if not free, practically so—are now allowed to show only educational pictures, unless charged for and taxed, etc. The community seems averse to race-tracks, as a whole, the dog-races here being the last form of competition to be dealt with a few seasons ago, and at that time overcome. Resorts make a noticeable cut in patronage; the lake bathing in the salt water (one-third salt), bouncing one around like unto a cork, and now with recent receded waters, having created numerous beach resorts to spring up in the place of the former one and only Saltair resort. These draw the tourist, and the tourist trade here no doubt more than compensates for the lesser losses in resort patronage during the warmer months.

The only stage shows here are offered in conjunction with pictures. The road-shows of legitimate nature are also brought through by picture theatre exhibitors, the most part of late through bookings made by Harry David, vice president and general manager of the Intermountain Theatres, Inc., formerly the Publix houses, and which theatres now cover points in Utah, Idaho and Montana. David's cooperation to make this a white spot in the motion picture world as well as in the legitimate is notably felt.

CAPTAIN JANUARY
NOW PLAYING

ELECTRIC SIGN. Ray Holloway, Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Texas, dressed his front up for "Captain January" by erecting an electric sign spelling star's name which was illuminated at night.

The chain houses seem to predominate at this time. Fanchon and Marco have a couple of splendid houses, with the first grade of entertainment always available. However in subsequent runs this community is a world in itself for competition and also cooperation to present the best available in projection, sound and production as well as offering only the latest and best in ventilation and cleanliness.

The individual managers of the chain houses seem to hold a good deal of responsibility, but not in the matter of selection of advertising measures.

Not much of ballyhoo is gone in for, it seems, but publicity is the word. Every form of exploitation and tieup seems to be in the minds of the wide-awake and competent workers in this field. Merchants have been schooled to be highly exploitation and tieup minded also. A contest has just closed in which names of motion pictures were to be guessed from the spring fashion display of windows, this being made into a civic affair.

Tieup just worked successfully was with a washing machine school presented on a theatre stage in conjunction with a picture presentation, in the morning. Free tickets are also obtainable through the local public finding their names printed in ad sheets used by merchants, after said person has left his name in a box at said merchant's store.

Dam Called Boxoffice Aid

It might be remembered in a resume of the prospects of Salt Lake City that the largest open cut mine in North America is just on its outskirts, and that the largest silver producing mine in the United States is in Utah.

Salt Lake City is the west's greatest aviation center, facilitating speed in the receiving of the world's latest news events and scoops for which theatre managers here are keen.

Utah's newest scenic highway, Zion Mt. Carmel, recently completed, and the completion of the Boulder Dam, just neighboring here, in Nevada, which latter world-famed project not only is drawing hundreds of thousands of interested spectators, but is being made into a playground for the world also, will unquestionably help the very boxoffices of the Salt Lake City theaters.

The theatres themselves may be and often are erected of material obtained close by, as some of the world's finest building stone quarries are in Utah.

"I hope to remain in Salt Lake City as manager of the Orpheum theatre for a good long time," says Manager Ralph McGowan, who has recently returned here from the Pacific coast to reassume these duties.

J. Kerikas, independent operator of the local Broadway, a subsequent run house, says: "We have operated successfully here for the past 18 years, even throughout the depression, with the last couple of years showing a big improvement."

WINDOW DISPLAY. Planted by Fred Perry, Comerford's Capitol Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., was this attractive window of Temple frocks in leading department store. Center of window carried life size cutout of Shirley.

Tobacconist Ties In On "Mr. Deeds"

Manager Ed Miller and publicist Mort Goodman, Warner's Hippodrome, Cleveland, for "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" tied up cigar manufacturer who planted stickers on all tobacconist windows, copy reading "Mr. Deeds goes for blank cigars and you'll go for Mr. Deeds," etc., etc. Bannered bally truck with p.a. and announcer covered town, man using spiel "What would you do with $20,000,000," etc.

Boys tied up automobile agency, who ran a quarter-page ad, "Two things you'll go for, our new car and." Tieup also embraced parade of cars with sound truck. Music from picture was planted with all bands and radio stations and teaser copy was used in lobby two weeks ahead of engagement.

Kelly Promotes Cake For Theatre Anniversary

What is reported to be the largest cake ever made in the State of New Jersey is shown in accompanying photo with George Kelly (left) manager of the Oritani Theatre, Hackensack, admiring the finished product planted in his lobby to commemorate the theatre's tenth anniversary.

George swears the cake weighed close to a ton, contained 662 pounds of sugar and whites of 700 eggs. (Did you count 'em, George?) Pictures were planted in local papers and guests were invited to "cut themselves a slice of cake."

Identification Gag Worked by La Falce

The camera "identify yourself" slant put on usually at one theatre was expanded recently by Frank La Falce, Warner Washington theatres zone publicity chief, who tied in the local Daily News to work the idea at the numerous Warner neighborhood houses in the Capital.

Each day the paper took audience shots at different theatres with accompanying trailer explaining that any of the folks present who spotted their photos in the paper the following day could obtain guest tickets by identifying themselves.

The daily then ran group shots with detailed story requesting that those reproduced present the page on which the photo appeared to the manager of the house concerned for the tickets. Story also included name of theatre which would be spotted next in the publicity.

"Name a Pal" Contest

From the Warner Tivoli Theatre, in Frederick, Md., La Falce also reports a "name a pal" contest for prize of a thoroughbred pedigreed Scotty dog, promoted from nearby kennels in exchange for publicity. With every admission, patrons received contest blank with space for name and address of contestant and name chosen for the puppy.

Lucky namer who got the dog was chosen from all the entries deposited in ballot box the ceremony taking place on stage of theatre. Persons whose name was drawn had to be in the house at the time. Guest tickets were also given the next names drawn.

"Propose Four Stars"

To get a big buildup for a month's coming attractions, La Falce with Manager Charles Brennan, at the Earle, Washington, put on a "propose four stars" slant for women only. Women patrons were given ballots with names of 10 coming pictures and asked to mark in boxes next to each, four attractions they wanted to see at the Earle during the coming month. La Falce also got a lot of mention with this in the local press and thus obtained more than the usual breaks to signalize the strength of coming Earle programs.

Paramount Creates "News Flash" Poster

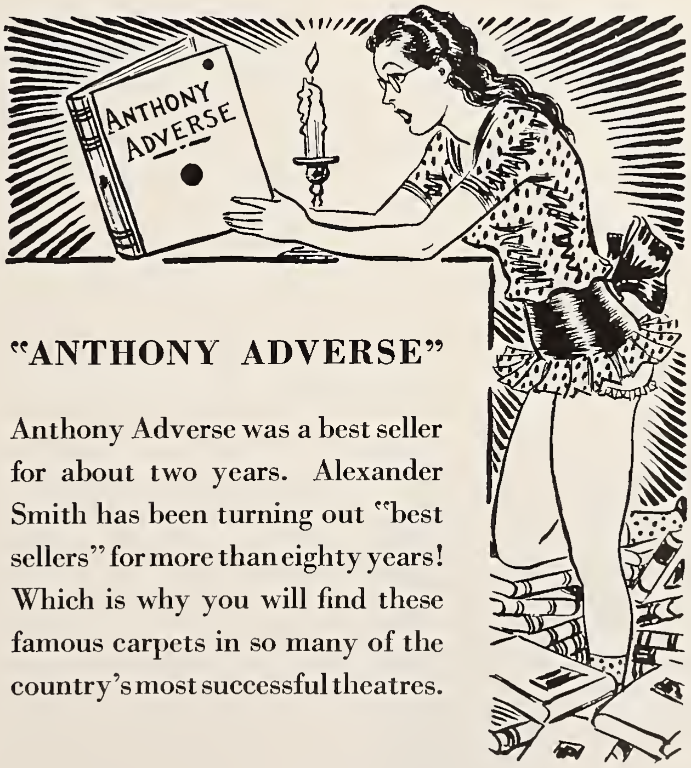
Announced as a special exclusive service to theatres is a free two-color window poster of the "news flash" type made available by Paramount, emphasis laid upon the different news angles in many of the more important coming attractions of that company.

Current are three styles of the poster on "Case Against Mrs. Ames," with space left for theatre imprint and playdate. These and others are stocked at Paramount branches.

New Dances Detailed On "Dancing Pirate"

Effectively colored mailing piece, on "Dancing Pirate" with art work directed by David Strumpf, is recent mailing piece sent out by RKO Radio promotion chief, Leon J. Bamberger, emphasis being directed to the Technicolor job.

Enclosed are diagrams posed by the stars on three new dances suggested by the picture and tied in with National Dance League for nationwide coverage.



"ANTHONY ADVERSE"

Anthony Adverse was a best seller for about two years. Alexander Smith has been turning out "best sellers" for more than eighty years! Which is why you will find these famous carpets in so many of the country's most successful theatres.

ADDITIONAL "BEST" EXPLOITATIONS

In the Round Table pages, issue May 23, was published a special section devoted to details of the best exploitation ideas worked out by various members during their years in showbusiness. Contributions included slants put over long ago as well as those found effective more recently.

On this page and the next are further ideas received from men in the field to fit this classification. They represent the boxoffice cream, so to speak, and as such are set down for the benefit of our readers.

Easter Egg Hunt, A Pollock Top Stunt

The recent tiein with the Rochester Times-Union on an Easter egg hunt promoted by Les Pollock, at Loew's, in that spot, was productive of plenty of top notice, according to the tear sheets forwarded by Pollock. Paper not only ran daily stories and photos, but also contributed a quarter-page display ad showing map of the exact location of the hunt with all directions.

Hunters were divided into two classes, up to eight years of age, and up to 13. Entrants were required to fill in entry blank in paper which included theatre mention, and all children received Hunt tags to be worn during the search. Top prize was five dollars for the "golden egg" and guest tickets to those turning in eggs with theatre rubber-stamp.

Another clicker for Pollock was a time-clock lucky idea worked as follows: Time clock was set inside of display with stills and other art on "These Three" to which picture the stunt was tied. Usher distributed cards for the folks to punch their time and week later the "lucky times" were posted on lobby bulletin board for the usual prizes, guest tickets.

Mayor Pulls Switch To Open "Greater" Season

Standout in Seymour Morris' "Greater Show Season" last year at the Colonia, Norwich, N. Y., was the participation of the Mayor who pulled in switch on a lobby panel (see photo) which was supposed to start the projection machines inaugurating the new season. Florist furnished posies for street distribution, each flower carrying tags with theatre "wear this to——" copy.

Feed Giveaway for Farmers

On "Farmer Takes a Wife," Morris promoted 1,200 pounds of feed to be given, 200 pounds a day for three days to farmer traveling greatest distance to the theatre and 200 pounds to farmer bringing in largest family during the engagement. For tieup with food section at local fair, Seymour gave two tickets each as third prizes in seven divisions of the food exhibits. Fair officials announced this, posted cards, and papers ran it on women's page.

"G-Men" Identify Stunt

Newspaper and stores tied in with Morris on "G-Men" to present dollar bills to first person in each shop identifying "G-Men" who appeared in the stores between two and five on a designated day, and wearing white carnations. Paper ran all the details in advance on the day selected, merchants came in on full co-op page to carry through.

Sell Temple Birthday Cakes For Plug on "Captain January"

Most recent of his most effective slants was tiein made by George Rotsky of the Palace, Montreal, with baking company serving 29,000 local families, wherein bakers made up a special Temple birthday cake as tiein on "January" and had 160 salesmen out week ahead soliciting individual orders for replicas of the cake.

Each of the customers placing order received a picture of the star and bakers purchased thousands of these photos imprinted with theatre copy. Contest among cake salesmen for the greatest number of sales also helped to build the picture and as a further tiein, Rotsky promoted a number of special cakes for display in lobby and mezzanine.

Bicycle Club Plugs Picture

With the new boom in bicycle-riding, pertinent at this time is Rotsky's tieup on Mae West's "Goin' to Town," whereby members of the Montreal Quillicot Bicycle Club paraded through the town with small theatre cards attached to their handle bars. For the same campaign George also called on his leading Ford dealer, who furnished 25 new models which were bannered and paraded them all over the town.

Cooking class tiein on "Evelyn Prentice" was hooked to popular local girl who conducts regular classes and broadcasts, by a series of sessions at prominent department store in honor of Myrna Loy. Recipes explained were announced as favorites of the star, with imprinted recipe books distributed to all attending and also at the theatre.

Companies cooperating paid costs of the book and also a coop page on opening day of the picture.

Full Page Tiein Ads Promoted by Saunders

Among the many excellent exploitations forwarded by Matt Saunders, of the Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, mention may be made of the full page coop ads worked with individual merchants. One in particular stands out on "O'Shaughnessy's Boy" wherein letter from Jackie Cooper in Hollywood plugs a brand of bread with quarter-page cut of Jackie planted at top. Entire page was devoted to the bread tiein and the picture. Same cooperation was obtained on recent Shirley Temple pictures including "Littlest Rebel" and "Curly Top."

Numerous other highlights are reported by Saunders, such as the guard house and prison wall atop four-story building with giant banner on "Public Hero No. 1" on face of building. Guard with gun stood watch and illuminated at night, this proved to be one of the best outdoor stunts used locally judged by publicity received.

Another clicker was a bannered boat used in the summer to cover all local beaches on "Becky Sharp." Effective too was a full-color window display on the same date at leading paint store, every possible color and paint used for this flash.

On "These Three," Saunders had his doorman in formal afternoon clothes escorting two of the house usherettes about town, the trio distributing imprinted packages of lipstick tissue and another dressed-up stunt was man in top-hat outfit broadcasting over lobby mike on "Top Hat."

Old Tire, Tin Can Drives Help Clean Up City

Sponsored by T. E. Muchmore, manager, Settos Theatre, Indianapolis, in conjunction with the Junior Chamber of Commerce was a tin can matinee put on at a special morning show for kids. Worked as part of local clean-up, paint-up drive, thousands of cans were brought to the theatre, six cans being unit of admission.

Another slant on this was Muchmore's hookin with tire dealer to sponsor an old tire show with free admission to each youngster hauling along an old tire. Accompanying photo shows some of the "admissions" with "T. E." out front with the boy scout.

McManus Reports Top Stunts From 1925 to 1929

From John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, comes a group of the ideas which clicked best for him in various spots during the past years. They are set down as follows, each being the best of the year reported.

In 1925, in Toledo, McManus tied in with the Blade, then acquired by the Paul Block interests, offering a free show at nine in the morning for the first 1,500 presenting at the box office a copy of the previous day's issue of the paper. Results were highly gratifying for not only did the stunt help the picture "Mare Nostrum," but certainly set the theatre nicely for future contacts with the new publishers.

Personal appearance of Baby Peggy Montgomery at Loew's Yonge, Toronto, 1926, was spotlighted by three top stunts. On the first day the starlet sold issues of the Evening Telegram at the city's main corner.

Second day was featured by an official visit by the child to the Queen Victoria Sick Children's Hospital, and on the third day Peggy officiated as Mayor of the city. All of these events were of course front-paged with the box office reacting favorably.

An "Our Gang" picture made locally and sponsored by the New York Loew office, was this member's highlight for 1927 at Dayton, Ohio, where the Daily News was tied in to put the stunt across. Result was a 30-day publicity campaign with radio stations, transportation companies, amusement parks and leading stores also cooperating, making the city and territory very "Our Gang" minded, says Johnny.

Speaking before luncheon and athletic clubs in Dayton on the then new talking and sound pictures was featured by McManus in 1928, appearing before the numerous clubs of this nature fostered by the many local factories. Talks made in arrangement with the personnel directors allowed the theatreman to appear before the wage-earners, building up a lot of interest in sound pictures and Loew's Theatre.

In St. Louis, in 1929, McManus was appointed by the Mayor as a member of the Civic Greetings Committee of Six, the theatre selected to entertain the pennant-winning Cardinal baseball club. Parade in honor of the winners on way to the city hall passed the theatre, where John at the house p. a. system announced the different members of the club and during the interludes put in a number of good plugs for his current attraction.

ROTATING CYLINDERS IDEA

Petch Recommends Trousseau Hunt

On a date for "They Just Had to Get Married" at the Metropolitan, Regina, Ernie Petch, now at the Strand, Brandon, Canada, put on a Trousseau Hunt with 43 merchants who supplied 43 gifts and cooperated on five full-page spreads to put it over. Each gift suitable for the purpose was displayed in individual stores with theatre stills and poster for three days ahead. At the theatre numbered coupons were distributed during the run and at the termination merchants all removed their gifts inside the stores and card bearing number corresponding to one on the cards was posted on all gifts. Folks with the cards naturally went from one store to another to find out if they had any luck which brought in a lot of extra business. Newspaper spread the publicity over a week and Ernie did very well for himself and his box office on that date.

Ties Schools to Essay Contest

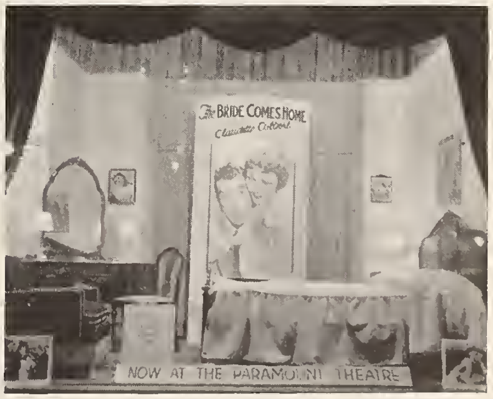
On "Anne of Green Gables" Petch tied in schools to essay contest split in three grades, senior, junior and intermediate, with questions taken from manual supplied for this purpose. Special preview for teachers, principals, started the ball rolling and after the arrangements were concluded, the essay contest was conducted in the same manner as an examination, but given as home work to be completed by a given date.

Prizes were 10 copies of the book and one especially bound for the grand prize, and class with best marks guests of Ernie to see the show. Interest was so great that schools were closed early during the date so that children could parade to the theatre.

"Cleopatra" Hosiery Sale

At the Capitol, in Regina, for his date on "Cleopatra," Petch promoted the big store on having a Cleopatra Hosiery Sale, the store digging up a lot of stockings of another brand and naming them after the picture.

Ahead and during run, store used 14 large windows on the sale with the title in each together with a three-sheet. In addition there were three-sheets on the picture and play dates. One-sheets on the date were planted on all counters of the main floor.



FURNITURE WINDOW. George Laby, Paramount Theatre, Springfield, Mass., secured this window display for "The Bride Comes Home" in largest department store. Note stills and poster display.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

E. H. McBRIDE
managing Loew's State Theatre in Syracuse, N. Y., certainly needs no introduction; one of our good friends and ace members, we can always count on him. Eddie started as treasurer of the Shubert Tech Theatre in Buffalo, from there to manage the Erlanger Theatre in Buffalo, thence to the Great Lakes Theatre, same town, and now we find him in Syracuse from where we hope to hear from him shortly.

is out in Paterson, New Jersey, managing the Plaza Theatre and we're sorry to report Max is another member who thinks his responsibility ends with signing on the dotted line. That's just the beginning, Hecht, we expect that you shall report your activities so that they may be duly publicized in our pages. How about it?

manages the Strand Theatre in Athens, Tenn., and reports to us that he started in showbusiness in 1925 for Manning and Wink. The Strand is the first house Herb has managed, having recently been promoted from assistant to his present assignment.

in Racine, Wis., is the assistant manager of the Rialto Theatre and if he's been following our pages as we imagine he has, he knows that Racine is from time to time well represented in this section. Well, it's up to you to keep your fair city in print, so we'll look forward to reports from you real soon.

manages the Grand Theatre in Sudbury, Ontario, Canada, where we have other good friends. Dick says he has been a consistent reader of the Herald and our columns and finds them of valuable assistance in the operation of a theatre. Well, Dick, them's fine sentiments, how about a few contributions from you for the other boys to take advantage of?

is another well-known contributor who was sure he had joined the Club ages ago and whom we are but just welcoming as a bona fide member. Fred manages the Lincoln Theatre in Junction City, Kansas, and has been a Quigley Award winner. Souttar said he has had the usual assortment of jobs en route to manager and then into Kansas City as district manager for Shanberg, later with Fox, a purchasing agent, booker and publicity man in turn and now back as manager. Souttar apparently knows what it's all about, so we're always happy to publicize his activities.

manages the York Theatre in Los Angeles, Cal., and with our host of friends in your fair city, if we don't hear from you shortly, we'll get after a couple of them to see what's wrong. How about dropping us a line on that last campaign you put on at the York, Morris?

JACK O'HALLORAN
manages the Waltham Theatre up in Waltham, Mass., and since we haven't heard from Jack since he joined, we're hopeful that this gentle reminder will get hm busy so far as reporting his recent activities is concerned. Can we count on you, Jack?

advertising manager of the Strand and Senate Theatres in Springfield, Ill., is no stranger to these pages; however, he must be formally welcomed. Jack started at the tender age of fifteen as usher at the old Princess Theatre there, and then went to work for Kerasotes Brothers where he's been ever since. After graduation, Jones became doorman, chief of service, assistant and treasurer when they ran stock.

manages the Rialto in Cuero, Texas, for Hall Industries and says he thinks he has put off joining long enough, which is a good sign that he'll be an excellent member. The boys from the Hall outfit are no strangers to us, having had a guest section back some issues in which they all were represented.

is out in Greeley, Colo., managing the Park Theatre. Bob says he started as an usher at the Sterling Theatre under George Stewart in 1924 and was later promoted to assistant at the Rex, now the Chief. From there, Bob went to the Paramount in Colorado Springs under Publix. Later came back to Greeley as assistant at the Sterling, last year being promoted to manager of the house.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

In "The Story of Louis Pasteur", Warner Bros. have been credited with opening up a wholly new and finer field of profitable motion picture production. ¶ On July 4th we shall release our second venture in that field. ¶ Since its central character is a woman, and even more widely known and loved than Pasteur, we believe that it will have a still greater appeal than its predecessor. ¶ The same enthusiasm and cooperation which you so splendidly displayed in the promotion of "Pasteur", will insure your success with-

LOTUS MARKET

THE red press and, by coincidence, one may suppose, also the New York Times frequently and the New York Herald-Tribune occasionally, are insisting that the motion picture ought to enlist in "causes." Typical is the comment last Sunday of Mr. Frank S. Nugent, who has come newly to the post of the Times picture editorship, who remarks:

> Will Hays himself could not describe the current cinema year as having been rich in motion pictures of social, or even of topical significance. . . . The screen has displayed an uncanny deftness at sidestepping even the less important facts of life. It has gone on quite contentedly, breathing the lotus-burdened air of Never-Never-Land, living in a gold and ivory world of its own devising and refusing, with rare exceptions, to be budged from its romantic contemplation of Things That Never Were by any concern, moral or otherwise, about Things That Are.

Mr. Nugent apparently is one of those young men who wants to do something, or have something done, about everything. He is also one of those naive persons who think that the motion picture ought to do it.

Some day, a very long time hence, it will become known that the motion picture is a medium, not an institution. The motion picture is currently being used chiefly by the amusement business. Anyone else who wants to can also use it.

Meanwhile the indications are that the demand for admissions to the lotus-laden air of Never-Never-Land, in a gold and ivory world of Hollywood devising, may be taken to indicate that the millions, those sacred masses, the beloved proletariat, are fond of escape from a world of Things That Are.

The motion picture is a business. Remarkable among industries using the media of expression, the motion picture specializes in tending to its own business.

MR. NATHAN BURKAN

THE demise of Mr. Nathan Burkan takes from us one of the most broadly competent and effectively successful figures of the industry's formative years. As an attorney inevitably and by profession ever concerned with controversies and special causes Mr. Burkan was remarkable in his freedom from embitterments and bias, remarkable in his ability to engage in professional conflicts without aftermaths of rancor. He rendered large services to the industry of the motion picture and its people, and he conferred distinction upon the bar.

EXHIBITOR CRITICS

OUR "What the Picture Did For Me" pages are widely read and quoted by all manner of followers of the screen art, here and abroad. Now comes pleasant and professional comment from Mr. Welford Beaton, writing in his Hollywood Spectator, and saying:

> Martin Quigley's Motion Picture Herald has the largest staff of screen critics of any publication in the world. There are hundreds of them, perhaps, in the course of a year, even thousands. They are real critics, fellows who know because they get their opinions from the greatest of all authorities in estimating the value of art objects made articles of commerce—the box-office. The Herald regularly contains a department, What the Picture Did For Me, contributed to by exhibitors from every state. It is an illuminating department, one which makes fascinating reading. I read it to keep myself humble, to keep from attaching too much importance to my own opinions.
> "When I encounter a criticism which echoes my previously expressed estimate of a picture's merits, I have a feeling of complacent uplift mixed with envy. Generally I find that some small-town exhibitor has put into a short paragraph what it took me to express in a review consisting of several long ones. That is what makes me envious. . . . They constitute a department which in itself makes the weekly of value to all of those engaged in the making of screen entertainment.

Confirming Mr. Beaton's opinion it may be remarked that a number of Hollywood players now read and clip and file comment from "What the Picture Did for Me" department regularly.

MEMBERS OF THIS CLUB

SPEAKING to the Illinois Manufacturers Association the other day Mr. Bruce Barton described our 130,000,000 population as the "members of a club," and as "the owners of America," making various implications concerning the public relations of business. It is our own observation that what with various reliefs, plow-under checks, bonuses, patronages, and such, a lot of the members of this club think they can liquidate their ownership and still have it.

WRITING in the Philadelphia Record, Miss Elsie Finn says: "the current issue of the Screen Guild Magazine . . . proves how much the literary world is sacrificing to the movies. . . ." The line creates a soul-rending picture of those literary artists working practically in a state of peonage in the walled compounds of Hollywood.

This Week

Concessions

Exhibitors were promised this week, by the MPTOA, that the most likely trade practice concessions to be granted by distributors for 1936-37, in the MPTOA's present campaign for establishing harmonious relations, are fivefold, as follows: a 10 to 20 per cent cancellation privilege, conciliation boards, a short form of standard exhibition contract, elimination of score charges and a discontinuance by most companies of the forcing of an excess number of short subjects with features.

Probably left to adjustment by the local boards will be unfair cut-rate competition, unreasonable clearance, unfair overbuying of product, non-theatrical competition and designated play dates.

The present and expected future status of the negotiations is described on page 15.

Funds for "War"

A "war chest" of $250,000 to finance a legal and legislative fight against the well-known producer-distributor-circuit "aggressions" was voted last week by the national Allied States convention, assembled in Cleveland, where a set of resolutions reiterated the organization's policies against such aggressions, and against Will H. Hays, "monopolies," block booking, blind buying, propaganda in pictures, stars' radio appearances, percentage pictures, preferred playing time, the forcing of trailers with features, previews, score charges, et al.

A report on the convention begins on pages 13 and 14, and a list of the 344 who registered, starts on page 83.

Operators' Meet

Amicable adjustment of internal union disputes without resort to litigation is the aim of revisions in the constitution and bylaws of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of United States and Canada, in convention in Kansas City this week.

For what was happening at the sessions, see page 94.

Air Pictures

Television as an item or instrument of theatre entertainment recedes further into the misty realm of H. G. Wells' things-to-come with disclosure that the maximum screen size now of practicable usefulness is six inches, capable of being stepped up to twelve inches by use of mirrors. As to home use, October is the earliest date contemplated by optimistic oracles of BBC.

See story on page 105.

Exempted

Following news of the suspension of the rigorous French censorship decree of May 7, newsreels have been exempted entirely, but are subject to certain conditions. Also exempt are educational, industrial and commercial subjects and animated cartoons.

What the new regulations provide, and the complete text of the amending decree, are given on page 100.

Nathan Burkan

Counsellor and advisor to motion picture companies and many of the industry's figures Nathan Burkan died last Saturday, in his 57th year.

Some of his achievements are related on page 66.

Still More Product

The announcement by Paramount of a program of between 70 to 80 features; the conclusion by Warners and Republic of their sales conventions, and Radio's determination to hold its annual meeting in New York from June 15th to 17th, were the principal developments this week in the continued activities of the ten large corporations to build a product supply for exhibitors in 1936-37.

A resume of latest activities of all of the large companies starts on page 79.

Paramount Proxies

Reports were about this week that a battle for proxies looms on the horizon of Paramount Pictures, Inc., as the annual stockholders' meeting, scheduled for next Tuesday, draws nearer. At the same time it was reported that the recommendations of Joseph A. Kennedy will be presented to the board of directors at their meeting on Friday. The reason behind this, it is said, is that several new Paramount directors will be elected and Mr. Kennedy desires to present his report to the new board.

For details of the Paramount situation, see page 102.

Awards

Awards, in the nature of placques and certificates of merit, were made this week by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, in New York, to Leo Quanchi and Ralph Lund, of RKO, and to Warner Brothers, for the best advertisement of 1935-36 addressed to the public through newspapers; to Moe Kallis, Paramount, and to Warners, RKO and MGM, for the best advertisement addressed to the film trade; to Josef Tisman, Warners, and to MGM and Paramount, for the best poster copy, and to MGM and Warners for the best press sheet.

ERPI Control

Executives of major film companies met on Monday to discuss purchase of a majority interest in Electrical Research Products, Inc., controlled by American Telephone and Telegraph Corporation through Western Electric, with a view to obtaining direct control of recording equipment used in production. No decision was arrived at. Whitford Drake, vice-president of Erpi, told Motion Picture Daily a similar plan talked up a year ago was without result and current discussion was of equally indefinite character in his opinion.

Each on Its Own

As evidence that the newsreels have abandoned hope of combining forces in coverage, each reel is working on its own at the Republican national convention in Cleveland this week, and will do so at the Democratic session starting June 23 in Philadelphia. Primed for a summer of sizzling politics, the newsreels have completed elaborate arrangements to "get the news."

How the newsreels are handling the situation is told in detail in the story starting on page 55.

Sound and Studio

RCA Photophone's first inroads into major production recording business in Hollywood since the coming of audible films was effected this week through agreements concluded with Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia Pictures. This will supplement Erpi facilities, and is expected to bring down the cost of recording.

Details of the agreements as disclosed by RCA are on page 98.

Shakespeare

British showmen are telling each other that Elizabeth Bergner's "As You Like It," bringing to the screen a performance she has given six hundred times during the past nineteen years in various old and new world metropoli, will test fairly and soundly the box office value of Shakespeare. Reasons differ.

Points of view expressed in London are set down by Bruce Allan in connection with the pictorial preview of the picture on pages 16-17.

On with the Fight

A loser in other court battles, Czechoslovakia's "Ecstasy" won a temporary injunction in the appellate division of the New York supreme court against Metropolis Pictures Corporation, in a suit involving the use of the title "Ecstasy of Young Love." The plaintiff was Eureka Productions, Inc.

For the implications, see page 106.

Treasure

Salvage of the treasure which went down with the Lusitania when it was sunk by a German submarine off the Irish Coast in 1915 will be filmed this summer, it is planned, as part of a feature picture.

The special preparations required by conditions at a sea depth of 312 feet are described on page 70.

Standards

With Denmark following the lead of the United States and Great Britain in adopting the 16mm. sound film standards of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, definite progress is being made toward attainment of a world standard, the Society said this week.

The progress to date is detailed on page 115.

Armed with Films

Seeking greater amity between the film industries in the Soviet and the United States, Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino Corporation, sailed for Moscow with six feature pictures for possible distribution in Russia. Meanwhile, distribution circles warned of a risk in sending product to Russia because of the absence of copyright laws.

See page 63.

Do-Re-Mi

The American film industry can recapture the foreign market through production of films in the international language of music, and no better place exists for producing musical films than once-gay Vienna, Dr. Eugen Lanske, head of the film division of the Austrian department of commerce, said before leaving for home. He added that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox have promised to start production in Vienna next season.

Dr. Lanske is interviewed on page 96.

Tweedledum

Speaking of tweedledum and tweedledee, the Georgia court of appeals has found F. J. Wood of the Wood's theatre at Cordele guilty of violating the state "blue laws" though the state supreme court two years ago by a decision legalized Sunday showings.

How that apparent contradiction was established is explained on page 62.

Production

Production dawdled along with the anticipated early June spurt failing to materialize during a Hollywood week in which seven pictures were completed while six went into work, outstanding among them the second Pickford-Lasky attraction, "The Gay Desperado," described as a romance with music. Meanwhile table talk toyed with the Cagney case and things like that.

Gus McCarthy's words'-eye-view of the week is published on page 37.

Repercussions

There's considerable to-do in Australia and New Zealand over the reported merger negotiations between Hoyts Theatres and Amalgamated Theatres, with repercussions extending to Twentieth Century-Fox and to the Chase Bank. New Zealand's prime minister, the Honorable J. M. Savage, has come out with a vigorous denunciation of "combinations" and the declaration that he doesn't want New Zealand "run from either New York or Australia."

Details appear on page 110.

Breakers

American film interests in Poland face difficult days if twin measures announced by the government are put into effect without modification. One imposes a new tax levy on negative for the purpose of financing production of Polish pictures. The other clamps down new and widely inclusive censorship restrictions barring types of product that would include many or most of the year's outstanding attractions.

Joseph Fryd's detailed description of the bleak prospect is published on page 108.

Extension

With word from Paris that the French Government has refused to extend the period within which American film companies must file declarations under the double taxation convention, comes the announcement in New York that the declarations will be made by the final date, June 30th.

See page 100.

Test Production

Paramount is starting arrangements for production of a picture in Spain as an experiment. Spanish artists will be employed. While these plans were being launched in Barcelona, a citywide strike at hotels, restaurants and the like was proving a delightful development to the theatres where attendance was filling the seats.

Details on page 104.

Chinese Protest

If American film producers do not present a more authentic conception of Chinese life and manners in their films about that country, they will lose the Chinese market entirely. That was the statement made in Seattle this week by Chow Souye, official film censor for the province of Kwang-Tong.

National Convention Votes to Seek Ouster of Distributors from Exhibition Through U. S. and State Legislative Action

The perennial complaints of independent exhibition minorities against so-called "aggressions" of the large interests had a 25th anniversary last week, in the city of their birth, in Cleveland. The tactics for accomplishing the purpose, through legislation and the courts, remain virtually the same; the form of expressing the complaints, through resolutions, have changed but little, and their basic texture continues as before: (1) The ousting of producer-distributors from exhibition; (2) An end to affiliated circuits' "aggressions," and, (3) "Down with the flags of the big corporations, and up with the banners of the 'little fellows.'"

On August 1, 1911, and practically every year thereafter, these demands were made by the independents, then organized as the Moving Picture Exhibitors Association, and meeting at old Weber's Hall, in Cleveland.

They were repeated, equally vitriolically, last week at the annual national convention of the independent Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, meeting at the Hotel Hollenden.

Flanked on the one side by delegates to the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and on the other by the Republicans bent on electing a Presidential candidate, the delegates to Allied's gathering took action in the usual form of resolutions, as follows:

1. Resolved, that Allied States "embark on a campaign of vigorous action, employing all legal means at its disposal, to retard and prevent the further expansion of the affiliated circuits, and to enjoin and restrain the unfair and oppressive methods by which the affiliated circuits are enlarging and extending their monopoly."

2. Resolved, that General Counsel Abram Myers and President Nathan Yamins cooperate with and assist independent exhibitors in instituting and prosecuting such numbers of cases as may be necessary to obtain a judicial determination of the legal rights of independents "in their struggle to remain in business."

3. That Allied introduce legislation into Congress and the 48 states having for its purpose the complete divestment of theatres by producer-distributors.

4. That a committee, composed of "Fighting Al" Steffes, Sidney Samuelson, Abram Myers and Nathan Yamins, "secure pledges of a minimum of $100,000," and eventually collect $250,000 as a "war chest" with which to purchase "outstanding legal talent" to effect distributors' circuit divestment.

5. That "the stockholders, trustees and creditors" of MPPDA member corporations "are hereby petitioned in their own interest to cause Will H. Hays to be removed from the presidency of the MPPDA, in order that the motion picture industry may recapture the confidence of the public and move forward to its great harmonious destiny."

6. That Allied petition the United States Attorney General to take action in federal courts against distributor-circuit "monopolies," such as that conducted by the Government in the St. Louis-Fanchon and Marco matter.

7. That Allied States pursue "with utmost vigor its efforts to secure relief from

Eleven Committees Guided Strategy Of Allied's 1936 Convention

The business, the problems and the strategy prevailing last week at Allied's annual convention, in Cleveland, were in the hands of 11 committees; not necessarily in the order of their importance, but in the order of their appointment they were as follows:

CHAIN EXPANSION: Chairman, W. A. Steffes, Minnesota; A. E. Lichtman, Washington; A. C. Gutenberg, Wis.; Harry Perlewitz, Wis.; Sidney E. Samuelson, N. J.; Bennet Amdur, Pa.; H. A. Cole, Tex.; Van Nomikas, Ill.; D. L. Schuman, O.; James Ritter, Mich.; Sam Neall, Ind.; Ernest Horstmann, Mass., and Marcus Mattie.

TAXATION: Chairman, Edward Ansin, Mass.; P. J. Wood, O.; William L. Brown, Pa.; R. Z. Glass, Tex.; Abe Schwartz, O.; Mrs. W. Krusienski, Wis.; Glenn A. Cross, Mich.; I. R. Holycross, Ind.; Max Stearn, O.

COPYRIGHT: MUSIC TAX—SCREEN PROPAGANDA: Chairman, Martin G. Smith, O.; R. A. Tesch, Wis.; Harry W. Walker, Pa.; Frank Panopolos, Pa.; Walter Stoeppleman, Tex.; Tippy Harrison, Ill.; Leonard Sowar, Ind.; Adolph Bendslev, Mass.; Charles Weigel, O.; Phil Smith.

CONTRACT PROVISIONS—PREFERRED PLAYING TIME—CANCELLATIONS: Chairman, William D. Davis, Pa.; Samuel M. Boyd, Washington, D. C.; Meyer Fine, O.; Nathan Yamins, Mass.; Sidney Volk, Minn.; Jack Rose, Ill.; William London, Mich.; J. Real Neth, O.; Harry Markum, Ind.

THEATRE FINANCING AND REMODELING: Chairman, Lee Newberry, N. J.; Frank Fisher, Wis.; Bennie Berger, Minn.; Morris Roth, Pa.; W. R. Wheat, Jr., Pa.; Sam Stecker, O.; Harry Lubliner, Ill.; Frank Westman, Mich.; Ray Harrell, Ind.; Max Levenson, Mass.; John Huebner, O.; Nathan Myers, N. J.

AIR CONDITIONING, Etc.: Chairman, C. H. Olive, Washington, D. C.; Wm. J. Walker, Pa.; P. E. Essick, O.; F. A. Schneider, Mich.; Max Sacks, Ill.; Harry Abrams, O.; Chick Calloway, Ind.

SOUND SERVICE: Chairman, Ray Branch, Mich.; B. K. Fischer, Wis.; Wm. Finkel, Pa.; Howard Reif, O.; Walter Easley, Ind.; Wm. Chesbrough, O.

ZONING AND PROTECTION—ADMISSION PRICES: Chairman, C. H. Olive, Washington, D. C.; George Fischer, Wis.; E. T. Beedle, Pa.; Ernest Schwartz, O.; S. D. Kane, Minn.; Verne Langdon, Ill.; William A. Cassidy, Mich.; Alex Manta, Ind.; Harold Bernstein, O.; Sidney Samuelson, N. J.; Henry Greenberger, O.

GOOD WILL AND LEGION OF DECENCY: Chairman, Sidney E. Samuelson, N. J.; J. B. Clinton, Minn.; Dr. C. E. Herman, Pa.; Charles R. Blatt, Pa.; B. Legg, Tex.; Paul Gusdanovic, O.; Fred DeLodder, Mich.; Edward Zorn, Ill.; R. R. Bair, Ind.; Mrs. John Weinig, O.

GENERAL ORGANIZATION—FINANCING: Chairman, Herman A. Blum, Md.; Fred J. Herrington, Pa.; Aaron Saperstein, Ill.; Arthur K. Howard, Mass.; E. L. Peaslee, Minn.; F. W. Zimmerman, Tex.; M. B. Horwitz, O.; Allen Johnson, Mich.; Maurice Rubin, Ind.; R. E. Myers, O.

compulsory block booking and blind selling," through Congressional legislation.

8. That every effort be made to curb any attempt to use the screen for the purpose of spreading political propaganda of any nature or design, actually or inferentially.

9. That Allied condemns the practice of the producers of permitting their stars to appear on nationwide radio programs because such appearances are in competition with regular theatre performances.

10. That Allied condemns (a) percentage pictures and preferred playing time, and that members refuse to purchase pictures under such conditions, (b) the forcing of trailers with features; and, (c) the practice of previewing pictures in all communities to other than exhibitors.

Numerically, Allied's leaders claimed the Cleveland convention was the biggest exhibitor convention since the Cleveland MPTOA meeting in 1920. They estimated a total registration of some 600, but the official and final printed registration list showed 344 names, excluing relatives of the delegates, and among the total were several dozens of trade press reporters, motion picture, accessory, equipment and premium salesmen and their representatives. Regardless, the 344 registrants hailed from 16 states, as shown in the adjoining table.

One important piece of convention business was the decision of the board to seek more members.

"The call for a $250,000 'war chest,'" Mr. Steffes boomed, "must be met quickly and by voluntary contributions. Unless we think in terms of that kind of money and are prepared to introduce favorable legislation in every state in the Union, within a year, we might as well rescind the resolution calling for the ousting of the producers from exhibition."

It was Mr. Steffes who introduced the resolution—another "hardy perennial"—calling for Mr. Hays' retirement. And again Mr. Steffes threatened to resign from Allied unless the organization collected from its membership the money they claim is required to pursue the issues of distributor domination.

"Unless we can get 100 men to contribute a minimum of $1,000 each to defray the initial expenses of securing outstanding counsel to assist our general counsel, Abram F. Myers, we can't put this over," Mr. Steffes declared. "A quarter of a million dollars is a lot of money, but this is a big job.

"If we succeed it will be the cheapest investment we ever made. If we don't succeed, I'm ready to quit exhibitor organizations. This is the last stand."

Then the Pledging Starts

Bennie Berger, of Minneapols, was the first to respond with a pledge of $5,000. Mr. Steffes followed with a personal contribution of $1,000 and a $10,000 pledge for Minnesota. Martin G. Smith, Toledo, estimated that Ohio would put in $15,000. Texas, with Col. Harry A. Cole as spokesman, pledged $5,000, with five men each contributing $1,000. New England pledged a minimum of $5,000. The Michigan contribution will run at least $10,000, in the opinion of James C. Ritter, Detroit, who made a personal pledge of $1,000 on condition that at least $100,000 is raised. Other sections that made pledges without stating amounts were western Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C. and Wisconsin.

Aim to "Drive Out Producers"

"This money is to be used for one specific purpose only," Mr. Steffes said. "It is not to be used for the operation of Allied States Association. This is not an assessment. It is a call for voluntary contributions to be used for the sole purpose of driving the producers out of the exhibition field."

"If you don't go ahead with the plan you'll see the greatest expansion you've ever seen," was Mr. Steffes' final shot.

Sidney Samuelson, another former Allied president and now regional vice-president from New Jersey, took the floor only once during the convention and that was to stress the necessity of exhibitor cooperation to put this plan over.

"We are definitely embarked on a program," he told the delegates, "to find out once and for all whether we have the legal right to squawk about the things we are fighting for or whether they (the producers) have the legal right to do to us what they are doing."

James C. Ritter of Detroit was named treasurer in charge of the $250,000 "war chest" sought.

Smith Opens Convention

Martin G. Smith, Toledo, regional Allied vice-president for Ohio, opened the convention on Wednesday, introducing Harold Burton, mayor of Cleveland.

M. B. Horwitz, Cleveland, chairman of the committee on arrangements thanked the Mayor and dedicated the theatres of the country to "public service."

Henderson M. Richey, Detroit, secretary of national Allied and convention chairman, reported on a program and committee personnel, and announced that "this is an open convention, with free speech as its keynote, and any pertinent subject would be welcomed from the floor."

Present at the open sessions were Dave Palfreyman, representative of the MPPDA, and all the local distributor branch managers.

Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass., Allied president, made his only speech during the opening session, in which he compared the industry today with the industry as of 1920, with all conclusions in favor of "the good old days".

Mr. Yamins pointed out that today through the major distributors, there are available to independent exhibitors a maximum of 400 pictures as compared to 800 pictures in 1920; that there are eight companies producing this product today as against 15 companies in 1920; that in 1920, with so many pictures made and so many producers making them, it was a "Buyers Market," while today the situation is reserved and it is a "Seller's Market"; that in 1920, because of the quantity of features made, exhibitors were not required to buy short subjects or news reels or both, as in 1936. In 1920 there was no problem of percentage pictures, nor of preferred playing time when "distributors take the best playing time and sell percentage for that time."

"Today," Mr. Yamins said, "the exhibitor makes the distributor his partner on the best half of the week and takes his losses alone on the bad half of the week."

"There was no reallocation of box office hits in 1920," continued Mr. Yamins. "Today there are too many percentage pictures which remain on percentage even when they do not come up to box office standards."

"In 1920 the industry was not concerned with score charges," he said. "They came in as a racket and remain as a racket. They are legalized tribute to the distributor in the nature of a fee to be permitted to remain in business."

Independent Circuits Criticized

"Extensive independent chain expansion" also came in for a share of criticism at the hands of Mr. Yamins. This creates and multiplies the danger to the independent theatre owner, in the opinion of Mr. Yamins, and should be curbed just as effectively as affiliated chain expansion.

Speaking of the alleged practice of producers to "jack up" the price of pictures in situations where they have no theatres on threat of acquiring competitive theatres Mr. Yamins said: "I have no patience with chiseling exhibitors, but I do say that the exhibitor in business for himself has a grasp of his situation. He knows what his overhead is, and he should not be forced either with destructive competition or with the necessity to pay more for his film than he can afford.

"We are today operating our theatres under trade practices that have been protested year after year."

Mr. Yamins offered two remedies for the ills of independent exhibitors: (1) To encourage new independent production; and (2) to offer their screens to such producers.

Another way to solve the problem is by round table discussions with the producers, he said.

"In our conference with producers in operations under the motion picture code, I found a liberality of thought that augured well for the industry. I therefore urge the creation of some committee willing to sit down with the real men in this business and solve these problems," Mr. Yamins declared, and a flutter of surprise followed..

"We want no outside interference in our

MPTOA SAYS MAJORS WILL GIVE EXHIBITORS 5 CONCESSIONS IN '36-37

10 to 20 Per Cent Cancellation, New Conciliation Boards, Short Contract, Elimination of Score Charges, Seen Likely

Most Distributors Agree They Will Not Force Excess Number of Short Subjects with Its Features, Says Leader

The first official and definite word of the nature of 1936-37 sales concessions coming to theatre owners out of the MPTOA's trade practice conferences with distributors was given this week in a statement from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which said that: (1) Granting of a ten to 20 per cent unconditional cancellation privilege has been indicated by the distributors; (2) Establishment of the local conciliation boards will be effected; (3) A simplified standard exhibition contract has been proposed; (4) The separate score charge is on its way out; and, (5) Most of the distributors agree that they will not force an excess number of short subjects with features.

On the other hand, the MPTOA has found that (a) unreasonable clearance; (b) unfair overbuying of product; (c) unfair cut-rate competition between theatres; (d) non-theatrical competition; and, (e) the designation of play dates constituting the remaining problems in the ten-point platform for alleviating exhibition problems—are matters for local mediation by the local conciliation boards, rather than for blanket adjustment in New York.

The MPTOA explained its position in the foregoing matters in a "general bulletin" to the trade, issued from headquarters on Broadway in New York, under date of Wednesday, by Ed Kuykendall, as follows:

"The conferences of the MPTOA Executive Committee with the chief executives of the national distributors have been progressing steadily towards the ultimate solution of the ten important trade practice matters listed and described in the MPTOA General Bulletin of April 14th. Following the preliminary conference at The Cinema Club at which all of the film companies (except Warners and Republic) were represented, and at which the written proposals were presented and explained to the general sales managers, the MPTOA Committee, consisting of Lewen Pizor of Philadelphia, Jack Miller of Chicago, Charles E. Williams of Omaha, O. C. Lam of Rome, Ga., L. C. Griffith of Oklahoma City and myself, has engaged in direct negotiations with each separate company.

"Labored attempts have been made by jealous rivals to disrupt and belittle these efforts. It is quite obvious that whatever benefits are secured by this effort will be available to all individual exhibitors alike, regardless of what faction of exhibitor organization they are attached to. The motive for these political maneuvers and personal defamation is plainly fear that they will not be able to claim credit for what is accomplished. The definite written proposals that MPTOA is fighting for have long been advocated by our organization, have been widely publicized and discussed. Any exhibitor or exhibitor organization who honestly wants to help bring about these reforms in the business can easily do so by endorsing and supporting these measures. It certainly is no help to play politics with them.

"We have attempted nothing radical or revolutionary in these proposals, there are no spite measures or reprisals included. We have confined ourselves to sane and sensible proposals that are possible of accomplishment, recognizing clearly the existing legal and practical obstacles, and refuse to sponsor impractical and impossible demands. If any organization thinks we should go further in our proposals, they are at liberty to sponsor additional demands; but that should in no wise lessen their support of what we are after. MPTOA has repeatedly asked for counsel and advice, as well as support, on the merits of our proposals, from any and all exhibitors and exhibitor organizations.

"The sales managers have received us with courtesy, our committee has been able to discuss our problems and proposals freely with the front line executives in each company. No attempt was made by us to intimidate or threaten the distributors, neither were we 'begging' for concessions. Each point was discussed on its merits, each proposal was presented as a matter of good business policy.

Calls Pettengill Bill a Handicap

"Unfortunately, the Pettengill Bill pending in Congress, which would definitely prevent these proposals from being adopted, has been a distinct handicap to our negotiations. We were well aware of this, and were reluctant to start these conferences while this criminal statute was still pending, but felt that these matters were so important to exhibitors that they should not be delayed any longer. We need to get these things done now, not three or four years from now, as proposed by the Pettengill bill, which does not go into effect for 18 months after it is enacted, and would be certain to be tied up in litigation for another 18 months to two years while a test case was fought out through the courts.

"The negotiations require three stages of development; first, the formal presentation of definite written proposals, which has been done; second, a series of conferences to reach a definite understanding as to just what should be done on each proposal, and what each distributor could be persuaded to do. This has been largely accomplished, we are agreed in principle with the distributors who have been consulted on what should be done. The annual sales conventions interrupted these negotiations, but they should be finished within the next week.

"Third, just how these things should be done, when and by whom, will be the next and final phase of the negotiations. The distributors themselves are working out the details of this step so that when we engage in final negotiations they will be in a position to get down to cases.

Progress Traced

"The specific proposals and in general the progress made are as follows:

1. An unconditional minimum rejection privilege in all contracts.

"This has never been granted by any distributor; we have persuaded all of them that it should now be done. Even a five per cent unconditional rejection after the contract is entered into would be just that much more than exhibitors now have. It is not necessary that the companies use a uniform percentage; we asked for twenty per cent and ten per cent to twenty per cent have been indicated. The important thing is to get rid of the restrictions that have nullified all previous cancellation proposals. That all agree to in principle. Please bear in mind that this in no way interferes with your bargaining for a larger percentage or for selective contracts, nor with your trading out unplayed pictures at the end of the season, refusing to buy certain pictures, getting voluntary cancellations or paying for and shelving additional pictures.

2. Local boards for adjusting disputes and complaints.

"These become increasingly important as it develops that they are the only practical solution suggested for some of our most troublesome and important trade practice matters, such as overbuying, preferred play dates on unsuitable pictures, unreasonable clearance, unfair cut-rate competition between theatres, overloading

TRADE TALKS SET WITH THREE MORE COMPANIES

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America trade practice committee will meet with Twentieth Century-Fox this Friday in a resumption of its series of conferences with individual distributors on new season's sales policies. The meeting was arranged Monday by Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, with John D. Clark, Twentieth Century-Fox sales manager. This meeting will be held in the morning, followed in the afternoon by a session with United Artists. The committee was scheduled to confer with Gaumont-British on Thursday.

Mr. Kuykendall, who was to remain in Washington until late this week, has asked members of his organization's trade practice committee to reassemble in New York by Thursday night. The committee includes Oscar C. Lam of Rome, Ga.; Lewen Pizor of Philadelphia; Charles E. Williams of Omaha, L. C. Griwth of Oklahoma City and Mr. Kuykendall.

The committee already has held nitial meetings with Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO, Universal, Columbia and Republic. Warners, so far, have not accepted the committee's invitation for a meeting. Follow-up meetings with the companies whose policies in connection with the exhibitor organization's 10-point program have been outlined already will probably be held next week.

BERGNER BRINGS HER "AS A HERALD PICTORIAL PREVIEW

SIX hundred times in the nineteen years since she was seventeen Elizabeth Bergner has played the role of Rosalind in Shakespeare's "As You Like It" to the complete satisfaction of old world critics, who compared her frankly to Bernhardt and Duse, and to a public whose box office behavior indicated wholesale agreement. It is this seasoned and successful Rosalind that she brings now to the international screen in the Inter-Allied production of the play for distribution by Twentieth Century-Fox. At the Elstree studios where her director-husband, Paul Czinner, has been spending something like a half million dollars in an understandably earnest effort to turn out a picture befitting playwright and star, the Bergner "As You Like It" is talked of as a perfect instrument for testing out the late Mr. Shakespeare as a box office attraction. As the picture rounds into form and reports circulate through the trade, opinion veers toward a general belief that the probabilities are preponderantly on the positive side.

That Shakespeare is not box office is of course a truism lisped by practical showmen in their cradles. Disputing it, in this case, is the contradictory truism that Bergner is box office, that she has never failed to inspire critic and clientele, in New York, Berlin or London, to liberal use of verbal superlatives and generous patronage of the ticket seller. Further to complicate

YOU LIKE IT" TO SCREEN

by BRUCE ALLAN in London

calculation, it is in this play and role that the actress has demonstrated most convincingly her ability to attract and please large and varied groups widely representative of the world public to which she now addresses her appeal.

Naturally, trade discussion of the matter includes reference to the record of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." There is nothing like unanimity in opinion on this point. Few leap to the easy conclusion that success of the first important Shakespearean production to reach the public argues prevalence of a formidable demand for more. Many hold that it did perform a vital function in breaking down an ancient and mainly hypothetical disinterest in subject matter of classic origin. Sage showmen reject the comparison as irrelevant, cite production and exhibition circumstances attending "A Midsummer Night's Dream" as setting it apart, prefer to regard "As You Like It," made in the playwright's native land and starring a ranking Shakespearean actress, as the authentic test picture.

EXPECTED CONCESSIONS LISTED

with short subjects, unfair non-theatrical competition, etc. It will take time, patience and honest effort to get them established, but we have reason to believe it will be done.

3. Unreasonable clearance.

"This is a local problem, vital to the exhibitor affected, which can only be handled by the proposed local boards.

4. Overbuying to deprive a competitor of needed pictures.

"Another matter that requires local boards for investigation and conciliation.

5. Unfair cut-rate competition between theatres.

"Distinctly a matter for mediation by local boards.

6. Non-theatrical competition of professional entertainment.

"Another local matter for mediation by local boards.

7. Simplified standard exhibition contract.

"To rewrite and revise the standard contract requires long and tedious negotiations not possible before the selling season this year. Hence, we have proposed a short form of contract to facilitate physical handling.

8. The separate "score charge".

"We are convinced that the separate score charge is on its way out as the result of the arguments against it we have presented, but for reasons of their own some of the companies hesitate to publicly announce its abandonment. If exhibitors individually follow through with buying resistance against a separate score charge it will quickly disappear.

9. Designation of play dates.

"This is a matter of bargaining in buying film service, fixed rules cannot be made that will fit all situations. Overloading exhibitors with designated dates will be avoided, we may get most of the distributors to refer the question of suitability to the local boards when they are established.

10. Forcing excess short subjects.

"Most of the distributors agree that they will not force an excess number of short subjects, that it is a poor business policy. Again, it is difficult to formulate a rule that will fit all situations. as it is a matter of intelligent buying and bargaining. After the contracts are made, the local boards may help an exhibitor who is overloaded.

"It becomes apparent that a considerable number of these proposals on very important matters rest on the idea of establishing local boards or conciliaton committees for hearing complaints, investigating the facts and endeavoring to adjust disputes between local parties. Several of the most important proposals, it develops under the present court decisions and practical obstacles in the way of cooperation between exhibitors and between distributors, require some sort of a local tribunal to hear complaints, investigate the facts and mediate the dispute.

"It is intended that these local boards should be composed of business men, experienced in and familiar with our business, that their proceedings should be informal, that their primary efforts should be directed towards working out a voluntary agreement between the parties involved to adjust the controversy and that if it is necessary for them to make a formal recommendation that their recommendations for the adjustment of disputes and differences shall be subject to acceptance by the parties.

"While these conciliation committees, once established and functioning, may encourage and develop legal and final arbitration of the more important disputes, the distinction between conciliation and arbitration should be kept clearly in mind at all times in considering this proposal.

"Unlike the old arbitration system, the activities and work of a conciliation committee would not be strictly confined to disputes arising from an exhibition contract. Such an organized procedure for local conciliation would be in a position to adjust, without cost and without prejudice, a wide variety of disputes and controversies. Through the proper functioning of such local committees, it is more than likely that several important problems and grievances can be at least partly solved, such as (3) unreasonable clearance between theatres, (4) overbuying of pictures to deprive a competitor of needed attractions, (5) unfair cut-rate competition between theatres, (6) unfair non-theatrical competition, (9) arbitrary designation of unsuitable pictures for Saturday or Sunday exhibition, and (10) forcing an unreasonable number of short subjects with features.

Local Committees

"Because of its obvious importance and wide range of unfair competitive practices that can be solved through this procedure, we should like to concentrate much of our effort on this proposal. The ultimate success of such a plan in every zone will depend to a large extent on the personnel—the human element. We shall need intelligent, experienced and conscientious exhibitors and branch managers on such conciliation committees. Inasmuch as no awards or final decisions are contemplated by these local boards, and they do not have the authority to jam their decisions down anybody's throat, there is no necessity for quibbling over representation on these local boards; what is needed is intelligence, resourcefulness, and men of good reputation, whose word carries some weight in the community in which they will function.

"Several distributors have asked us for a definite plan or proposal for a simple short form contract. In compliance with this request, we are submitting to each distributor such a Short Form of contract which we recommended they adopt for immediate use in dealing with the members of the MPTOA, and any or all other exhibitors who prefer such a Short Form of contract. (This was published in full in Motion Picture Herald issue of June 6.)

"The only substantial change that is proposed in any of the clauses of the Optional Standard License Agreement now in use, other than a rearrangement of the clauses, is the new clause providing for an unrestricted and unconditional cancellation of a definite percentage of the pictures licensed in groups of ten or more." (Clause Number 9 in the Short Form.)

Seidelman Leaves For European Tour

In line with Columbia's expansion policy in the foreign market, J. H. Seidelman, foreign manager, sails for Europe this week to tour several countries. Prior to his departure, Mr. Seidelman conferred with Jack Cohn on the company's plans for the new season which he will present to a number of sales conventions abroad.

ITOA Assists Charities

After hearing addresses by Irving Steingut and Algernon I. Nova, members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York last week pledged $5,000 to the Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities.

Kennedy Gains Hearing Delay

A full investigation into the loss of Paramount theatres throughout the country may be undertaken next fall by the House of Representatives select committee investigating bondholders' reorganizations.

The possibilities of such an inquiry were revealed June 4 by Representative A. J. Sabath of Illinois, chairman of the committee, in announcing that he had acceded to the request of Joseph P. Kennedy, former chairman of the SEC and now a Paramount executive, for a postponement of the hearings on the Paramount case, scheduled to resume that day.

While the inquiry will be suspended, the chairman warned, the committee will be kept fully informed of the progress of the reorganization.

Representative Sabath directly instructed Murray Garsson, in charge of the investigation, to make a complete and thorough study to discover "who has grabbed" the Paramount theatres throughout the country.

In requesting the postponement of the investigation, Mr. Kennedy told the committee chairman that "a hearing at this time will confuse matters to a greater extent, insofar as the bondholders and security holders are concerned", and explained that it is hoped the stockholders' meeting on June 16 will approve a program which he has worked out to remedy conditions in the company now subject to criticism.

The Paramount Company, he said, is "one of the finest properties in the motion picture industry."

Mr. Kennedy criticized the communications which the committee has received from time to time in derogation of its work, asserting that "the sending of anonymous communications reflecting upon the purpose of the investigation by your committee is inspired, in my opinion, by persons wishing to unnecessarily complicate the Paramount situation further."

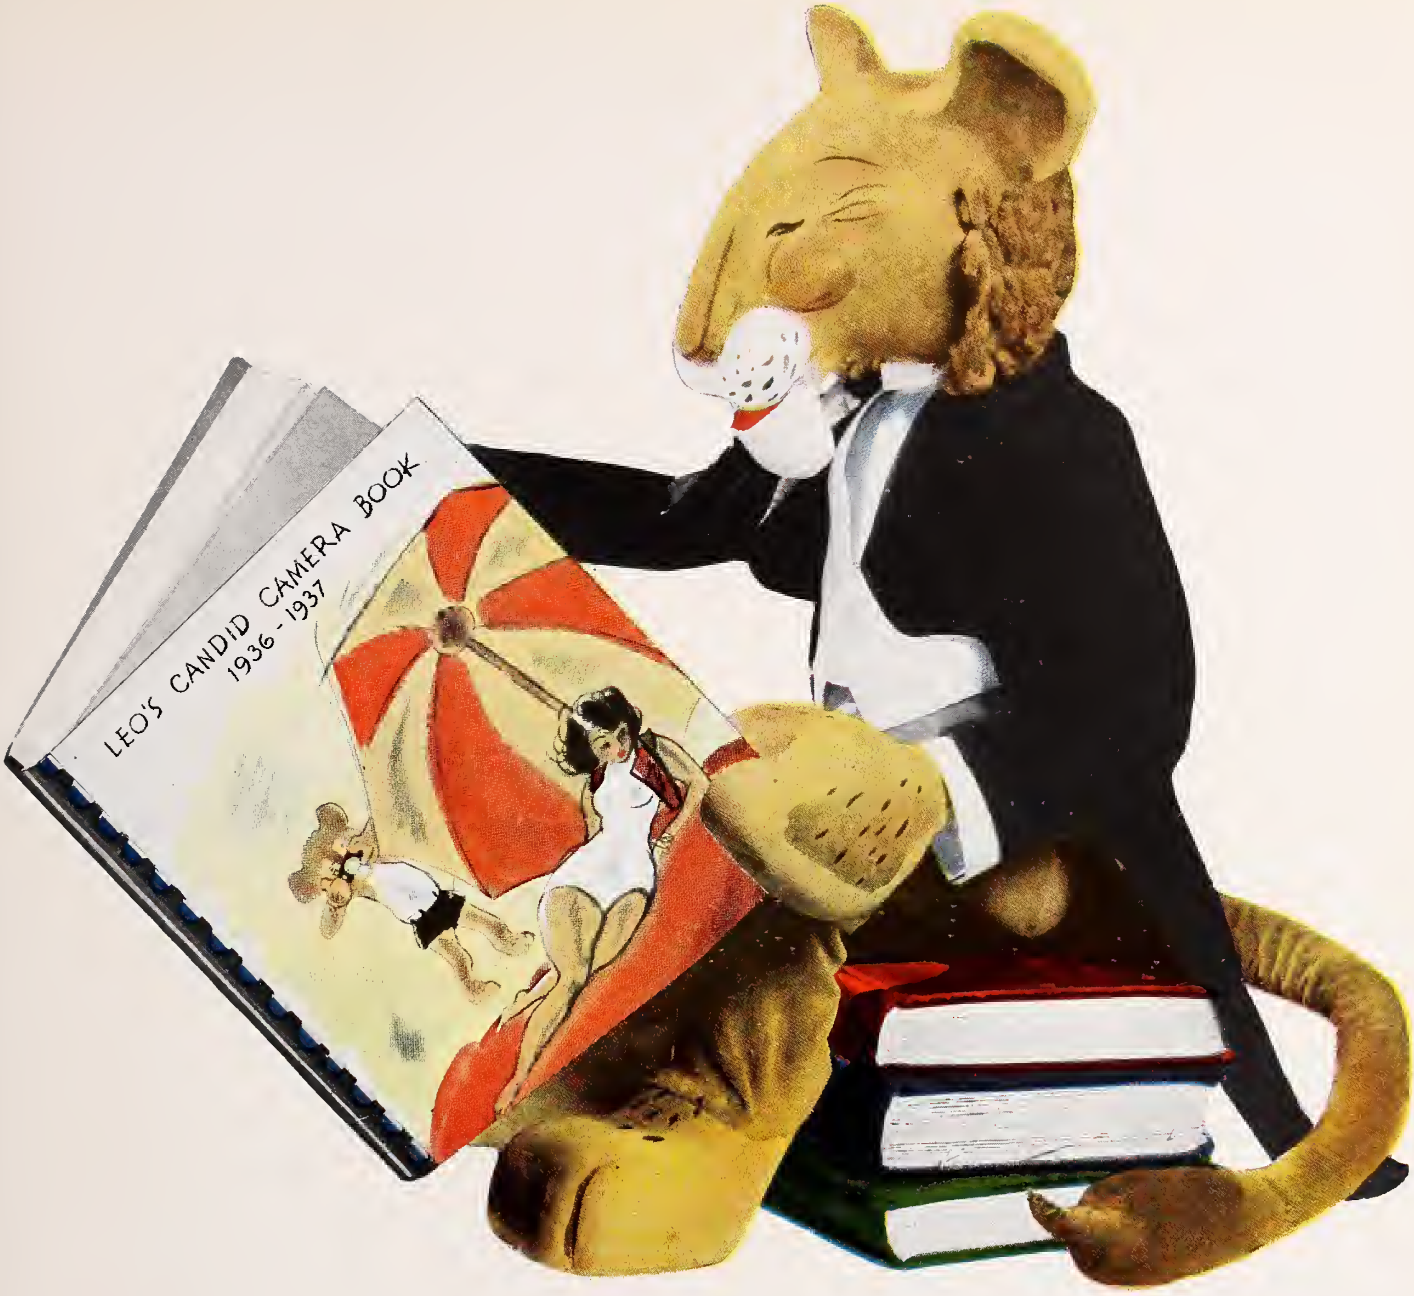
In ordering the suspension of the inquiry, Congressman Sabath disclosed that a number of requests to that effect had been received, and made a brief explanation of the investigation's progress.

"The committee has received hundreds of appeals for a thorough investigation of the Paramount company, not only as to present activities but as to the proposed merger or reorganization. Many charges have been made that insiders of the company are wilfully and deliberately seeking to wreck the company for the purpose of consummating a merger between Paramount and RKO.

Calls Protection Vital

"Unless some protection is afforded the bondholders and stockholders in this company they will find themselves in the same position as the bondholders of the Theatre Equipment Corporation were in."

In view of the fact that Congress is expected to adjourn at about the time of the Paramount meeting and members will thereafter be occupied with the campaign, it is not expected any further action will be taken by the committee until next Fall.



LEO'S CANDID CAMERA BOOK
1936-1937

GET READY FOR THE MOST THRILLING BOOK OF YOUR LIFETIME!

Next week we will have ready a book which we believe is the most important (not to mention the most informative and attractive) piece of literature ever printed since this business began.

LEO'S CANDID CAMERA BOOK
1936-1937

THIS BOOK gives you frankly and informally the whole picture of what Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will represent to theatre box-offices in the coming season 1936-1937.

"IT CONTAINS 118 EXCITING PAGES!"

"LEO'S CANDID CAMERA BOOK" tells you everything you would want to know about the big budget plans of M-G-M next season. You have heard in the trade and you may have already seen in some trade papers early reports of what M-G-M is doing in '36-'37. As announced, M-G-M is making more big budget productions than have ever been issued either by ourselves or any other company in one season.

With such a gigantic program under way, you will be interested in the details of the great starring casts, the box-office properties that they will appear in, the wealth of resources that make this book the most astounding story of achievement in all the annals of the screen. When you finish reading this book you will agree that "M-G-M is an industry in itself".

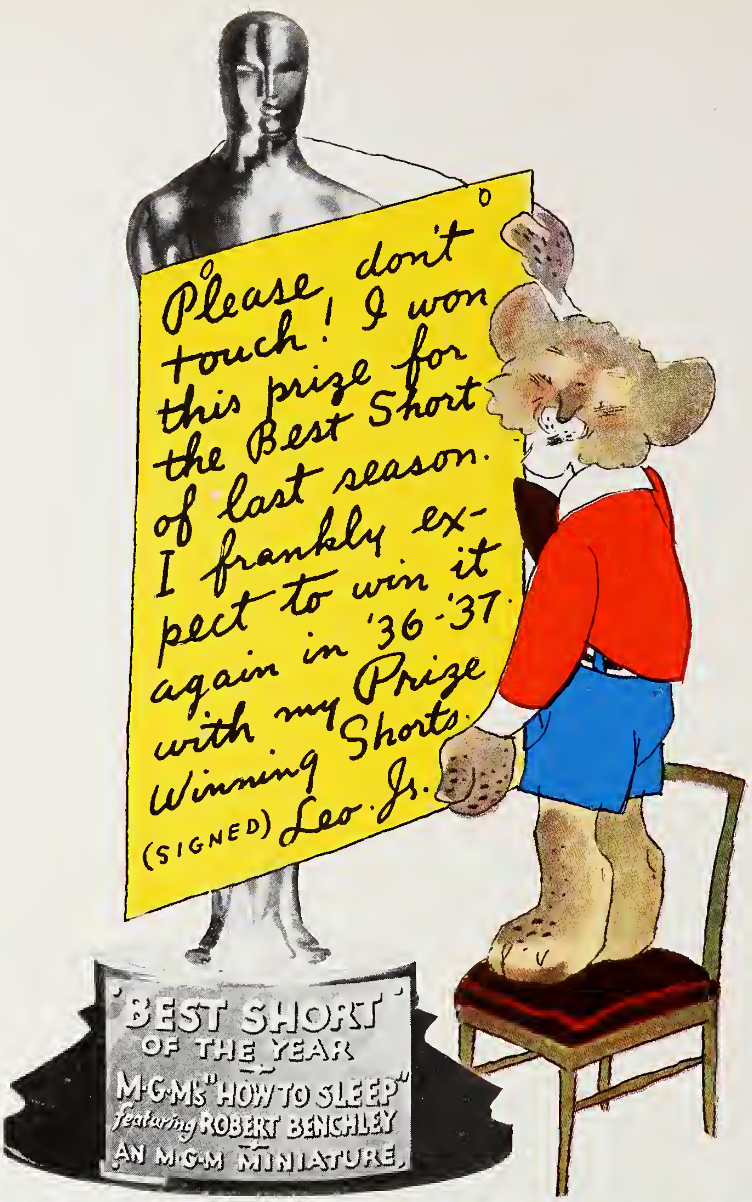
Announcing the continuation and development of the Greatest Short Subject Series in ten years—

CRIME DOESN'T PAY

6 THRILLING DRAMAS IN TWO REELS EACH!

Experience has proven that no matter what else is on the program you can rest assured that a CRIME DOESN'T PAY subject will send them out satisfied with the whole show. To exhibitors who have consistently played these wonderful little entertainments we don't have to expound their virtues. We want the industry to know that M-G-M, proud of the nationwide response to this series, is zealously guarding the reputation they have won from press and public. We are proceeding with new slants on CRIME DOESN'T PAY . . . timely, dramatic stories that are designed for Page-One publicity breaks at the time of release. (By the way, the phenomenal newspaper space piled up by "Hit and Run Driver" throughout the nation, editorials, news stories, picture publicity, etc., has broken all existing publicity records for ANY short subject.) M-G-M will continue to give this series the feature-value production with feature-value casts and directors that actually lifts them out of the short category. And as in the past, which developed stars like Robert Taylor, Edward Norris, etc., the casts will present new, outstanding talents.



Please don't touch! I won this prize for the Best Short of last season. I frankly expect to win it again in '36-'37 with my Prize Winning Shorts.

10 M-G-M MINIATURES

THREE BRILLIANT PERSONALITIES BEHIND THE SERIES!

The carefully thought-out program of M-G-M shorts for next season covers a wide range of audience interests. We honestly feel that nowhere else could a theatre obtain show-building elements so absorbing and entertaining as those provided by the Miniature series.

CHARLES 'CHIC' SALE

His "Perfect Tribute" did more to win new patrons to theatres than any film of the year, long or short, and what publicity it got. 'Chic' Sale is one of the greatest character actors of our time. He has new, distinguished impersonations for next season to delight your audiences.

ROBERT BENCHLEY

A new, refreshing personality for the screen! Already famous in literary fields, Benchley brings to pictures a casual quality of genuine humor that has won him an immediate and enthusiastic public. His first Miniature took the prize for Best Short of the Year. Watch for "How to Cure a Cold."

CAREY WILSON

Another brilliant talent for this interesting series. He has long been a famed writer of outstanding feature pictures. He wrote and delivered the dialogue for the fascinating "Pitcairn Island" featurettes of the past season...and audiences demanded more!

15 YEARS AGO!

In 1921 Hal Roach the famed comedy producer collected a flock of assorted kids and started "OUR GANG" comedies. Probably in no other phase of motion pictures has any idea retained its hold on the American public so steadfastly year after year. The Gang is as American as baseball and the circus, and there's no age limit to its enjoyment. Their series for 1936-37 will feature "Spanky" McFarland, supported by Darla Hood, "Alfalfa" Switzer, Billy "Buckwheat" Thomas, Baby Patsy. Fred Newmeyer, who directed "The Pinch Singer" and "Arbor Day" will direct. This year "Our Gang" went on a personal appearance tour and it was no surprise that they broke box-office records.

That's how one exhibitor sized him up! No sir, he doesn't wear a monocle or spout a lot of phoney theories about Art in the movies. He's just another American named SMITH, with a delicious funny bone and a happy faculty for observing his fellow-citizens in action and making swell cracks about the globe we spin on. He's accumulated a world-wide reputation during the five years he's been M-G-M's ace screen commentator, and he's better than ever. The variety of his recent subjects, such as "Audioscopiks," "Airhoppers," "Jonker Diamond" (what publicity it got!), will be extended. Whether it's the world of sports or adventure, animal, vegetable or mineral life, if it lends itself to his keen and comic handling he'll do it. Your program's bright spot in 36-37!

Give and Take

Hollywood history of a singularly fascinting and possibly vital sort is being penciled somewhat perishably on table cloth and menu by mathematicians, amateur and expert, who multiply $4,500 by the number of weeks elapsed at any given moment since James Cagney's run-in with the Warners resulted in estoppage of his salary checks.

The total arrived at by this process of simple multiplication represents a tidy sum, even for tablecloth figures, and the ever-temperamental ladies and gentlemen of the profession are beginning to show signs of indecision as to just what their unsolicited but eager opinion in the matter is or should be or both.

There was none of this uncertainty in the beginning. The cocky redhead was lustily cheered, if not too loudly, when he took the field in defense of the principle that contracts mean what they say whether or not they say what they mean. He was on his way toward the establishing of a precedent that could be variously used by his fellow men and women. If he won, they might reasonably expect to do the same. If he lost, they would avail themselves of that example likewise. His undertaking could mean quite a lot to them, one way and another, and their applause had the fervency of self-interest.

With the passage of time has come a measure of vacillation. As the item of lapsed and potentially foregone compensation takes on the proportions of important money (estimators say it can mount to $200,000 before the case comes up for final settlement in the upper court) there are those who whisper a wish that the actor's case might have been a little differently predicated, others who hold that a less expensively salaried player would have had a better chance of winning judicial sympathy, still others who express a dawning doubt that Mr. Cagney, specifically, was or is the precisely perfect person or personality to represent the acting profession in just this sort of way.

Much or all of this, naturally, is expressed quietly, between friends, with sustained pressure of soft pedal and reiterated injunction against quotation. It is induced in large measure by the loud silence emanating from the Warner offices and the equally impressive stillness of the lay press, which swells in inverse ratio to the mounting arrearage and, therefore, in contradiction of standard rules governing news values. As to Mr. Cagney, it is a little hard to determine whether he is talking less or merely finding fewer listeners. In any case, the whole affair is beginning to display some probability of being washed up with yesterday's table linen, which is not what the rank and file of contract players wanted in the beginning but may turn out to be in the end.

Meanwhile the gossip of the colony is not without rumors in general kind. Katharine Hepburn, Al Jolson, Errol Flynn and Constance Bennett are among those lately mentioned as negotiating contractual readjustments of one kind and another. For the most part these and other situation, to borrow the distributors' term, are dollar cases. Reports of neat earnings on the part of many major companies have not been overlooked and the seasonal promises aired at company sales conventions have been duly noted. No doubt there will be more of this give-and-take before the cameras get far into the serious business of grinding out the 1936-37 product. Probably there will be somewhat less of it than there might have been if Mr. Cagney had conducted his operations a little less spectacularly.

Itemization

B. P. Schulberg has launched his producing firm, which will make 16 pictures for Paramount distribution during a two-year period, under the title of B. P. Schulberg Pictures, Inc., according to papers filed in Sacramento. Ralph A. Kohn is vice-president and treasurer, Louis E. Swartz secretary. . . . Edmund Grainger has signed a contract with Universal to continue another year with the company as associate producer. . . . Samuel Smith, head of British Lion, attended the Republic sales convention in Chicago, that company having a five-year distribution arrangement with his organization. . . . John Hammill, censorship editor at Paramount, will continue in that capacity and act additionally as manager of the Ernest Lubitsch producing unit. . . . Another writer has become an associate producer, Samuel Engel making that transition at Twentieth Century-Fox. . . . The Fox West Coast bankruptcy case will probably be reopened in Los Angeles as a result of a judgment handed down by the U. S. circuit court of appeals in San Francisco granting Creditors Thomas L. Tally and the Corbar corporation a rehearing in the case. . . . Dr. William Strunk, Jr., has returned to his professional duties at Cornell University after eleven months of experting on the production of "Romeo and Juliet." . . . Clarence Badger is to direct a Zane Grey picture for National Studios in Australia. . . . Paramount has added Anthony Nace, Eleanor Wesselhoeft and Gertrude W. Hoffman to the cast of "A Son Comes Home." . . . Mary Brian, back from a picture-making stay in England, has been assigned a role in Paramount's "Three Married Men." . . . Burroughs-Tarzan has acquired background footage shot by Allan Dwan in Alaska for Universal's "Tundra." . . . Jobyna Howland, veteran character actress of stage and screen, died here Monday. . . . Eddie Cantor will start on "Pony Boy" for Samuel Goldwyn on his return from a three weeks' trip to Honolulu. . . . "Give Me Your Heart," Cosmopolitan-Warner, will come out as "I Gave My Heart," shifting the tenses. . . . They say that Bryant Washburn, Jack Mulhall, Frank Mayo and Harry Myers have agreed to play themselves in "Hollywood Boulevard," a story of a fallen screen star's comeback. . . . Columbia is going to call "San Francisco Nights" "The Final Hour." . . . Twentieth Century-Fox has postponed the starting of "Thank You, Jeeves," until July. . . . John Boles is cancelling a personal appearance tour to make a picture for RKO-Radio. . . . Jack Benny may be held over for another picture after he finishes "Broadway Melody of 1937." . . . Wesley Ruggles is set for another year at Paramount.

Work and Win

S. S. Van Keuren, new production manager for Hal Roach, did a Horatio Alger with witnesses to get the berth. He started at the Roach lot as a member of a swing gang and became prop boy. He was good enough at that to be made a unit prop man and, first thing he knew, he was an assistant director and unit manager. It didn't happen as fast as it reads, naturally, but from that position he moved up to charge of construction, charge of the art department, charge of permanent construction, and then technical director.

In the last named assignment he installed a policy keyed by himself in these words: "Funny people in funny backgrounds are not nearly so funny as funny people in perfectly serious backgrounds." The theory worked out so well in practice that his promotion to production managership of the studio followed.

Incidentally, Hal Roach has completed and previewed his last two-reel comedy, "Hill Tillies," with Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti, and from now on will produce only full length features and an occasional single-reel "Our Gang" comedy.

Sixes and Sevens

Undistinguished by the predicted spurt in production, the first week of June witnessed the starting of six pictures and the completion of seven, the numbers describing admirably the studio condition as 1935-36 schedules are wound up and 1936-37 programs hang fire. Shop talk, split between what's been and what's to be done, inclines, as is Hollywood custom, toward emphasis

High Tension

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Romance Drama

This is a story of a pair of undersea cable layers, the adventurous drama as they go about their hazardous daily work and their comedy adventures in the field of love on shore. The locales are San Francisco, the Hawaiian Islands and beneath the sea. Production is based on an original story by J. Robert Bren and Norman Houston, with screen play by Lou Breslow, Edward Eliscu and John Patrick. Direction is by Allan Dwan, maker of the recent "Song and Dance Man" and "Human Cargo."

For a thrill adventure background the picture gives an inside glimpse into the mechanics of transoceanic cable laying, the dangers encountered when it is necessary to repair breaks and engineering problems that have to be overcome. For romantic love interest story purposes it details the experiences of a pair of battling lovers who can't get along either with or without each other and what happens when the disgusted swain starts a bit of romantic philandering with his coworker's girl friend.

Though the cast offers no outstanding stock names that draw patronage on their own strength alone in any great numbers, it is composed of players whose past records prove them to be acceptable journeyman entertainers. The four leads in the production who are continually the center of interest are Brian Donleavy, Glenda Farrell, Norman Foster and Helen Wood. Since Donleavy's debut in "Barbary Coast," he has appeared in several important pictures, "Mary Burns, Fugitive," "Strike Me Pink" and "Human Cargo." Miss Farrell and Foster are well known to audiences and Helen Wood, after smaller parts in "Roman Scandals" and "Kid Millions," was prominent in "My Marriage." Supporting players are Robert McWade, Theodore Von Eltz, Romaine Callender, Jasper Sayer, Hattie McDaniel and Murray Alper.

Script calling for action that will be a combination of comedy, exciting thrills, wise cracking and fast moving romantic lover interest, production seems to possess a novelty in motivation, locale and characterizations that will make for interest creating showmanship.

Girls' Dormitory

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama and Romance

A serious story of the drama of romantic conflict, told in situations and against backgrounds that accentuate its poignant character is related here. Basically it is the realtistic story of a man and two women, one a mature teacher, the other a full blooded visionary romantic school girl. Continually in the background is the menacing presence of two other people, who because of the rigidly austere moral lives they have lived either will not or cannot understand the turmoil that raged within the breasts of the first three.

Continental in character, following in a general atmospheric theme the idea of "Eight Girls In A Boat" and "Maedchen in Uniform," the picture is based on a play by Ladislaus Fodor which enjoyed quite a vogue recently in Europe. The screen play is by Gene Markey, who previously has not concerned himself with such serious material and direction is by Irving Cummings.

Production effects being in keeping with the tone of the story, the picture concentrates on an entertainment premise that makes people think. Nevertheless it is of a topical nature and has a counterpart in incidents that continually crop up in almost any locality. A teacher author is affectionately appreciative of assistance given him by a mature feminine compatriot. A student in the sternly conducted private school falls in youthful love or infatuation with her instructor. The austere operators of the girls infatuation but cannot discover whom the objective is. Threatening unhappiness to all, story builds through a series of potent dramatic situations, in which the young girl sacrifices her dream as the man and woman teacher recognize a love that has been long existent.

Herbert Marshall is the teacher. Ruth Chatterton returns to the screen in the role of his co-worker and long-time admirer. Simon Simone, noted European actress, makes her debut in the role of the girl. J. Edward Bromberg and Constance Collier are the high but narrow-minded menaces to the happiness of the first-named trio. Several recognized names are included in the support as John Qualen, Shirley Deane, Frank Reicher and George Hassul are listed.

I Give My Heart

(Warner)

Dramatic Romance

The plot of this story is daring. The situations which it precipitates call for appealing sympathetic interest in its romantic phrases and tense interest in those that are dramatic. Given a searching, frank and pointed treatment, it deals exclusively with natural human beings caught in a web of desire and love. Built around a situation that has occurred a countless number of times yet one that nobody has been able to understand or prevent, it is being brought to the screen in the convincing atmosphere that has for its primary appealing function the efforts of real people to understand and effect a solution of problems that were dictated by the heart and not by the mind.

Based on a book and play by Jay Mallory, titled "Sweet Aloes," the picture features Kay Francis, who because of her remarkable work in the forthcoming "White Angel" undoubtedly will be of unusual interest to patrons, particularly women. The screen play is by Casey Robinson and Archie Mayo is the director.

With Miss Francis starred the principal supporting players are George Brent, Patric Knowles, a young English actor brought here originally for a role in "Charge Of The Light Brigade," and Roland Young. Minor players, all of whom, however, are important to the story's narration and action, include Frieda Inescourt, Zeffie Tilbury, Henry Stephenson, Halliwell Hobbes, Elspeth Dudgeon and Helen Flint.

Primarily a woman's story, the picture concentrates on the adventures of a woman in love. Becoming without the benefit of marriage mother of a child, the father of whom was a married man she loved sincerely and sympathetically, she, under the advice of an old friend, surrenders the child to the man's invalid wife. She marries again, but it is a cold loveless thing in which the following of a gay social world is the only leavening contrast. Not until she discovers that the woman whom she has wronged knows her secret and is proud of the happiness she brought to her husband does the mentally beleagured woman become the full wife of her husband.

Three Cheers for Love

(Paramount)

Romance with Music and Dancing

This is one of the first pictures to come within Paramount's recently inaugurated expanded budget plan. Originally started as a B picture, as it neared completion studio executives became convinced that by the expenditure of a little more money, the addition of a few more names and the introduction of some spectacular song dance routines enhancing background effects, would make the picture a potential A feature.

The story concerns itself with youthful happiness, romance, light drama, comedy and the idiosyncrasies that go with a combination of such elements. A picture of youth, it features a cast of youthful players with a liberal sprinkling of veterans to make for effective balance. It's a story of a modern young American girl, her father and mother. Most consistently, however, it concentrates on the girl and her experiences in an exclusive girl school, which really isn't a girl's school at all, but the spur-of-the-moment idea of a pair of old theatre troupers and a galaxy of musical comedy actors to crash Hollywood.

On the youthful side it presents Eleanore Whitney, fast-stepping dancing star and singer, and Robert Cummings in the principal roles. Louis DaPron, Paramount's new dancing sensation, is included as is Olympe Bradna, a French girl straight from the Folies Bergere in Paris. On the more mature side of the roster of players, Grace Bradley, John Halliday, William Frawley and Elizabeth Patterson are included.

Five song numbers are featured in the picture. Four are by Ralph Rainger and Leo Robin and the other is a Mack Gordon-Harry Revel contribution. Dances, all of which are spectacular and colorful, were arranged by Danny Dare, and the currently popular swing numbers are the dominating features.

Picture is based on a story by George Marion, Jr., for which Barry Trivers prepared the screen play. Ray McCarey, who is noted for his ability to handle fast-moving, zestful material, is the director.

We Went to College

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy

The tense of the title keys this one—old grads, boys and girls, back on the campus for a college reunion. It has only one character, comedy, that has for its intent as dialogue, action and situations are blended and that is to make for an all-laugh feature in which nothing is too nonsensical to try as long as it seems possible that it will be a potential funny-bone

As Predicted! FURY at the Capitol!

"'Fury,' is the finest original drama this year . . . brilliantly directed, bitingly written and splendidly performed. 'Fury' is direct, forthright and vehement. That it is brilliantly executed as well makes it all the more notable. All have a share in the glory of 'Fury'." —Frank S. Nugent, N. Y. Times.

"A compelling document . . . with remarkable audacity for Hollywood, it has been brought to the screen with all its shocking implications . . . a visual and emotional crescendo handled magnificently. The cast gives an inspired performance." —Howard Barnes, N. Y. Herald Tribune.

"A smash melodrama . . . brilliantly acted, imaginatively directed, splendidly written, 'Fury' packs a monumental wallop . . . an exciting and impressive film." —Bland Johaneson, N. Y. Daily Mirror.

"Heart-piercing story . . . the screen of the Capitol reflects the fierce fire of a tremendously vital film-saga which shatters the shackles of conventional motion picture entertainment. It is a breathless, turbulent document. Its drama leaps from the screen to live long in your memory. It gathers force and impetus in every sequence, and goes onward through a thousand thrills to a heart-stopping climax. Never for an instant does its break-neck pace lessen, nor its grip relax upon tingling emotions. Every member of the troupe contributes to the rich dramatic entertainment." —Regina Crewe, N. Y. American.

"Powerful punches are packed into the scenes . . . story is developed on a rising tide of suspense that breaks into a smashing climax . . . a thrilling spectacle and a moving, human drama . . . excellently acted by all." —Kate Cameron, N. Y. Daily News.

"Strong film fare . . . vividly acted and directed." —Rose Pelswick, N. Y. Eve. Journal.

"Accumulates an impressive dramatic fire . . . an arresting and powerful picture." —Thornton Delehanty, N. Y. Post.

"As violent as dynamite. In addition to an original theme, a definite viewpoint, and enough punches to jar Joe Louis, 'Fury' is fine movie entertainment. Spencer Tracy plays with a sureness and force few other screen actors display. This is a picture to get you excited and keep you that way . . . grand stuff, shrewdly written, well acted, directed with strength and skill." —Eileen Creelman, N. Y. Sun.

"An earnest, excellently-acted film . . . a completely undisguised, unpretending one . . . mighty good melodrama. As simple, as terrifying as the headlines in today's newspaper. You cannot afford to miss the film. To do so would be to ignore one of the most startling and courageous things the American cinema has done. The acting is something to cheer about. A film that is well worth saluting." —William Boehnel, N. Y. World-Telegram.

tickler. Devoid of anything that sembles sanity, leaving no room at all for anything serious to creep in, being neither elevating, inspiring or impressive, it's just a story of old grads having a good time.

Of more than usual topical interest, inasmuch as its release date will most likely coincide immediately with or just after actual college reunions, it seems to be of the entertainment interest quality that will make for quick and hilarious exploitation. Just as the time, locale and incidents narrated constitute ready-made sources of showmanship ingenuity and effort to identify the production's comedy character, the reputations of the players featured further hint the show's identity. Actually the picture has no star as the entire cast is featured. Inclusion of Hugh Herbert, Charles Butterworth and Una Merkel is the first fact that probably will appeal to audience and showman interest. Furthering this with the addition of Walter Catlett and Edgar Kennedy gives a more inclusive idea of what may be expected. Though Walter Abel has heretofore not been presented as a comedian, he is one in "We Went To College." Also Edith Atwater, a newcomer from the stage, will make her debut as a comedienne.

Fun on the campus, on the football gridiron, in frat houses, at the amateur performance of Shakespeare, down on old lovers lane and on the romantic lake are the ingredients out of which George Oppenheimer and Finlay Peter Dunne, Jr., have spun their story. The elements with which the players have to deal, they also are the comedy potentialties on which director Joseph Santley, who during his career at Republic turned out several acceptable pictures, is concentrating to provide desirable midsummer amusement.

Suzy

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy Romance Drama

Main point of showmanship interest in this is that it's a typical Jean Jean Harlow picture. In theme and atmosphere it is an exciting effervescent concoction of comedy, romance, drama, adventure, light dashes of mystery, suspense and surprises. Fundamentally, it provides Harlow with the kind of material in which she has made her most popular successes, such as "Red Dust," "Red Headed Woman," "China Seas" and "Dinner At Eight." Providing her plenty of opportunity to indulge her own explosive talents and personality, she is called upon to sing, dance, become romantically and topically involved in intriguing love interest and political drama in ways that are typical of Jean Harlow.

Locale of story is Paris. In it Harlow, a stranded Broadway showgirl, becomes the volatile toast of the boulevards and night clubs, becomes involved in a spy plot and in encountering the full quota of adventure from that situation adds to it by waking up one morning to find that she is married to two men. Feature is being given to production, directorial and atmospheric backgrounds commensurate with the color of the star and the quality of story.

With Harlow as the top name, the principals featured are Franchot Tone and Cary Grant. Thus a trio of names whose box office attractiveness is established, are placed in the hands of exhibitors to be used in conjunction with the allure of the story and class and color of effects in ways that have the most effective locale significance. Additionally to the featured players, the chief players in the supporting cast are of more than usual value inasmuch as Lewis Stone, Benita Hume, Inez Courtney, Reginald Mason, Tempe Piggott, Greta Mayer and Christian Rub are prominent in the picture's action.

Based on a published novel by Herbert Gorman, a bit of modern literature that contains much in the way of entertainment potentialities that make for effective and pleasing screen translation, direction is by George Fitzmaure, maker of "Mata Hari," "As You Desire Me" and more recently "Petticoat Fever."

Six Films Start, Seven Finished on Hollywood Scene

on tomorrow's pictures. Echoes from company conventions resound pleasantly through the colony, interpreted as indicative of bigger and better spending, wider and braver enterprise. Nobody hereabouts is selling Hollywood short.

Among the six pictures started in work, the second Pickford-Lasky production, "The Gay Desperado," arrests principal attention. Majority opinion was extremely favorable to the first, "One Rainy Afternoon," and much is expected of the second, another musical romance in the lightly sophisticated manner. Direction has been assigned to Rouben Mamoulian, adept at this sort of thing and beneficiary in this case of the invaluable Lasky counsel, and the cast includes Nino Martini, Leo Carillo, Ida Lupino, Harold Huber, Mischa Auer, George Dupont, Alan Garcia and Adrian Rosely (you could almost sing it).

Paramount put two pictures into production. Stuart Heisler is directing "Johnny Gets His Gun," with Ralph Bellamy, Katherine Locke, Onslow Stevens, Andy Clyde, David Holt, Purnell Pratt, Rollo Lloyd, Noel Madison and Chick Chandler in the cast. "Lady Be Careful" will feature Benny Baker, Larry Crabbe, Grant Withers, Wilma Francis, Nick Lukats, Terry Ray, Louise Stanley and Irene Bennett and is under direction of J. T. Reed.

At MGM Edwin Martin went to work on "Sworn Enemy," directing Robert Young and Florence Rice, supported by Lewis Stone, Joseph Calleia, Nat Pendleton, Harold Huber, Harvey Stephens, Samuel Hinds and Robert Gleckler. Activity in this quarter is expected to be stepped up sharply shortly, or shortly sharply, or—(let it go).

Twentieth Century-Fox, also slated for a brisk pick-up in the not distant future, placed "The Holy Lie" before the cameras. It is a Sol Wurtzell production directed by Lewis Seiler. The cast includes Jane Darwell, Claire Trevor, Arlene Judge, J. Edward Bromberg, Evelyn Venable, Frank Reicher, Astrid Allen and Paul Stanton.

Universal commenced work on only one picture but sent another back to the cameras for extensive revision. "Crash Gordon" is the remake. "Postal Inspector," the new production, will present Ricardo Cortez, Patricia Ellis, David Oliver, Bela Lugosi, Michael Loring, Arthur Loft and William Hall, and is being directed by Otto Brower.

Of the seven completed pictures, Twentieth Century-Fox accounted for a pair with the remaining five distributed over five other companies. First of the pair is "To Mary With Love," in which Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy have the stellar roles. The supporting cast includes, among others, Ian Hunter, Jean Dixon, Pat Somerset, Helen Brown, Paul Hurst, Arthur Aylesworth, Florence Lake and Edward Cooper. It was directed by John Cromwell. James Tinling directed the other picture completed by Twentieth Century-Fox, "Pepper," in which Jane Withers and Irvin S. Cobb are starred. Supporting players are Slim Summerville, Dean Jagger, Muriel Roberts, Ivan Lebandeff, George Hunter, Maurice Cass, Romaine Callender, Tommy Bupp, Reginald Simpson and Carey Harrison.

"Night Wire," described as a thrill action romance drama, presents Lew Ayres, Joan Perry, Thurston Hall, Henry Mollison, John Gallaudet, George McKay, Victor Kilian, Gene Morgan and Wryley Birch. The direction is by David Selman.

Paramount's contribution to the plus side of the production column is "The Return of Sophie Lang," directed by George Archainbaud, with Gertrude Michael, Sir Guy Standing, Ray Milland, Elizabeth Patterson, Colin Tapley, Paul Harvey, Garry Owen, Don Rowan, Furnell Pratt, Ted Oliver and James Blaine. It is a modern story with an element of mystery interwoven into the love interest.

Republic, which is launching an intensive production program expected to materially heighten activity on this sector, transferred to the cutting room "Ticket to Paradise," which features Roger Pryor and Wendy Barrie. The supporting cast of this production includes Claude Gillingwater, Andrew Tombes, Louis Alberni, E. E. Clive, John Sheehan, Harry Woods, Duke Yorke, Harry Harvey, Charles Lane, Harrison Greene, Eric Mayne, Bud Jamison and Gavin Gordon. Aubrey Scotto directed.

The sole independent production in the group is Invincible's "Easy Money." Onslow Stevens and Kay Linaker head a cast which has the following: Noel Madison, Wallis Clarke, Selmer Jackson, Robert Homans, John Dilson, Barbara Bedford, Alan Woods and Robert Graves.

Delays Office Shift

Although scheduled to move from the Bond Building on Broadway this week into new headquarters at the RCA Building, Rockefeller Center, Fanchon and Marco has delayed the switch until July 1. Additional space has been taken since the lease was signed, hence the new quarters will not be ready until next month.

TO MAKE 1936-1937 YOUR MOST PROFITABLE SEASON!

Following the outstanding product of the first quarter . . . 20th Century-Fox has scheduled a program that will make the rest of the season equally memorable. To mention but a few: SHIRLEY TEMPLE in "Sunbonnet Sue," "The Stowaway" and one other; "ON THE AVENUE," a musical smash by Irving Berlin who wrote story, music, lyrics; "KING OF THE KHYBER RIFLES," starring Victor McLaglen in the deathless story of the defense of Khyber Pass; another DIONNE QUINTUPLET box-office sensation; "LLOYD'S OF LONDON," epic of British naval power and the birth of the most colorful institution of today; "THE PEACH EDITION," introducing beautiful and famous Sonja Henie, world's champion figure skater; "MARK OF ZORRO," in music; "WHITE HUNTER," powerful, sweeping adventure and love-drama in Africa's depths; "BANJO ON MY KNEE," rich-as-earth Southern tale adapted by William Faulkner (author of "Sanctuary") against a background similar to "Tobacco Road"; "THE LAST SLAVER," mighty sea-drama of slave running with a lone ship defying the navies of two nations; "THE McKINLEY CASE" (tent. title) strangely engrossing story of the first G-Man; "WAKE UP AND LIVE," the year's most sensational-selling, non-fiction book with a strong appeal to women. And, as the past season has so well demonstrated, 20th Century-Fox will invest these and other productions with the smartest of modern showmanship . . . and people the casts with stars that will make your marquee the bright spot in your town.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

For the record, since it does not appear to have yet been written, is the complete story about the newspaper treatment given little Freddie Bartholomew's pension payments from the Canadian government. The obvious inference made by the press was that Freddie was being paid a pension the while he is reaping thousands weekly as a Hollywood star.

A newspaperman in Ottawa, the Canadian capital, received a reliable tip that the young star was on the military pension rolls as a result of his father's service overseas with the Canadian troops. When the reporter sought final verification of his information from the Canadian pension department, he was told that such data was not available to the public and that no official statement on payments could be released. Having checked accuracy insofar as possible, the story broke in Canada and attracted considerable and immediate Associated Press interest in the United States.

The story was correct as far as it went, but it did not go quite far enough. Cecil Llewellyn Bartholomew, the father, enlisted as a trooper in the Royal Canadian Dragoons in February, 1916, was later assigned to the Tenth Battalion—and lost a leg from shrapnel on the battlefields of France. The father and his dependents, born after the war, including Freddie and his two sisters, Eileen and Hilda, were thus entitled to a pension. Sons of an ex-serviceman draw allowances until they are 16 years of age, and daughters for two years longer. Payment is made at the rate of about $180 per year per child. The young star was on the rolls and payment on his account had been made.

After the story was so partially and unfairly published, the Canadian Department of Pensions, in justice to the boy and his father, broke its strict rule regarding the release of information and revealed that, after Freddie began to receive a fat film salary, he not only arranged to have discontinued the allowance to which he is still entitled for many years, but money already paid him had been returned. Repaying a pension by anyone, regardless, is about as common in Canada as it is in the United States

Eddie Cantor, long a resident of his native New York, where the vital statistics have him listed properly as Isidore Iskowitz, will make Hollywood his permanent home, an undertaking that undoubtedly required the mature judgment of his 43 years. Mrs. Cantor, three of the funnyman's five daughters and Eddie himself have already taken up their new residence in the Beverly Hills home of Lita Grey Chaplin, which they have leased.

"CANTOR HEGIRA WESTWARD," read the United Artist press announcement of the Cantor removal, and we immediately began worrying, for the word "hegira" refers ominously to flight, specifically to Mohammed's flight from Mecca, in 622 A. D.

The Hindenburg Zeppelin played an ironic role on its return trip to Germany, carrying in its compartments two prints of a recent March of Time episode showing England's position in the present precarious state of affairs brought on by Mussolini's absorption of Ethiopia and Hitler's occupation of the Rhineland. The prints were ordered by cable by London theatres, to be transported, on the arrival of the Zeppelin in Germany, to London by plane. Adolph Hitler would not like that.

Students of the screen workshop courses of New York University, after laboring diligently under the capable tutorship of their teachers and some film experts, for many a month, presented, the other evening, their first real motion picture. The professors sat proudly in the auditorium awaiting the debut of their students' brainchild—then squirmed uneasily in their seats when across the screen flashed the title: "Applesauce, Professor!"

Theatre owners who require "bouncers" to keep order in their balconies and who feel the need for a novelty attraction, might take a cue from New York's "Dizzy Club," one of those elbow-bending emporiums near Broadway, which employs a dainty little bit of petite Texan feminism, Miss Lois De Fee, who, at 17 years, stands six feet two inches in her bare feet!

Miss De Fee unblushingly told reporters that she owes her success as a bouncer to the fact that "I was always going around with a bunch of wrestlers."

"Strangler" Ed Lewis offered to teach her wrestling, "but I guess I'm too lazy."

She said she learned how to fight in Austin, Texas, her home, where she became bored with a jockey companion sitting beside her in a balcony, and so tossed him into the San Antonio river.

"Lady drunks give me the most trouble," confessed Bouncer Baby De Fee.

The manager of a well known theatre in Atlanta, Georgia, passes along the following letter of complaint from a patron:

> "I am a stranger, and, noticing that your theatre was running vaudeville, I decided to go in. I noticed that the admission said balcony, 25 cents, so I laid down a quarter and went up.
> "I took a seat in front of the balcony only to have one of your ushers come and inform me in front of a crowd that that seat was 30 cents. I was humiliated by your usher. I judge he was instructed to do this as he said the front of the balcony was a Lode or Lodge.
> "I went down stairs and upon asking for the Manager I was informed he was terribly busy. He was probably playing Solitaire as I know a friend who manages a theatre for Fox West Coast and I have from him the angle of a manager of a Chain Theatre.
> "Although you can run nicely without my business I would advise you to put a sign up saying, 'Front of balcony 30 cents' and not try to fool people with Lodes or Lodges or whatever you call them."

The United States Government, through its judicial division, declared the NRA unconstitutional, together with its "Blue Eagle" and the codes under its wings. Now comes a notice from Washington inviting the public to buy a bound edition of all of the codes for $34.50. The 23 volumes of codes may be of some value to somebody, but no one at Washington seems able to explain what that value might be.

Columbia Pictures is probably fearful of raising the ire of the American public by even mentioning the deceased subject, and so has adopted "Rolling Along" as the new title of its motion picture, "The Music Goes 'Round and Around," which was released several months ago when the song was threatening to unbalance the American mind.

Not all of the genius concentrated in Hollywood is confined to motion picture moguls. Among them is a 12-year-old boy whose ability to go into a trance and then answer questions about subjects unknown to him is baffling the best minds of medical science, including no less a personage than Dr. Cecil Reynolds, brain surgeon and fellow of the Royal Academy of Surgeons in Great Britain. It may be that the lad's proximity to the center of film making, might suggest something.

The boy, Pat Marquis, apparently normal, goes into a trance and, for example, talks Persian—although he has never known a Persian, nor ever studied the language. He lets eye specialists and scientists blindfold him tightly and then reads what is placed before him.

Attending junior high school, young Pat discovered his apparent occult powers by accident ten months ago while he, his sister and his brother were playing with a ouija board.

Brain Specialist Reynolds experimented with the boy, blindfolding him. Pat went into an apparent trance and spelled on the ouija:

"My name is Nareji. I lived in the Himalayas in Tibet in the year 1048. I am a Parsee and emigrated from Persia."

The surgeon brought out some Tibetan art pieces and reported that the boy, still blindfolded, seemed familiar with them.

Pat's power was demonstrated the other day before 150 medical men at the Hollywood hospital, some of the doctors serving Hollywood's biggest picture folk. Three eye specialists adjusted the bandage to their own satisfaction, and at their suggestion Pat circled the word "Ohio" in a pamphlet in print, imitated the motions of various doctors in the audience, and outlined in pencil, as requested, the shoes in a group picture in a magazine.

Motion picture producers who could use Pat to tell them where they are going from here, might communicate with Hollywood hospital, forming a line on the right.

Martin Finkelstein, district manager for Fox Midwest in Kansas City, stood the other morning, on business bent, before the desk of Mrs. Jean Helm, in the office of Otto P. Higgins, director of police.

In walked H. W. Johnson, police inspector, a stranger to Mr. Finkelstein, who, too, stood before Mrs. Helm, and beside Mr. Finkelstein.

Mrs. Helm glanced upwards, and with an expression of astonishment asked, "Are you two twins—or something?"

Mr. Finkelstein and Mr. Johnson looked at each other and were equally surprised, for there they stood dressed identically—suits, shirts, neckties, hats, shoes, hose, all in the same color, the same texture, the same cut—and never had the one ever set eyes on the other.

Ol' Dabbil Screen came in for a backhanded slap and a threat of competition the other day from a strange source—the staid Academy of National Sciences, in the City of Brotherly Love.

Faced with the need for nearly $400,000 to support the institution, the board of directors, comprised of leading Philadelphians, decided to "jazz up" the scientific exhibits to make them more appealing than the movies.

Strange, indeed, are those learned men of Philadelphia who expect their citizenry to evidence more interest in the love life of marmots, magpies and mosquitoes than in the love life of Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Johnny Weissmuller.

GRAHAM NEW HEAD OF SUPPLY DEALERS' GROUP

Convention Takes Up Problem of Competitive Organizations and Maps Procedure for '36

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

Following the final session of the annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association which lasted until late Monday night, in the Edgewater Beach Hotel, the executive members of the organization attended a special meeting Tuesday morning and afternoon and behind closed doors laid plans for the coming year.

Those attending this meeting were H. W. Graham, of Denver, the newly elected president; K. R. Douglass, of Boston, reelected vice-president; J. E. Robin, executive-secretary, of New York; W. J. Katz, of New York, treasurer, and George McArthur of Detroit, J. C. Hornstein of New York, A. F. Morrone of Pittsburgh, and B. F. Shearer of Seattle, all of them directors of the organization.

Besides outlining plans for the coming year and the convention for next year, which already is scheduled to be held at the same hotel, the group is reported to have waged a heavy discussion towards action in regard to the formation of other theatre supply dealers' groups now being promoted. Serious concern over a move by some of the members of the organization regarding formation of a new competitive group is said to have arisen.

Mr. Robin, executive-secretary, would not make any mention of the meeting to reporters and refused to make any statements regarding any phase of the convention until he returned to New York later this week. All announcements regarding the convention would be made later, he said. He called it the most widely attended gathering in the history of the organization.

The opening session was held last Friday morning, in the Berwyn Room of the Edgewater Beach hotel. It was a closed session. Silent tribute was paid to two deceased members, Clem Rizzo and E. E. Oliver. Minutes of the 1935 convention were read as well as the minutes of the 1935 directors' meetings. Plans for the present meeting were outlined and the group adjourned for a luncheon.

Many of the delegates spent the forepart of Friday afternoon inspecting the equipment displayed. The general inspection was delayed until Saturday. At 4 p.m. the group held another business session and a report was made regarding new members.

Friday evening an open forum of manufacturers and association representatives was held in the grand ballroom. A. Wienke made a short speech regarding the new model Motiograph projector. Charles R. Schatten spoke on "The Silent Salesman," and O. F. Neu, of Neumade Products, New York, discussed "What the Manufacturer Expects of His Dealer Representative."

Mr. Neu emphasized the necessity of cooperation between the two and the need of new ideas for increasing a market.

A. J. Levin, spoke about "Accounting for the Theatre Supply Dealer," and J. J. Finn talked on "The Relation of the Projectionist to the Theatre Supply Dealer."

G. D. Crain, Jr., publisher of Advertising Age, was the final speaker. Mr. Crain told the delegates the vital part advertising played in their selling plans.

Saturday morning was spent in group conferences, except for a short talk by S. M. Zinner on "Sales Financing." Mr. Zinner told the members about various finance plans they could use.

On Saturday afternoon, J. B. Kleckner, president of Motiograph, Inc., opened the session with a talk on "Should The Independent Theatre Supply Dealer Remain In The Commercial Banking Business." His address concerned finance problems and suggestions as to how the dealers might meet them.

Saturday night, a banquet and dance was held in the Michigan Room. President B. F. Shearer gave a word of welcome and W. C. Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, acted as master-of-ceremonies.

Sunday was spent in committee meetings and the viewing of manufacturers' displays.

The Monday morning meeting opened with a short talk by E. A. Williford of National Carbon. Following this a short business session was held.

Resignation Asked Of Spanish Head

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
in Barcelona

Following an unsuccessful attempt by the coterie of exhibitors who were responsible for the recent "whispering campaign" against Jack Edelstein, director general of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica, S.A.E., to force the resignation of Enrique Saenz, president of the Associacion de Empresarios de Espectaculos de Catalunya, in an open meeting of that organization last week, it was decided again to present the demand. A vote of censure will be asked for Senor Saenz's alleged failure to more vigorously prosecute the Edelstein issue to the satisfaction of the contendents.

With the filmization of the complete text of Bizet's immortal opera, "Carmen," and with the probability of Gladys Swarthout and Fred MacMurray in the principal roles, and with the dialogue and action voluntarily submitted to the approval of an official delegate of the Spanish government, to avoid any national offense to the Spaniards, 60 pictures have been announced by Paramount, S.A.E., for the coming season.

"The Light That Failed," "Buffalo Bill," "The Ceylon Maid" and the operetta, "The Count of Luxembourg" figure in the list of which all but the musicals will be dubbed in Spain.

It was officially announced also that instead of the single experimental picture to be filmed by Paramount in Spain for the coming season, there will be three, while two more will be produced in the Argentine, all to be done in Spanish.

One may judge of the preponderant influence of the motion pictures in the Barcelona press by the example of La Vanguardia, the leading Spanish daily, which, of a total issue of 38 pages, carries altogether seven pages devoted to the screen—four reading text, including reviews, interspersed with display advertisements, usually announcing current openings or attractions at first-run houses. There are also pages of card advertisements of various sizes covering the offerings at almost all the Barcelona houses. While other of the city's plethora of newspapers, published either in Spanish or in Catalan, devote less space to the cinema, the space they do devote is scarcely less in proportion to that in La Vanguardia.

Starr to Broadcast Picture Program

Martin Starr, editor of Picture Business, will commence on Saturday a series of radio programs under title of "Movie Starr Dust" over station WMCA, using 15 minutes nightly at 7:30. Mr. Starr will deal with Hollywood news in a fashion calculated to offset the adverse effect of irresponsible chatterers and newspaper columnists who misrepresent and distort material pertaining to the screen.

ALL NEWSREELS AT POLITICAL MEETS, ABANDON SINGLE-COVERAGE PLAN

Camera Crews Go to Cleveland Republican Convention All Primed for Summer Campaign of "Sizzling Politics"

Arrangements of the five newsreels for coverage of the Republican and Democratic national conventions this month were tangible evidence that the combination plan "Associated Press" plan of single coverage for all, which has been variously under discussion, has been dropped and that the newsreel companies intend to remain independent of one another.

The conventions, however, mark the first extensive cooperation of the newsreels and the radio broadcasters, in that the halls have been wired so that both mediums may obtain their sound from a common outlet. A hookup of this nature first was tested at the inauguration of President Roosevelt in 1933.

The arrangements to bring the colorful eye and word pictures of "the big shows" to the nation's screens are the most elaborate ever, and the party committees have cooperated fully in both instances, sensing the value in keeping their candidates and causes before the electorate which attends picture shows.

Maintaining their traditional policy of nonpartisanship, the newsreels will play no favorites in the campaign this year, and will strive to match footage for footage between the two large parties.

Full staffs were maintained at the Republican pow-wow this week in Cleveland, and will be in evidence at the Democratic session, which starts June 23 in Philadelphia, to last five days.

Combined Service Vetoed

While there was considerable sentiment in favor of consolidating the camera work in much of the proceedings, it was overruled by a school of thought which held that though it is more expansive to shoot individual stories, the resultant films are not stereotyped and the exhibitors, therefore, receive a better quality of product.

Except for emergencies, such as when a sound equipment goes "dead" or in the event of a camera breakdown, the newsreels are not exchanging films at the conventions, which afforded the first real opportunity since the discussions started for combination of newsreel coverage. Abandonment of the proposal gives little hope that it ever will become a fact, according to the newsreel heads.

Huge Radio Networks

While the cameramen are grinding away, the National Broadcasting Company, the Columbia Broadcasting System and the lesser networks are sending their programs into the estimated 22,000,000 homes equipped with receivers in the United States, plus 3,000,000 sets in automobiles, representing a potential radio audience of 65,000,000 persons, half the population of the nation. Radio officials reported that the largest network of stations in history was linked to the microphones in Cleveland. A similarly large network—some 250 stations—will broadcast the Democratic proceedings, and it is predicted that during the two conventions the number of listeners will reach on all time high.

Publicity-wise, the national committees arranged for the first time that some of the main convention events take place at night to gain the full benefit from the radio facilities, to the loss of the film industry. To counteract this competition, the advertising and publicity heads of the large distributing companies are planning an extensive institutional campaign in behalf of the screen, to start late this ummer, when the campaign will be at the peak.

Newsreels' Elaborate Plans

One of the big stories of any year, the conventions are being given uniformly expert attention by Hearst Metrotone, Fox Movietone, Pathe, Paramount and Universal.

Practically no event of any nature has been worked out in such elaborate detail as the Republican conclave, according to A. J. Richard, editor of Paramount News. The lighting arrangements utilized most of the new developments perfected during the last three years. The recently developed extra-fast negative stock and used in virtually all instances.

Most of the newsreels brought to the convention hall the special camera equipment which they designed for the Hauptmann trial where ultra-fast lenses were essential and all cameras had to be effectively silenced.

Paramount imported from Germany several sets of recently developed fast lense equipment for the convention, and Universal also had some special lenses on hand.

The Republican convention committee installed a complete studio setup in the basement of the convention hall, and practically all of the leading political figures, including some of aspirants for the presidential and vice-presidential nomination, were scheduled to be interviewed on a set that, except for smaller dimensions, is similar to those used in Hollywood. The convention committee also provided completely furnished offices in the hall to enable each newsreel to handle the mass of detail incidental to the shooting of thousands of feet of newsreel subjects, and dark rooms where developing and editing could be done on the scene.

A rough estimate of the amount of footage shot on the Republican session probably would be in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 feet, if each of the five reels released only three stories, said Mr. Richard. Indicating the cost of the coverage, he said that when 25 cameras are running in different parts of the hall for all the newsreels, the negative going through them at the rate of 90 feet a minute cost some $80 a minute. The lighting cost was estimated at about $5,000. Living expenses for the augmented camera crews, laboratory costs, special planes and motor cars to speed delivery of the negatives, and so on, will bring the total photographic cost for the Republican convention to very nearly the price of a feature picture, Mr. Richard believed.

Plane Crews, Too

Typical of the arrangements, Paramount News had a half dozen of its ace cameramen at the Republican meeting, in addition to sound men and a special staff which contacted the political figures who are in the public eye and good for a story. The personnel included also two plane pilots, special messengers to relay the film out of the hall and motorcycle runners.

Also typical of the general procedure, the Paramount News men split into two crews.

Exhibitors Warned to Prepare for Inroads of Presidential Campaigns

Exhibitors everywhere are warned both by distributors and their theatre owners' organizations to prepare their operations to offset, at least partially, the tremendous inroads that their leaders expect will be made in box office receipts during the summer and early fall by the ballyhooing of the Republic and Democratic Presidential campaigners.

Private discussions of the subject were held away from the convention floor of Allied States Association, during its annual meeting last week in Cleveland, between Nathan Yamins, Allied president, and David Palfreyman, exhibitor contact of the Hays organization, representing all of the distributors and the distributor-controlled circuits.

They concluded that the enormously expensive "shows" that will be staged both by Democrats and Republicans will seriously threaten theatre business, and that exhibitors must stand ready to fight the competition with strong showmanship efforts.

MERGED COVERAGE VETOED BY "REELS"

One shot the story from a national viewpoint. This was rushed to a Cleveland laboratory, developed, duped, and prints rushed to every part of the country. The other crew specialized on local shots for various territories.

The newsreels assembled cameramen who have covered previous national political conventions, and details from Washington who are personally acquainted with the political leaders. Newsreel representatives were in session on arrangements with the national committees for months, and express themselves as highly pleased with the cooperation of both parties.

While the physical arrangements of coverage are virtually the same for both conventions, the newsreels devoted a degree of extra attention to the Republicans' session, where, as distinct from the other party, there had been some element of contest for the presidential nomination.

However, the reels went to extremes to keep their footage fairly well balanced up to the pre-convention stage of the campaign, though a survey showed that from the first of the year to June 1 there were approximately 22 releases of a strictly Republican nature, with Democratic releases just about paralleling that number.

There will be an evening up process, however, and by the time the electorate goes to the polls both parties will have had equal prominence on the theatre screens.

Newsreel editors reported that in most parts of the country the political campaign some time before the Republican convention had assumed first rank importance as a newsreel topic, especially in sections where sentiment was split over the several Republican contenders.

Veteran of Campaigns

Anticipating the tremendous interest in the bi-party contest and the particular news value of the expected fight for the Republican nomination, Paramount News some three months ago gave John Herrmann, its political specialist, the standing assignment of covering the preliminary material, the convention itself and the ensuing campaign.

A veteran of a number of campaigns and cameraman with Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd in Little America, Mr. Herrmann will accompany the Republican presidential candidate on his campaign trips and follow all his activities until November 3 in the same manner that the White House newsreel photographers follow every move of the President.

Practically all the newsreels compiled quantities of library material on all the leading Republican candidates and many of the minor political figures who might develop as "dark horses" during the convention, or play a role in the campaign.

One of the major innovations of this year's conventions is the installation of the unprecedented number of 52 microphones throughout the halls which, by clearing through a master switchboard, permit the broadcasters and the newsreel cameras to "pick up" the delegates no matter where they may be speaking. This, say the newsreel men, adds considerably to the personalized interest of the story and its sectional distribution.

NEW YORK AND LONDON GREETINGS EXCHANGED

The opening of "Show Boat" in London Wednesday night was featured by an interchange of greetings between officials of the Universal company in New York and their new associates in London via the trans-Atlantic telephone. R. H. Cochrane, president, and J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of Universal, addressed the gathering at the Dorchester Hotel next to Hyde Park and their voices were amplified to reach all corners of the auditorium. The connection worked both ways, and following the greetings from New York, the Britishers had their say across the ocean.

Through an agreement with the party committees, all broadcasting from the convention hall floors is made available to all networks and all newsreels. For the first time in political convention history, there is a microphone on the floor for each delegation. The "mikes" are under the direct control of the permanent chairman through the medium of a specially designed panel board on the speaker's rostrum. This permits the chairman, the spectators, the radio audience and the newsreel cameras to "catch" every detail of the convention's proceedings.

Seven and a Half Miles of Wire

The 52 microphones at Cleveland, some of them hidden as a precaution against delegates' possible "mike" fright, were connected by more than seven and one half miles of lines. In addition, the broadcasters had a number of auxiliary microphones in the hall for their exclusive use.

Camera platform installations in both convention auditoriums are so situated as to afford the newsreel men clear views of the speakers, without obstructing the delegates' vision.

The convention committees are standing the cost of the newsreel facilities, such as the construction of platform, private offices, studios, dark rooms, and the like.

Despite the lack of a contest, the Democrats are expected to put on a show, and the convention will reach a climax on Saturday, June 27, when President Roosevelt will make his renomination speech to a crowd of estimated to reach 100,000 at Franklin Field. The newsreels will move their equipment from the convention hall en masse, and expect to get in the huge gathering some of the most colorful shots of the convention.

Because the political parties recognize the increased importance of radio at national conventions, say the broadcasters, the national committees revised their usual schedules so that important sessions would be at night, instead of in the daytime as heretofore.

NBC's networks carry the comments of Hearst Metrotone's Edward C. Hill, Fox Movietone's Lowell Thomas, Universal's Graham McNamee, and others. CBS and the Mutual network also have prominent commentators covering the conclaves.

It originally had been planned that the newsreels would make interview and "behind the scene" shots in the convention hall studios on a combination basis, with one company serving the others. In early plans, Fox Movietone had been assigned to the Republican convention for this purpose, and Hearst Metrotone to the Democrats. These plans fell through, however, with the decision of the newsreels to make their own "sidelight" stories.

All but Paramount had promised to cooperate, this company always preferring as a matter of policy to refrain from cooperative newsreel shooting, and is opposed to the combination idea.

Sees Savings in United Service

Charles Ford, chief of Universal News, definitely favored an "Associated Press" for newsreels on "open" stories, where none can be scooped. He believed this would effect a saving of from 20 to 25 per cent in the newsreels' total production cost. The newsreels still would have their own crews for other work, as no editor would want to share an "exclusive" with the others on a "hot" news break.

Mr. Ford pointed to the Ethiopian war as a prime example where the combination plan could have worked to the advantage of all. One camerman, said Mr. Ford, could have shot all the war stories for the reels. At it was, he pointed out, they went to large expense in sending expeditions to Africa, and at the peak the combined crews totalled 14 men.

Would Retain Identity

Under Mr. Ford's plan, each reel would retain its identity, and the stories would not appear identical because of the individuality in editing and titling. He favored assigning two men from each company for a period on a rotating basis, to cover such events as automobile races and conventions where more than one crew is unnecessary.

The only apparent difficulty, according to Mr. Ford, would be in supplying prints to all companies under conditions where minutes count and each reel tries to beat the other to "the street." This was one of the main objections given by Paramount in its refusal to work cooperatively with the others, and Paramount also considered the possibility of losing its identity and of not being in a position to turn out a better reel than the others, according to the company.

Most of the newsreels believed, however, that the combination plan would prove feasible on routine stories. Courtland Smith, president of Pathe News, pointed out that this procedure is occasionally adopted where it is practicable for only one or two reels to operate, but explained that whether the idea would be adopted by his company as a general policy would "depend on the plan."

THERE'S A DIFFERENCE IN GEORGIA BLUE LAW

Court Ruling Places Owners In a Quandary on Sabbath Operations in That State

There is a difference between tweedledum and tweedledee and it has just been demonstrated by the Georgia court of appeals in the case of F. J. Wood, of Wood's Theater, Cordele, Ga., in a decision finding him guilty of operating a theatre on Sunday, in violation of the Georgia "blue laws," despite the fact that two years ago the Georgia supreme court rendered a decision legalizing the operation of theatres on Sunday.

The explanation of these two sharply divergent opinions makes the difference between "dum" and "dee."

The Georgia state law, in effect, prohibits the operation of a business within the state on Sunday except it be in the public interest or a business of necessity, under which head filling stations, drug stores (even the sale of soft drinks), restaurants, etc., are not molested. The law is so worded that if any other business, particularly places of amusement, if operated by the owners or lessees, is kept open for profit on Sunday the operator is guilty of violation of the law.

It apepars that Mr. Wood had made a contract with a local charity to pay into its treasury $100 per month for the said charity to sponsor the seventh-day operation of the theatre. But Mr. Wood and his staff continued the physical operation of the house, which was interpreted by the court of appeals to mean that the theatre was under the continuous seven-day operation of the owner. And this was held as prohibited by the state law.

However, Atlanta, Columbus, Albany and several other Georgia cities operate theatres on Sunday without molestation, the Atlanta theatres being operated on the seventh day for the benefit of the Shriners' Crippled Children's Hospital. But the difference between this Sunday operation and that of Mr. Wood is that the local Shrine temple takes physical charge of the theatre operation on Sunday, paying the employees, film rental, light, power and heating and cooling expense, and a nominal rental of the theatre to the owners and lessees. Thus, under the ancient Georgia blue law, the owners or lessees do not actually operate the theatre the seventh day, and for this reason are not violating the anti-Sunday law. However, the same programs as those offered the other six days of the week are shown.

The difference—

Mr. Wood, even though for charity, operated his theatre himself on Sunday.

The Atlanta theatres, for charity, are operated by a "charity committee," named by the beneficiaries.

That the Atlanta theatres are actually operated by the Shriners is evidenced by the fact that, some months ago, one of the theatres experienced a holdup on Monday morning, as the assistant manager and representative of the Shrine were taking the Sunday receipts to the bank, and the insurance company paid the representative of the Shrine for the loss.

So, in Georgia theatre operation, there is a difference—a marked difference—between tweedledum and tweedledee.

AT&T Film for Propaganda Cited at Federal Inquiry

Motion picture propaganda by the American Telephone & Telegraph Company last week came under the fire of the Federal Communications Commission in Washington when Samuel Becker, special counsel for the commission, elicited from J. M. Hamilton, motion picture director for the company, an admission that until May, 1934, efforts were made to conceal the origin of the films.

Appearing before the commission June 4, Mr. Hamilton was questioned at length regarding the methods used in securing theatre exhibition of Bell System pictures, and revealed that before undertaking production exhibitors were interviewed to determine what sort of pictures they would accept and to get a line on audience likes and dislikes.

So far did the company go in trying to get its pictures shown that an "imaginary conversation" between a telephone representative and an exhibitor was written—and printed in the motion picture section's annual report for two consecutive years—for the guidance of men sent out to "sell" the films.

In that "conversation" all the objections of the exhibitor were overcome by the superior argument of the telephone representative, the former's criticism that the pictures were propaganda being met by the answer that they were "informational."

Company Seal on Trailer

When, in 1934, the company brought out the "Modern Knight," a "plot" picture, it was determined, largely as a result of the opposition to unidentified propaganda pictures, to sign the films, and the telephone company seal and the words "Film Library" were appended to the trailer, Mr. Hamilton testified.

Although the company was proud of its pictures, he explained, the identification was not put in the introduction because it might smack of advertising.

Mr. Hamilton told the commission counsel that since 1924 the telephone company has produced 56 motion pictures, about half of them silents. A real program of production, however, was not undertaken until 1926, when nine pictures were produced. Production costs in that year were $25,769. Thereafter, the number of productions varied from year to year, with six pictures costing $18,025 in 1927; nine costing $30,992 in 1928; seven costing $33,137 in 1929; six costing $27,963 in 1930; six costing $44,413 in 1931; four costing $24,648 in 1932, and three in each of the following three years at a cost, respectively, of $20,155 in 1933, $13,732 in 1934 and $33,119 in 1935.

Production Cost $261,959

The total cost of the production program for the 10 years beginning with 1926, he testified, was $261,959. This figure did not include the cost of making the positives, which were sold to associate companies at cost; during the period from 1929 to 1935, inclusive, 2,492 prints were sold and the company derived a revenue of $117,417.

Mr. Hamilton was unable to give much information regarding the motion picture activities of the associated companies, but said that during the past six years they spent $309,386 on films, which apparently included productions undertaken by some of the companies.

In making its pictures, the witness said, the company sought to provide entertainment as well as information and the films were not designed as advertisements but as a means of acquainting the public with the problems, developments and service offered by the telephone industry.

Testimony from the Files

Most of the testimony adduced by Mr. Becker was obtained direct from the files of the company, which revealed that one of the arguments used to secure theatre showing was that telephone company employes would attend. In some instances, it was disclosed, telephone companies posted notices where such pictures were being exhibited and while there were no direct orders that employes should attend there were suggestions to that effect, Mr. Becker charged.

Mr. Becker also brought out company reports which disclosed that after a showing of telephone pictures before an advertising men's convention in Canada, the convention report described them as "subtle and powerful propaganda, competing favorably with Hollywood's best." The commission counsel, however, admitted that the pictures were excellently made and were popular.

The commission's inquiry into motion picture activities was made in connection with its study of publicity matters. The real investigation of the company's film activities will come next Fall, when the ERPI situation is analyzed. The commission will devote only a few more days to the telephone investigation this spring, dropping it on June 15 for its hearings on the technical problems of radio and resuming again in September.

Philadelphia Theatres Discuss Sunday Closing

A survey of the Philadelphia theatre field indicates that sentiment is favorable to Sunday closing for the summer among the smaller independent exhibitors. With the coming of warm weather grosses have fallen off in all spots except the most densely populated and many exhibitors believe that the extra playing day is not returning its share of the overhead.

Summer weather has started earlier than usual in that territory and the result is that summer resorts are drawing Sunday patronage in preference to the theatres.

SOVIET AGENT BRINGING U.S. FILMS TO RUSSIA SEEKING "GREATER AMITY"

Six Features En Route From Large American Distributors In Attempt to Reopen Soviet Market for Hollywood Films

On a mission to improve relations between the government-controlled film industry in Russia and the industry in America, Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino Corporation, the Soviet film liaison in this country, left Friday on the Queen Mary for Moscow, with six feature pictures from large American distributors.

Mr. Verlinsky took with him prints of three RKO releases, "Top Hat," "Becky Sharp" and "Dancing Pirates," and three United Artists pictures, "The Ghost Goes West," "Things to Come," both produced by Alexander Korda in England, and "Strike Me Pink," featuring Eddie Cantor, a Samuel Goldwyn production.

Amkino said that Columbia's "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and Paramount's "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" also have been promised and would arrive in Moscow shortly.

Prints of seven Disney cartoons also were taken by Mr. Verlinsky, the deal having been negotiated with Arthur W. Kelly, in charge of foreign distribution for United Artists, and Roy Disney, the cartoon producer's business manager.

The films will be shown to Boris Z. Shumiatsky, head of the All-Union Film Trust of the Soviet Republics, and other officials, who will decide which ones to purchase for distribution in the far-flung reaches of the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Verlinsky said that distribution arrangements differ, but in most instances a negative is acquired for one year, with subsidiary agreements on distribution of the positives, which are printed in Russia.

He sailed with numerous catalogues and descriptions of studio and theatre equipment, and will attempt to induce increased purchases of American films and equipment, he said.

American film exports to Russia have been negligible, while equipment orders have been reaching new highs, the Russian industry now being in the midst of expanding its production to keep pace with the erection of thousands of theatres.

Mr. Verlinsky said he expected to bring back a number of Russian films. Seven Soviet features have been released here so far this year by Amkino, and 10 more are scheduled by the end of 1936, which compares favorably with the total released here in the last three or four years.

New York distribution officials pointed out this week that American film companies, or those in any other country which has no covering agreement with the Soviets, run a big risk in sending their product to Russia because of the absence there of protective copyright laws.

Authors, equipment manufacturers, inventors and others in various fields have complained of alleged "piracy" of their products, and the Russian representatives admit that there is no recourse since their country does not belong to the International Copyright Union, which affords automatic copyright.

Some film equipment manufacturers say that it is a relatively easy matter for Russian representatives to obtain samples and send the specifications to Russia for duplication in Soviet factories, without any royalties to the American companies.

Amkino denied that this has been the case or that any deception has existed in the operations of the Russian commissions which have been inspecting film equipment here for the last several months, and pointed to the fact that orders for $220,000 of studio and theatre apparatus were placed here in the first four months of this year.

Amkino said that some companies might be complaining because they failed to receive any business, but in that event the Russian engineers had found their products unsuitable.

Blanket Copyright Aid for Sinclair

Mr. Verlinsky declared that books may be copyrighted in Russian by arrangement with Russian publishers, and inventions may be patented upon application through a Russian agency, but that no applications are accepted directly from abroad. Upton Sinclair, father of the "Epic" plan, is the only American author given blanket copyright protection in the USSR, it is understood.

Meanwhile, the state department in Washington this week took up negotiations for renewal of the Soviet-American trade agreement expiring July 13. Under the pact, which will probably be extended for one year, Russia makes huge purchases here in exchange for most favored nation tariff concessions on her exports to the United States. This has been a factor in the increase in Russian orders for film equipment here in recent months.

Screen Playwrights Move to Incorporate

Screen Playwrights, Inc., organized in opposition to the Screen Writers' Guild, on Tuesday offered articles of incorporation to the secretary of state at Sacramento, Calif., and filing of papers was deferred pending a check of its status as a non-profit organization.

The 11 directors listed said that articles of incorporation "seem necessary to maintain a position of dignity, importance and prosperity." They also said that they spurned the antagonism toward the industry which has been shown in other Hollywood screen writers' circles.

Edward McBride Is Winner

Edward McBride, manager of Loew's State in Syracuse, N. Y., won the recent nationwide contest conducted by United Artists for the best exploitation of "Strike Me Pink."

Traveling Unit For Peace Films

Three motion picture theatres on wheels, which will show anti-war talking pictures, are to start a summer tour of the country this week, during which they will visit at least 40 counties in 30 states under the auspices of the Emergency Peace Campaign. The counties selected are those in which groups of college students enlisted by the Youth Section of the campaign as Emergency Peace Volunteers are being stationed this summer to work for peace. The picture units are designed to aid in this program.
